The subject of color-blindness has not yet begun to receive in this country the attention it has abroad, but it certainly ought to, if Dr. B. J. Jeffries is right in the conclusions expressed in an interesting lecture delivered before the Boston Society of Arts. He has made a comparative examination of so many men that he feels assured in saying that one in twenty or twenty-five is color-blind, that is, either cannot discern green from red, or red from green, or violet from either. This deficiency is, strange to say, more marked among railroad employes than among the rest of the community—a circumstance whose danger is obvious, as upon the recognition of the color of lights depends often the safety of many lives. The statistics are plentiful in Europe; those Dr. Jeffries has obtained in this country are confined to Boston, but there seems no doubt of the fact. The various tests to ascertain the existence of color-blindness are all discarded by Dr. Jeffries, except one originated by Prof. Holmgren, of Upsala, and first adopted in Sweden, then by Norway and Russia, and now by railroad managers all over Europe. It is as simple as it is severe—matching colored worsteds. Any man who has tried this little matter to oblige his wife or somebody else will appreciate the test. Certainly we must agree with Dr. Jeffries that railroad and steamboat men ought to pass an examination on this point.—Springfield Republican.

"Home, Sweet Home."

On one occasion Howard Paine, the genial-hearted, kind little man who wrote the immortal song of "Home, Sweet Home," was walking with me in the great city of London, says the London correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer, and, pointing to one of the aristocratic streets in May Fair, where wealth and luxury had the windows tightly closed and curtained, lest the least light and warmth should go out, or the smallest air of cold winter come in—where isolated, exclusive English comfort was guarded by a patrician dragon of gold—he, this tiny man with big heart, said: "There, my good friend, I became inspired with the idea of 'Home, Sweet Home' as I wandered about without food, without a semblance of shelter I could call my own. Many a night since I wrote those words, that issued out of my heart by absolute want of a home, have I passed and repassed in this locality and heard a siren voice coming from these gilded, fur-lined, comfortable walls, in the depth of a dim, cold London winter, warbling 'Home, Sweet Home,' and I knew no bed to call my own."

Tea was first introduced into Europe in 1660, by the Dutch East India Company, and then only as a curiosity, showing the nature of the herb so universally used by the Chinese in the preparation of their so-much-loved beverage.

Mark Twain's Grateful Poodle.

One day a benevolent physician (who had read the books), having found a stray poodle suffering from a broken leg, conveyed the poor creature to his home, and, after setting and bandaging the injured limb, gave the little outcast its liberty again and thought no more about the matter. But how great was his surprise, upon opening his door one morning, some days later, to find the grateful poodle patiently waiting there, and in its company another stray dog, one of whose legs, by some accident, had been broken. The kind physician at once relieved the distressed animal, nor did he forget to admire the inscrutable goodness and mercy of God, who had been willing to use so humble an instrument as the poor outcast poodle for the inculcating of, etc., etc., etc.

Sequel: The next morning the benevolent physician found the two dogs, beaming with gratitude, waiting at his door, and with them two other dogs—cripples. The cripples were speedily healed, and the four went their way, leaving the benevolent physician more overcome by pious wonder than ever. The day passed, the morning came. There at the door sat now the four reconstructed dogs, and with them four others requiring reconstruction. This day also passed, and another morning came, and now sixteen dogs, eight of them newly crippled, occupied the sidewalk, and the people were going around. By noon the broken legs were all set, but the pious wonder in the good physician's breast was beginning to get mixed with involuntary profanity. The sun rose once more, and exhibited thirty-two dogs, sixteen of them with broken legs, occupying the sidewalk and half of the street; the human spectators took up the rest of the room. The cries of the wounded, the songs of the healed brutes, and the comments of the on-looking citizens made great and inspiring cheer; but traffic was interrupted in that street. The good physician hired a couple of assistant surgeons and got through his benevolent work before dark, first taking the precaution to cancel his church membership, so that he might express himself with the latitude which the case required. But some things have their limits. When once more the morning dawned, and the good physician looked out upon a massed and far-reaching multitude of clamorous and beseeching dogs, he said: "I might as well acknowledge it, I have been fooled by the books; they only tell the pretty part of the story and then stop. Fetch me the shot-gun. This thing has gone along far enough."

He issued forth with his weapon and chanced to step upon the tail of the original poodle, who promptly bit him in the leg. Now the great and good work which the poodle had been engaged in had engendered in him such a mighty and augmenting enthusiasm as to turn his weak head at last and drive him mad. A month later, when the benevolent physician lay in the death throes of hydrophobia, he called his weeping friends about him and said:

"Beware of the books. They tell but half of the story. Whenever a poor wretch asks you for help and you feel a doubt as to what result may flow from your benevolence, give yourself the benefit of the doubt, and kill the applicant."

And so saying he turned his face to the wall and gave up the ghost.—Mark Twain, in May Atlantic.

A Kicker.

A teamster in Eureka, Nev., persisted in using a particularly vicious mule, and for the following reason: "I used to have a sweetheart back in Injiany that I was orful gone on, and this yere mule has so many pints in common that my heart just yearns over her. She were as likely a gal as ever run bare-footed in a corn-field, but she were too obstinate to enjoy good health. She'd look you right smiling in the eye, and you'd think thar were more sugar in her nor in a New Orleans merlasses hogshead, but if you laid yer hands on her unexpected like, she'd kick the breeching all to flinders in less than a minute. That's just the way with that mule; but you get into a place where the mud's deep, and the rest of the team kerflummixed, and call out to her for assistance, and blast my eyes if she won't pull herself clear out of her hide to help you out of your trouble. That were the very way with Nancy, and I keep the mule outer love for that gal."

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

THE busy season for farming is upon us. Recollect there is no resurrection for dead time.

POTATOES should be cut and spread out to dry in the shade for three or four days before planting.

A FARMER who drifts into the year's work without any plan is like a General who starts out on a campaign without arrangements, or a lawyer going into court without preparation for his cases.

THE speculative farmer is the man of large means and a small stock of practical sense. He invests his money in expensive buildings and unavailable stock—fails and reports farming as unprofitable.—Iowa State Register.

MR. J. M. SMITH, Green Bay, Wis., one of the most successful farmers and market gardeners in his State, says, in the Western Rural, that he cannot see any prospect for "high prices" for, at least, some years to come, and that the only possible way to get better returns is to raise larger crops on less land at lower cost.

TURNIPS.—Recent experiments have shown the result of growing turnips three successive years in the same ground, without manure, to be as follows: The first year the yield of roots was 9,388 pounds; the second year 4,956 pounds, and the third year 1,536 pounds. The result from the same piece of land and the same crop for three successive years, with the addition of twelve tons of farm-yard manure, was an increase in the yield the first year to 22,233 pounds; the second year's crop increased to 24,108 pounds, while in the third year a crop was obtained of 38,170 pounds. In these experiments the beneficial influence of the farm-yard manure is clearly evident two years after its first application.

CORNS ON HORSES' FEET.—When a horse's foot is not properly prepared for the shoe; when the shoe is too narrow or too wide; when it is improperly nailed on; when allowed to remain on the foot too long before removal and paring of the sole, then corns are almost certain of being produced. The avoidance of these causes of corns constitutes their prevention, and, to a great extent, also their cure. The careful lowering of the inside heel, sufficiently to remove its bearing upon the shoe; applying a properly-fitting shoe, and resetting or renewing the same at least once monthly, will result in a gradual diminution of the corn, as the hoof grows down.—National Live Stock Journal.

CLEAR TITLES.—Every land-owner should know that he has a clear title to his real estate. A very small thing may, in the course of time, serve as a foundation upon which to set a fraudulent claim. Deeds are frequently not recorded which form an important link in the chain; and, as time passes away, and circumstances are forgotten, no one questions the title, and all is well. Years afterward, when previous owners are dead, some question comes up, some widow or minor heirs put in a claim, and a lawsuit, with its expenses and delays, is the result. There are thousands of farmers who are not able to describe their farms by section, town and range; and, if they were called on to do so before the court, they would ignominiously fail.

CURE FOR CHOLERA.—I will give the public a recipe which I have been using for more than four years, and find perfect; the number of fowls that I have is 300: Take one gallon of meal, two table-spoonfuls of epsom salts, four table-spoonfuls of lime, and ten drops tincture of iron. Stir the mixture well in the meal, then mix it with water, not too wet, but so that it will crumble. It takes half a bushel for the number which I keep. Once a week is often enough to give it for a preventive, but it should be given oftener if the fowls are actually diseased, and plenty of clean water to drink. When the cholera first visited me, I had over 600 fowls. I lost them all but sixty-three, not knowing of this valuable medicine at the time.—Cor. Poultry World.

IRRIGATING GARDENS.—The Prairie Farmer describes an experiment by which a quarter-acre was easily irrigated, promoting the vigorous growth of vegetation, especially celery, and also cauliflower, cabbage, and other succulent plants. The plants being in a row, light furrows were run between them and water poured in to reach the roots. When these were well soaked, the earth was thrown back and covered the wet soil. The work was done with a narrow "bull-tongue," fixed to a low frame with a wheel, used for cultivating by hand between rows. This left the bottom of the furrow loose, and it readily absorbed the water. The object of this mode was to make a moderate quantity of water go a good way, by applying it directly to the roots.

CURE FOR HALTER BREAKERS.—Put the horse into a common head-stall halter; take a three-eighth or one-half inch new rope about seventeen or eighteen feet long; double it as for driving lines; put the center of the rope under the tail as you would a crupper and give it one or two twists; pass the end under the girth, sending an end each side of the horse's neck, and then through the nose piece of the head-stall on each side of the horse's mouth (if a bridle is on, put the ropes through the bridle bit rings); and tie to a strong, well-set post, leaving three feet play of the rope. Give him an invitation to go back, using his ordinary scare. The rope attacks his tail, and he at once comes forward. For his coming forward pet him. If these instructions are followed a few times—the horse being securely tied to the post—a permanent cure will follow.—Exchange.

About the House.

REMEDY FOR CHILBLAINS.—If they are very bad, apply at night a plaster of brown sugar, mixed with scraping of common soap; wash the feet daily with brown bar soap and water.

POTATO SOUP.—Pare six potatoes, cut in small squares, boil soft; beat four eggs, with one quart of milk; add to the potatoes a slice of butter, salt to taste, and boil ten minutes and serve.

TO CURE HOARSENESS.—A small quantity of pulverized borax, about the size of a pea, dissolved in the mouth and let slowly run down the throat, will stop the tickling and cure hoarseness almost instantly.

BEAN SOUP.—Boil one pint of white beans till soft, add one quart of rich milk, butter size of egg, season with salt and pepper, boil; slice a few slices of bread in tureen and pour soup on boiling.

DRIED-APPLE DUMPLINGS.—Boil two handfuls of dried apples in two quarts of water; mix eight spoonfuls of flour, two eggs, and as much milk as will make a stiff dough; drop the dough by spoonfuls into the apples; add sugar, butter and salt to taste; boil till light and serve hot.

POTATO SALAD.—Pare and slice six potatoes; boil until tender; slice six onions; fry in butter till done; beat two eggs; add one cup of vinegar; drain the potatoes, and add all together; season with salt, and boil a few minutes and serve.

NOODLES.—Beat four eggs; add as much flour as will make a stiff dough; roll in very thin cakes; dry and roll together, and cut very fine, and for soup boil in beefsteak, or boil in salt water and brown-bread crumbs in butter; drain the noodles and put the crumbs on top.

SPONGE CAKE.—Ten eggs, their weight in sugar, half the weight in flour, juice of one lemon, one teaspoonful vanilla; beat yelks well; stir them with sugar to a cream; beat whites to a stiff froth; add flour last; bake in quick oven.

JOHNNY CAKE.—Three cupfuls of sour milk, two eggs beaten light, half cupful of melted butter or fryings, a table-spoonful of sugar, one teaspoonful of soda dissolved in the milk, teaspoonful of salt; mix all together with sufficient corn-meal to make a thin batter. Bake on a griddle.

CHOCOLATE CARAMELS.—Scrape one-half cake of Baker's chocolate, and add to it one cup sugar, one cup molasses, one-half cup of milk, and a small piece of butter. Let it cook slowly till it hardens by dropping into cold water, and pour on buttered plates.

Didn't Write It.

"Mabel Clare" writes us the following flattering inquiry: "Are you the author of that tender little ballad, 'Darling, Kiss My Eyelids Down?'" We! We write such stuff as that? "Kiss our eyelids down?" Mabel, thou art beside thyself; much reading hath made thee mad. "Darling, kiss our eyelids down?" Now, isn't that a nice thing to accuse us of saying? Are we that devoid of intelligence! Mabel, don't you trouble our eyelids when you have a fancy to perform any operation of that delicate and tender nature. We have a large, comfortable, roomy, flexible gash just below our nose that has bought county rights for all business of that nature that comes within the limits of our face, and any eyelid found interfering or infringing will be prosecuted to the extreme limit of the law. No, we didn't write it.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

Hard Times in Canada.

Immigration has practically ceased, though $300,000 a year is spent on the work; but the emigration of our people to the United States has not been brisker since the close of the war. Business of all kinds is practically at a stand-still, and the commercial outlook is yet dark and depressing. The country has no confidence in the Finance Minister, and native enterprise is dead. No class of the community is prosperous; there is none but deplores its accumulating misfortunes and bewails national decay and decline. For the first time in our history, honest men willing to work are unable to find work to do; and hunger and want have become factors in society.—Toronto (Can.) Mail.

PLANTED when it may be truly said of the weather, "how hot it grows"—about the 1st of June generally—radishes will reach perfection in three weeks, under favorable circumstances, and be much more rich and tender than those started in the open ground, in April, and requiring twice as long for growth, on account of the coldness of the season.

CAN WE RESUME?

Not Gold and Silver Enough in the United States for That Purpose.

We give below an extract from that portion of Senator Jones' great silver speech, delivered in the Senate about two years ago, in which the speaker dealt with the problem of resumption. At the present moment, when the question of resumption is before the country in such a form as to call for action, the facts and considerations adduced by the Senator are peculiarly deserving of careful consideration. It will be noticed that when the Senator spoke we had an exclusive gold standard, but this fact does not affect, in the slightest degree, what he says about the amount of coin necessary as a resumption fund. He holds that at least $510,000,000 would be required, in gold and silver, as a redemption fund. It will be noticed that Senator Jones points to England's experience as bearing out his deductions; and certainly all those economists who say that it is impossible to resume on a small stock of the precious metals have the former experience of England and the recent experience of France to appeal to.

The world's stock of coin is $5,700,000,000, of which nearly one-half is of silver. Of this sum, Europe, America, and the rest of the Occidental world employ about $3,600,000,000. Previous to the late partial demonetizations of silver in the Latin Union and in Germany and the United States, these $3,600,000,000 consisted of, let us say, $2,000,000,000 of gold and $1,600,000,000 of silver. They now consist of, say, about $2,400,000,000 gold and $1,200,000,000 silver. By continuing to exclude silver from equal participation with gold in the currency of the United States, and attempting to resume specie payments, we occasion a demand for, say, $350,000,000 of gold wherewith to pay off the greenbacks and furnish bank reserves, and $50,000,000 of silver in lieu of the fractional notes. If we could obtain these $400,000,000 of metal without drawing it from other countries in Europe or America, they would add so much to the stock of coin in the Occidental world, which would then be $2,750,000,000 of gold and $1,250,000,000 of silver. This is the answer to the question so far as the Occidental world is concerned. The quantity of the precious metals needed for money and the basis of credit in the Occidental world—that is to say, the quantity needed to maintain prices at their present level—is at least $4,000,000,000. Of this sum the United States, if it succeeds in resuming specie payments, will hold about $400,000,000.

Now, let me ask, in the first place, where these $400,000,000 are expected to come from? Gentlemen may dispute the premise and contend that no such sum of $400,000,000 is necessary. They may point to the fact that just previous to the time of the suspension in 1862 the entire stock of coin in this country was estimated at not over $300,000,000 (Financial Report, 1861, pp. 25 and 62) of which probably not over three-fourths or $225,000,000 were in gold. Granted that this was the fact, and I have no doubt it was, it must not be forgotten that since 1862 the population of this country has increased 50 per cent., and its exchanges fully 100 per cent. What is the proof of this? Simply that in 1861 our whole circulating media consisted of $300,000,000 in coin and $200,000,000 of bank notes, which circulated within limited areas at or nearly par; whereas now it consists of not more than $140,000,000 of coin and some $750,000,000 of Government and bank paper, the latter circulating (throughout nearly the whole country) at about 87½ cents to the dollar; say total circulation at par equal to $800,000,000. This is 70 per cent. more than the par circulation of 1861—an incontestable proof that exchanges have increased in volume at least 70 per cent. Taking into consideration the superior activity of the legal-tender and national-bank notes over the old State-bank notes, and the improvement and development of railways, telegraphs, clearing-houses and other mechanisms of exchange, since 1861, it cannot be doubted that the bulk of to-day's exchanges in this country is at least double that of a corresponding day in 1862. Suppose, however, we put it at only 70 per cent. higher; then, in order to resume specie payment upon at least as firm a footing as specie payments stood in 1861—and the universal suspension of the banks toward the end of that year proves that it was not so firm a footing as could have been wished—we shall require at least 70 per cent. more specie than we employed in 1861. Add 70 per cent. to $300,000,000, and you have $510,000,000. Allow $140,000,000 for specie already in the country, in the banks, in private hands, and in the vaults of the treasury, and you will need $370,000,000 in order to resume. Of this $370,000,000 the Government will need, perhaps, about $350,000,000, and the banks the remainder. But the apportionment is of no consequence in this connection. The substantial fact is that in order to resume specie payments we shall need $370,000,000—say, for round figures, $400,000,000—of specie, of which, under the operation of the act of 1873, about $350,000,000 must be in gold.

I now ask where are these $350,000,000 expected to come from? Again, do I fancy I hear interpellation. I shall perhaps be told that a proposition is even now before Congress, a proposition from careful and able sources, and boasting the indorsement of high financial authority, a proposition which assumes that $100,000,000 in gold will be sufficient wherewith to enable the country to return to specie payments.

I refer to a speech which has been made in the Senate. But I warn gentlemen to beware of making a mistake in respect of this matter, for a mistake will set us back many years. The British Government tried to resume in 1817, after a suspension of twenty years, but it failed, and resumption was deferred for seven other years, until 1821. If we try to resume in 1879 with $100,000,000 and fail, we may be set back a quarter of a century. Moreover, if we fail, somebody—most probably some clique of stock-gamblers—will make 15 or 20 per cent. out of the operation. How? Easy enough! Knowing that $100,000,000 was the limit of the Government's ability to pay, they could easily make arrangements with the banks and depositors throughout the country to withdraw $100,000,000 in greenbacks on the eve of the day of resumption, and present them for payment at the treasury. After having drawn the last dollar of specie out of the latter, they could, by presenting an additional note, compel it to suspend again. Then gold would go up once more, perhaps to the full extent of the figure from which it would have fallen; and the clique could sell their specie in the market and realize their profit.

This is not only a possible occurrence, it is a probable one—a highly probable one—almost a certainty. There is nothing in the world to prevent it except two things: First, the inability of a clique to raise $100,000,000; second, the possibility that the treasury, in offering to redeem its issues, may arbitrarily and unexpectedly prefer notes of particular numbers or dates of issue. But these objections are frivolous. Experience has demonstrated that there is no difficulty whatever on the part of stock-jobbing cliques to raise $100,000,000, while, with regard to making preferred credits of certain notes, the treasury has no authority to do so, and, if it had, the exercise of such authority would be almost certain to be defeated through treachery. Secrets so weighty as this one would be are impossible to keep. Even if it did not leak out, the clique would be certain to monopolize the treasury doors to the exclusion of all comers. In short, wealth, power, organization, experience and special training would be ranged on the one side, against a scattered and indifferent population on the other; and who can doubt which would win?

Finally, even if carried out successfully, the exercise of such authority would be unlawful and unjust.

We cannot resume with $100,000,000 nor with $200,000,000. Why, gentlemen, we have had $140,000,000 in specie in the treasury on several occasions during the past ten years. If it is practicable to resume now with $100,000,000, why was it not practicable on those occasions with $140,000,000? It was certainly not for lack of desire on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury, but simply because both the Secretary and Congress plainly saw that the thing could not be done.

It is better to be on the safe side of an operation of this magnitude and importance. It is better to have a dollar more than is necessary for the purpose of resuming than a dollar less than is necessary. We cannot expect to resume upon false pretenses. We cannot, and if we can we ought not, hoodwink the people or run the risk of failing, and, therefore, of unsettling values for an indefinite period in the future. In order to resume we must pay dollar for "dollar," and dollar for dollar, as the law now stands, means at least $350,000,000 in gold.

And now, for the third time, I ask, Where are these $350,000,000 to come from? Gentlemen may differ with me as to the sum needed for resumption. Some may believe $200,000,000 are enough, others may even consider $100,000,000. I have briefly discussed these opinions and do not believe that less than $350,000,000 will suffice. With only $128,500,000 of Bank of England and $145,000,000 of provincial bank notes afloat in 1815, total $273,500,000 in paper, England required over $270,000,000 in coin before she was enabled to resume. After you shall have resumed, less coin may be required in the country; but in order to resume you will require a dollar in coin for every dollar of Government paper afloat, and, in my opinion, and, as shown by the experience of England, you will also have to give the national banks time to acquire an equal fund of specie before they can resume; otherwise you may bankrupt every one of them.

Financial System—Who Reaps Our Benefit.

A correspondent of the Rural World, in a recent number of that paper, draws a vivid picture of the financial system of our Government, proving conclusively from his standpoint that national banks have been detrimental to the interests of the masses. Can this be successfully controverted?

"I am a bondholder. In 1864 I had $20,000 in gold. I gave it for $50,000 in greenbacks and gave them for fifty thousand 5-20 bonds, deposited them with the Treasurer at Washington, and he gave me $45,000 in blackbacks. I came home and started a national bank, I loaned the blackbacks to the farmers, and of course took a mortgage on their farms. Thus in about four weeks after I sold my gold I had $95,000 on interest. As the law only allowed me 10 per cent. on loans, I had a silent partner who started an office and advertised Eastern money to loan at 10 per cent. on farms for security, and no money let for less than five years, and in sums of $500 and upwards. But my partner always charged 5 per cent. commission for doing business—and the deposits in my bank generally amounted to $30,000 on an average, and I generally kept it loaned out—and during all this time my $50,000 in Washington were drawing 6 per cent. in gold. I always converted the gold into greenbacks and loaned them, and thus, by honesty, economy and industry, on Jan. 1, 1870, I had mortgage notes of $182,000.

"Since then I have been swindled by a great many dishonest farmers, who mortgaged me land for more than it was worth, and have been heavily assessed by the Bankers' Union for money for political purposes, such as passing laws to strengthen the national credit; so I have been eight years and have only doubled my capital, which is now a little over $360,000. Now I can't see wherein I have dealt unjustly. Then why all this cry against the bondholders, and why should the people want to pay us off in worthless greenbacks and cheap silver? I would advise the greenback men to just keep cool, keep your shirts on till we show you our hand. It is true, I expected when I bought bonds that greenbacks would redeem them. But Congress has settled that question by passing a resolution that we should be paid in coin. And when silver began to be so plenty Congress saw, in its wisdom, that to pay us who stepped forward in the time of peril, and laid our money on the altar of our country, would be financial ruin to us, a twin brother to repudiation. So it demonetized silver.

"Now, you greenback yelpers and howlers, just keep cool, keep cool, and trust to the Government, and don't go back on the public faith. The first thing you know you will be called disloyal. Now, would you not be ashamed, right in the face of our noble laws, to offer the German and English, that live away over in Europe, our greenback rags and cheap silver for United States bonds? It is true the present bond system is oppressing the poor of this country, but they can afford to grin and bear it for the sake of honesty and loyalty. If you go back on public faith, and then get into another war, we will not let the Government have our money. And, further, if you go off to these outside unimportant issues, when we send out our speakers in the next campaign, and crack our party whips over your backs, you will leap back into the traces, and feel ashamed of the way you are now doing. Beware! beware! I could say to you much more, but the above is plain and simple, and should be sufficient for the present."

An "Honest-Money" Fallacy.

The Secretary of "The Honest-Money League of the Northwest," among the platitudes of the pamphlet he has had published for the enlightenment of the people in currency matters, has the following: "A financial system, if good, is good for all alike; if bad, it is bad for all alike. As well talk of one kind of atmosphere being healthy for the rich, and unhealthy for the poor, as of one kind of money being for the benefit of the rich and injurious to the poor." The pamphlet is full of such fallacies. A financial system may be good for one class and bad for another, as may a tariff system be very beneficial to one class and injurious to all other classes, and as a Government may bring to the laps of luxury the fruits of toil, and allow to the producers of wealth a meager subsistence only. History is full of such instances, and equally as full of arguments from the mouths of the favored classes that what is good for them is good for all, and what is bad for them is bad for all. It is the soothing song always sung by the money power when it has got legislation fixed to suit itself. The policy which McCulloch persuaded Congress to adopt, of contraction of the currency in order to come to specie payments, was good for the moneyed classes, but very bad for the people generally. The misery, the suffering, the bankruptcies, the suicides that followed in the train of that policy, and that were caused by it, and the wealth it added to the coffers of certain classes, show, with the clearness of sunlight, the fallacy of the statement made by the Secretary of the league.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Aim of Currency Reform.

In calling attention to the pamphlet issued by the Secretary of what calls itself by the pretentious title of "The Honest-Money League of the Northwest," the Boston Advertiser says:

"In concluding, the writer says the question is not what, under all circumstances, would be the best currency system. We have in fact three kinds of currency, coin, greenbacks and bank notes. What shall we do with them? is the practical issue. The Honest Money League says: 'Let them alone. Stop tinkering at the currency laws, and let them be administered as they now stand.'"

The money power, when it has all that it wants, is very conservative. When it has procured currency laws to be enacted to suit its interests, it becomes very sensitive to suggestions looking to a change. The harmony of things as they are must not be disturbed, nor the downy bed it reposes on be rumpled by discontented hands. It wishes to be let alone. Hence its prevailing tone becomes: "Stop tinkering at the currency laws, and let them be administered as they now stand." To fix the laws in the interests of the money power is termed "salutary legislation." To shape the laws in the interests of the people is stigmatized as "tinkering with the currency laws." The industrial interests of the country have been pretty well ground to powder by administering the laws as the money power procured them to be made. And to "stop tinkering at the currency laws, and let them be administered as they now stand," would simply be making the rich richer, and the poor poorer. A change is absolutely demanded by the public interests. Neither the threats nor insolence of the money power will stop the efforts that are making to bring about such change, and that change will consist in securing a currency system which, under all circumstances, will be the best.—Exchange.

THE STOLEN PRESIDENCY.

Dennis' Statement.

L. G. Dennis furnishes the following interesting narrative of how the infamous work was done in the famous Archer Precinct:

I have resided in Alachua county, Fla., since January, 1866, and was elected to the State Assembly in 1876, at the time of the late Presidential election. I was at that time a member of the State Central Committee of the Republican party of Florida, and also Chairman of the Republican Committee of Alachua county. I was also President of the Board of County Commissioners of Alachua county from 1873 to 1877, and was familiar with the manner of voting, the location of polls, and all other election machinery. As President of said board, and with the consent of said board, I located all the polling places, appointed all the inspectors who conducted the election, received and counted the ballots, and made and certified to the returns. I appointed as inspectors of Archer Precinct, Box No. 2, Green R. Moore, Floyd Duke, and Richard H. Black. Thomas D. Vance went, at my request, to Archer Precinct, on the day previous to election, and was appointed by the inspectors as clerk of election at Box No. 2, and served as such. I was at Gainesville on the day of the election, and on that night and the day following my residence was the headquarters of the Republican party, and during the night preceding the election all information was brought to me there.

Some time after midnight of that night Inspector Black came to my house and reported to me that the result of the election at Box No. 2 for Presidential electors was as follows: For the Hayes electors, 180; for the Tilden electors, 136. A little later Vance, clerk at said Box No. 2, came and made the same report. Subsequently both Black and Vance came to me and said they had the returns from Archer Precinct, Box No. 2, signed in blank by the inspectors, and that they would make out the returns so as to meet the expectations of their own party. They retired to a private room, where they remained two or three hours, and then informed me that they had added about 200 names to the poll-list as having voted, and had increased the Republican vote to that extent, and I afterward learned that they had added 219 names to the poll-list. I entered the room while they were employed there, and saw them copying names from the county registration list upon which those who had actually voted at the Archer Precinct, Box No. 2, were checked off, and new names were selected from names of Republican voters who had not already voted at that precinct. After completing the returns in this manner, they filed them, with the ballot-box, with the County Clerk. The County Commissioners met a few days after the election, the board consisting of J. E. Webster, Clerk of Court; W. H. Belton, Justice of the Peace, and Louis A. Barnes, Sheriff, all of whom were Republicans. During the canvass Inspector Moore appeared before the board and submitted an affidavit to the effect that the returns from Archer Precinct No. 2 were false, and that the true returns should be for the Hayes electors, 180 votes, and Tilden electors 136 votes, but the board decided they could not hear the evidence as to the truth or falsity of the returns, and upon the face of the returns the vote of the county was as follows: For the Hayes electors, 1,984; for the Tilden electors, 1,267. The result included 219 votes for the Hayes electors, which were added to the vote cast at Archer Precinct, Box No. 2, by Black and Vance. These returns were sent to the Governor and Secretary of State.

After these returns were filed with the Secretary of State an effort was made to invalidate them so far as Archer Precinct, Box No. 2 was concerned. Affidavits signed by Floyd Duke and Greene R. Moore, and an official statement from Mr. Webster, the Clerk, were filed with the State Canvassing Board, for the purpose of showing that the returns from Archer Precinct, Box No. 2, was false and fraudulent. It also appeared that Mr. Belton, Justice of the Peace, had not signed the return filed with the Secretary of State and Governor. One of the duplicate returns was sent back to Alachua county, and Belton's signature was obtained. Moore was also induced to make a counter affidavit denying the truth of his former affidavit. A counter affidavit was also obtained from Floyd Duke denying his former affidavit. The Grand Jury of Alachua county investigated the Archer-Precinct matter, but failed to find any fraud, and passed a resolution to that effect, whereupon Mr. Webster was influenced to withdraw his statement and make another to the effect that he was satisfied that the return was all right. Then affidavits and statements were laid before the State Canvassing Board, and the returns were counted. This result gave the Hayes Electors 219 votes more than were polled for them. I have never heretofore made any written statement or given any evidence regarding this election in Alachua county.

(Signed) L. G. DENNIS.

The above was sworn to in Florida before a Justice of the Peace, and is certified by the Secretary of State.

Selkirk's Story.

The New York World prints the following confession of William H. Selkirk, a book-canvasser for Scribner, Armstrong & Co. Selkirk has letters of recommendation from Thurlow Weed, H. K. Thurber, and other prominent New Yorkers, and is a man who has always enjoyed a first-class reputation for honesty and veracity:

About the time of the Returning-Board troubles in the South, I was in Washington, at the Ebbit House. I was seated, one evening, at a table when a messenger arrived from the Department of Justice, and said that Secretary Taft wanted to see me. I said it must be a mistake, and sent the messenger back. A few minutes later another messenger arrived in Mr. Taft's carriage, and said the Secretary wanted to see me at once. I got right up and went to see him. He received me cordially, and said I had been recommended to him as a reliable man to undertake a diplomatic job of great importance. He wished me to go at once to Florida, as a special agent of the department, to co-operate with the Marshal in securing a fair and honest count of the vote. He then handed me my commission, and for an hour gave me verbal instructions, which were to fix things, no matter what it might cost, and keep him advised of the progress I made. He took from a drawer a package of money, which he gave me for expenses. I went on to Florida, and traveled all over the State in my character as an Englishman looking for an orange grove. I frequently saw William E. Chandler and the other visiting Republican statesmen, but the only one who knew my business was Alfred Morton, of Virginia. Morton used to be a Democrat in Virginia, but he was a creature of Conkling. He was sent to Florida by Taft in the same way I was. Conkling had him keep him advised of all that was done. He did not do much himself, but he was very useful in Tallahassee, and when he came back he was well taken care of. They have all been taken care of but me, and they thought I was safe not to squeal because I was so well connected and had so much to lose. It was I," Selkirk continues, "who got eighty-six affidavits for $10 apiece, that carried Alachua county, and it was I who seated Horatio Bisbee in Congress in the same way. I carried those papers that made an administration in my breeches pocket. I was in the room with McLin when he was changing the votes, and I saw him do it. Dockray, who has since been appointed Consul to Leeds, was his body-guard, saw him to bed at night, and tracked him around all day. He did all the dirty work. He used to edit a paper down there, and was the tool of the party. William E. Chandler and his wife did the fine business. You should have seen the jewels that McLin and his wife got. Why, money and diamonds were as plentiful as oranges. I see it stated somewhere that McLin refused to change the votes, but I saw him do it. The only thing he did refuse was to make alterations, after he had changed them, to cover the tracks of others, who were scared of being found out. While all this was going on the Democrats were keeping a sharp lookout in the wrong direction. I saw Mr. Marble down there, but he did not know who I was. He supposed I was an English gentleman looking for an orange grove. While I was there I received letters from Senator Teller, of Colorado, who sent me $50, and from Mr. Dunnell, the Congressman from Minnesota, who sent me money. It was hard work sometimes changing the votes—harder than it was in Louisiana; but we were all given to understand that when Hayes got in we would be taken care of. I thought I was all right, because of Taft. He expected to be in Hayes' Cabinet. After I had got back to Washington and things were all fixed, I was walking with Taft. It was the night before the day on which the Cabinet was announced. I left Taft at the Ebbit House, and he assured me that I should be well taken care of. Taft did not get into the Cabinet, and the next morning by 8 o'clock he and his wife and daughters had packed their trunks and were on their way West, and he has never set foot in Washington since."

Mr. Selkirk went on to say that Kasson and Noyes were very active in the work; and he was especially bitter because they and Stoughton had been rewarded and he had not. He said he had been promised a position in Brazil, a Consulate in Europe, and a position in Oregon, but he had got nothing. He claimed to have in his possession letters from every member in the Cabinet except Mr. Devens, certifying to his claims upon the party, and said that the only reason Mr. Devens had not written one was that it might look like a reflection on the Florida frauds, and said of McLin's confession, "Its only fault is that it is not true enough, it don't tell the half." Conkling was kept informed by Morton of all the frauds in Florida, and could, if he wanted to, prove to-morrow that Hayes was not elected. So could I. Unless they have been removed since the night of Dec. 30, I could go to the Department of Justice, in Washington, and put my hands right on the proofs of the whole Florida business.

The Glaciers of Alaska.

From Bute inlet to Unimak pass nearly every deep gulch has its glacier, some of which are vastly greater and grander than any glacier of the Alps. So that the American students need no longer go abroad to study glacial action. In one of the gulches of Mount Fairweather is a glacier that extends fifty miles to the sea—where it breaks off, a perpendicular wall 300 feet high and eight miles broad. Thirty-five miles above Wrangel, on the Strickeen river, between two mountains 3,000 feet high, is an immense glacier forty miles long, and at the base four to five miles across, and variously estimated from 500 to 1,000 feet high or deep. Opposite this glacier is a personification of a mighty Ice God who has issued from out his mountain home and invested with power before which all nature bows in submission. They describe him as crashing his way through the canyon till its glistening pinnacles looked upon the domains of the River God, and that after a conflict the Ice God conquered, and spanned the river breadth so completely that the River God was forced to crawl underneath. The Indians then sent their medicine man to learn how this could be avoided. The answer came that if a noble chief and fair maiden would offer themselves as a sacrifice by taking passage under the long, dark, winding arch, his anger would be appeased, and the river be allowed to go on its way undisturbed. When the two were found and adorned, their arms bound, and seated in the canoe, the fatal journey was made, and the ice has never again attempted to cross the river. At one of these glaciers ships have anchored and taken on a cargo of ice.—Rev. Sheldon Jackson, in Denver Tribune.

Distressing.

Mr. John Pore, of Lumpkin county, Ga., had two little children, aged respectively 3 and 6. They were engaged in their customary play a few days ago, while the mother was at the well. The oldest child, for what reason it will never be known, picked up a sharp hatchet and struck the baby in the side, leaving the ax sticking in the wound. The child seeing what he had done ran and told his mother, who was drawing up a bucket of water at the time. This so frightened her that she let go the windlass, and the revolving crank struck the boy on the head and literally knocked his brains out, killing him instantly. When the horror-stricken mother got to her baby it was also dead.

Startling Executions.

In the last decade of the seventeenth century, the beautiful and picturesque Island of Rugen was the hiding place and rendezvous of a band of pirates, consisting of about twenty members, all of them daredevils, monsters of cruelty, and obeying none but their chieftain, one Christiern Tegner, a herculean fellow, nearly seven feet high, and with a countenance rendered doubly repulsive by one of its eyes being entirely close.

Tegner and his fellow-pirates rendered navigation in the western part of the Baltic very insecure, and they were the greater of a terror to the owners of peaceful merchant vessels, as they would invariably put to death the crews they captured, frequently among the most atrocious tortures.

On one occasion—it was the aniversary of the day on which the pirate chief had lost his right eye—the outlaws brutally

OUTRAGED AND BUTCHERED

Six young Swedish girls whom they had carried off after making a decent upon the shores of the Province Schoonen. They took their helpless young victims into the darkest recesses of the Stubnitz forest, near the somber Hertha lake where the old heathen priests immoralated prisoners of war in ages gone by to the barbarous gods of their veneration.

Let us draw a veil over the atrocious scenes which preceded the slaughter of the unfortunate girls. The pirates were all under the influence of liquor, and they fairly reveled in the most demoniacle atrocities. When their brutal lust was sated, the wretches began to quarrel as to the manner in which the girls were to be killed. Finally the captain himself decided that they should use them as targets for their rifles. This order was received by the pirates with deafening cheers. One of the young girls was dragged from the midst of her screaming companions, stripped of all her clothes and tied to an oak tree. And then the villains fired bullet after bullet at her.

It is impossible to depict the agonizing torture which the poor creature underwent. The pirates purposly did not aim at the vital parts of her body, but sent the leaden missiles into her legs and arms, she meanwhile uttering

TERRIBLE SHRIEKS,

While her companions threw themselves in unspeakable anguish upon the moss-grown ground, or sank into deep swoons.

At last the captain himself shot his bullet into the girl's right eye; one more piercing cry, a shudder or two, and the tortured victim was dead. In the same manner the other five girls were slain. When they were all dead the pirates regretted that they had no more victims to torment and kill, and they vented their horrible fiendishness in brutally mutilating the corpses of their fair victims. This monstrous orgie took place July 12, 1694.

Two days afterward the cutter Han Spock was caught in a storm and shipwrecked on the coast of Pomerania, near Stettin. Captain Christiern Tagner and fourteen of his men reached the shore in an exhausted condition.

The Village Mayor of Grist reconized the villain and had him and his men heavily ironed. In that helpless condition

THE SHIPWRECKED PIRATES

Were transported to Stralsund. The Swedish Governer there at once appointed a Commission consisting of army any naval officers for the trial of the captured malefactors. The latter were placed before their six judges on a stone bench in the large hall of the Gubernatorial residence. Four executioners stood behind the four chained pirates, for what purpose we shall presently see. A Major was President of the Commission. He questioned the prisoners one by one. Christiern Tagner made defiant replies.

"Beware you Swedish scamp,' he growled out to the Major, "who knows but my men will capture you soon enough, and roast you by a slow fire.'

"Silence, prisoner!' thundered the Major. "Will you confess that you have been guilty of

MURDER AND PIRACY!'

A horrible oath was the only answer of the pirate chief.

The Major beckoned to the four executioners. They had thumb-screws in their hands. Two of them pulled off Tegner's shoes and stockings. Then the thumb-screws were put upon his two thumbs, and upon his two big toes.

Christiern Tagner looked sullenly on. One of the executioners commanded.

'One, two, three!'

At the last word, he and his three aids suddenly and violently closed the instrument of tortrue.

The pain must have been intense, for the strong, gigantic pirate chief writhed convulsively, and ejaculated piercing scream for mercy.

"Oh! oh!' he screamed out. "This pain I can't bear! I will tell every thing.

"Will you plead guilty then?' sternly asked the presiding Mayor.

"Yes, yes,' the pirate chief gasped, "but take away those iron things.'

The executioners removed the thumbscrews, whereupon Tegner confessed a number of his misdeeds.

His fellow prisoners, terrified by the tortue which their captain had been made to undergo, proved exceedingly docile. They answerered all questions put to them readily, and without any prompting on the part of the executioners.

The Military and Naval Commission thereupon deliberated a short time, and pronounced, through the mouth of the presiding Major, the following

DREAD SENTENCE:

"Christiern Tegner, and yea other prisoners: Reserving the sanction of His Majesty, our gracious king, we sentence you all to death, you having confessed your guilt of numerous and horrible crimes. You shall be put to death after being branded on the forehead with a red-hot iron, receiving fifty lashes on the bare back, and having your right hands cut off. Then the headsman shall break you on the wheel, and your carcasses shall be left to rot, unburied, and a prey to crows and ravens. You, Christiern Tegner, deserving still harder punishment than your associates in crime, shall have your eyes put out, and your ears and nose cut off, before the executioner sends you to your account. And may God forgive you your sins. Long live His Majesty, our gracious King!'

It is related by the historians who chronicled this remarkable trial, that the

HARDENED CRIMINALS

Were completely unmaned upon hearing the judgment pronounced upon them. Tegner wept bitterly, and sobbed out, again and again:

"Is there no hope for me?'

The sentence was sent to Stockholm for the King's approval.

It was returned on the morning of the 27th of August, with the royal signature, the King having added, in his own hand:

"These malefactors can not be too severely punished.'

The next day was Sunday, and the execution was postponed till Monday morning. At six o'clock on that day the pirates, who until then had been left in utter ignorance of the horrible fate that awaited them, were aroused from their slumbers. The whole clergy of Stralsund called upon them, but, in their terror, the doomed men turned a deaf ear to their pious exhortions.

Half an hour afterward the executioner and his three aids made their appearance. They unshackled the trembling, weeping wretches, and "dressed" or rather undressed them for the scaffold. They left nothing on their bodies except a narrow blanket around their loins. Then the poor sinners were treated to their last repast.

Steaming beer soup, then a favorite dish, was placed before them, but they hardly tasted a mouthful or two of the soup.

Thereupon they were marched to the place of execution. A band of music, playing proceded them. Preachers exhorted them to repent of their sins. Soldiers surrounded them on all sides. An immense concourse of people followed the dismal procession to the Schindanger where the scaffold had been erected. The culprits were all utterly dejected. Christiern Tegner seemed to have grown twenty years older during the brief term of his confinement. His tall form was bent, his face with its shaggy, unkept, grizzly beard, looked ten times more repulsive than usual. He was tottering along as if his legs were unable to support him.

A DOLEFUL DIRGE,

The scaffold was a low wooden structure, surrounded with a plain pine plank railing. On the platform stood four wooden benches, and four broad stakes about eight feet high. Close to the scaffold, on tall woden posts, were to be seen several wheels. Upon them the quivering bodies of the criminals were to be placed after their

LIMBS HAD BEEN CRUSHED.

There stood also a low wood stool on the platform. The sentence was once more read to the doomed pirates by the officer commanding the military escort. Then he said to the executioners:

"New, Messieurs des Hautes Quivres, do your duty.'

Two of the executioners then hurried Christiern Tegner up to the steps of the scaffold. They placed him on the stool. One of the executioners held his arms behind his back. The pirate chief watched the other executioner with intense anguish.

When the latter drew from his belt a sharp pointed knife, Tegner divining his intention, struggled to free himself from the embrace of the man that was holding him. Then the second executioner, seizing Tegner's head by the hair, and jerking it up, deliberately put the point of the knife into Tegner's one eye, turning the pitiless blade around and around in it, until the socket was filled with blood. Need we say that the wretched man howled and roared with pain as he was thus

ATROCIOUSLY TORTURED.

But this was only the beginning. Without being in any way disconcerted by the agony of his victim the executioner next cut off Tegner's two ears, the pirate chief crying and moaning all the while. The executioner's bare arms were by this time covered with blood. He wiped off the sharp blade, and then, seizing the culprit's nose, deliberately cut into it. As the steel touched the bone Tegner fairly yelled with pain, and the man who held his arms was bare able to keep him on the stool.

At last the nose, too, was off. By this time the mutilated face of the gigantic pirate presented an indescribably repulsive appearance.

Tegner was evidently getting faint from loss of blood. So the executioner quickly choped off his right hand, while his assistant branded him on the forehead, the pirate chief responding to each fresh torture by loud howls and roars of pain. Then the tortured culprit was tied with his face to one of the stakes and his flagellation began. When he had received about twenty lashes his head suddenly sank forward. He was dead! In a minute his still warm corpse was placed upon one of the wheels. The remainder of the execution passed off with greater dispatch.

All the executioners worked hard at their terrible task. Four of the pirates had their foreheads branded, their right hand chopped off, and their backs lacerated with the lash. Then the rising men were fastened to the low wooden benches, and their limbs were crushed with large stone hammers. It was a terrible scene. The vast multitude looked on in silence. Not a sound was heard except the cries of the victims, the breaking of the bones, and the muttered curses of the flushed and perspiring executioners.

At length the bloody work was all done. The executioners seemed thoroughly exhausted as they placed the last two of the pirates on top of the wheels.

Already the crowd was pressing forward to take a close look at the mutilated remains of the culprits, when one of them lying underneath the bodies of two of his fellow sufferers was seen to move.

This pirate was not dead yet. He was dragged from under the two corpses. The principle executioner drew his sharp knife again from his belt and stuck it forcibly into the left temple of the victim. That killed the poor devil.

The whole execution lasted a little over two hours. After all was over in accordance with the barbarous customs of the time, a repast was given to the four executioners at the Town Hall. They were treated to roast pork and a gallon of spiced wine was served to them. The two town pipers played to them, and they had a merry time.

The remains of the robbers were left six months on the wheels. Then their skeletons were taken down and burned on the Schindanger.

After the horrible retribution the shores of Swedish Pomerania were no longer infested by pirates.

Bulldozers on the Warpath.

GARRETT, IND., May 7, '78.

EDITOR COURIER,—Allow me space in the columns of your paper to insert the proceedings of our town caucus. On last Tuesday we observed upon the Bulletin board in the post office a call for a town caucus on Thursday evening, by order of a committee appointed for that purpose. At the appointed time a goodly number of the tax paying citizens of both parties assembled in joint convention, and put in nomination the following candidates to be voted for on Monday, May 6th: for Trustee 1st Ward J. R. Skilling; for Trustee 2nd Ward, J. W. Wagner; for Trustee 3d Ward, N. B. Rowe; for Treasures, W. Y. Frederick; for Clerk, H. M. Bicknell; for Assessor, A. H. Putt. After the caucus adjourned every one retired feeling well satisfied with the ticket. But alas! the next day it was discovered by a Malarial Pill Doctor (and one that will long be remembered for former conduct) that there was a grave mistake made by leaving out H. S. Morse, former Trustee of the 1st Ward, and he said it would not do to have Mr Rowe elected in the 3d Ward, for he (Rowe) was a little obnoxious to the present School Board, and also to the principal of the school, and if Mr. Rowe was elected he might oust some of them, and their supplies would be cut off to quite an extent. So he concluded that it would be well for a few of them to meet in "secret c[illegible]" and nominate H. S. Morse of the 1st Ward, a boy of O. C. Clark in 2nd Ward and a "tool" F. D. Bisett in the 3d Ward, then they would be safe, and the bars of justice could not prevail against them. Late on Saturday evening there could be seen a half dozen of Morse's tools, wending their way toward the DeKalb House, and after they were safely within the walls of [illegible] structure, and the blinds [illegible] closed that out siders might not [illegible] what was going on within, and this same Dr. as Secretary to keep a record of their infamy, they proceeded to nominate the following ticket: Trustee 1st Ward, H. S. Morse; Trustee 2nd Ward, H. F. Clark, Trustee 3d Ward, W. Y. Johnson; Clerk, H. M. Bicknell; Treas. E. D. Bryant; Assessor, J. P. Spencer. During this secret session there was occasionally a stamping of feet by the picket guard on the porch as a sign of passers by, when all within would be as still as death. But finally this intelligent body adjourned, had it been day light their faces would have shown that satisfactory expression, which would have said, Well, with this ticket elected we are safe, we can go on and build eleven hundred feet of box ditch, laid on the top of the ground, at an expense of $281. We can drain cellars of private dwellings, churches, etc. We can build a fence around the calaboose lots with condemned posts which cost us nothing, and which we can get a fair price for from the town. And we can use lumber from "our" lumber yard that we can make a good profit on, by charging the town a first class price. But if our ticket is defeated we are gone, and our hopes of making anything out of this scheme is blasted. But to their surprise Johnson would not accept the nomination made by this infamous body, and came out Sunday morning after he heard his name had been used, and made them change their ticket and leave his name off. This was a stunner to the Morse lumber yard faction. But say they, this will never do to stop now and vote for men of the people's choice, but we must beat their ticket in some way. I presume the reason they thought the regular nominated ticket could be defeated was because they had the foreman of the B. & O. shops on their side, all of which we acknowledge they had. But after Mr. Johnson had his name taken off their ticket, it was nessessary for them to bulldoze some one else. This time they selected F. D. Bisett, who acts as night foreman in the Round house, to fill the vacancy made by Mr. J. on their ticket, and lo! they elected their whole ticket with the exception of Mr. Wagner, Trustee 2nd Ward. But how was it accomplished? by "fraud and intimidation' among the shop hands. This may look like a mere assertion, but we have the living evidence to prove that W. T. Hopkins has controlled the votes of a majority of the shop hands for the last two elections, by scratching and fixing up tickets to satify the infamous desire of a certain land agent, and then calling up the men whom he had control of in squads, and giving them his mutilated tickets with instructions to vote for certain individuals, whom he dictated, and on the first of April when we had our township election, we are creditably informed that this same Hopkins sent his men to the polls with instructions how to vote, and after they had voted they went into a saloon and were caught there drinking their lager and having a merry time generally, and their time going in the shops. Yesterday morning before the polls were opend for our corporation election he was heard to make the assertion that by the eternal a certain candidate on the citizens ticket should be defeated (he meant Rowe of the 3d Ward) and how could he do it, only by controlling the vote of the shops. Now we ask the question, is it possible that the B. & O. officials will tolerate such contemptable conduct by their foreman, by mingling in with local affairs in which they are not interested. But we do not wish to saddle all this vile conduct up on Hopkins, but will step over to the blacksmith shops and visit the foreman therr, whose residence is out side of the corporation, and who controled the voters under him at our corporation election. He also spent the day in defaming the character of one of the shop hands, (who had been selected as a candidate by the people), and praising up the bulldozers, but we will draw the mantle of charity over this hypocrite, and add in conclusion, that this species of bulldozing may never occur again.

Enjoy Life.

What a truly beautiful world we live in! Nature gives us grandeur of mountains, glens and oceans, and thousands of means for enjoyment. We can desire no better when in perfect health, but how often do the majority of people feel like giving it up disheartened, discouraged and worried out with disease, when there is no occasion for this feeling, as every sufferer can easily obtain satisfactory proof that Green's August Flower will make them as free from disease as when born. Dyspepsia and Liver complaint is the direct causes of seventy-five per cent. of such maladies as billiousness, indigestion, sick headach, costiveness, nervous prostration, dizziness of the head, palpitation of the heart, and other distressing symptoms. Three doses of August Flower will prove its wonderful effect. Sample bottles, 10 cents. Try it. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

Never Known to Fail.

Dr. Morris' Syrup of Tar, Wild Cherry and Horehound has never been known to fail in permantly curing obstinate coughs, colds, croupe, whooping cough, nor any diseases of the respiratory organs, and it does it, too, at once. It is not necessary to take it for a long time before you can discover its beneficial effects. Its sale in this community is immense, and its popularity universal. It should not be classed with compounds put up by inexperienced hands. Do not fail to give this great and potent remedy a trial. It will not and cannot disappoint you. Try it once. Trial size 10 cents. Regular size 50 cents and one dollar. For sale by F. E. Davenport. Also agents for Prof. Parker's Pleasant Worm Syrup, which never fails. Pleasant to take, and requires no physic. Price 25c.

TOM'S LETTER.

BY E. T. CARR, JR.

Now Mollie, lay your knitting down; 'tis after set o' sun,
And soon the stars, like angel's eyes, will peep out one by one
From where they hide the whole day long, deep hidden in the blue,
And look upon the evil and the good that people do.

I've got a letter here from Tom—say, wife, you need not start—
The boy is well, there's nothing here to pain a mother's heart.
He says he's gathered in the grain, a goodly golden store;
He says he's paid the mortgage off and laid up something more.

Well, wife, 'tain't quite two years ago, one sultry summer day,
When I was working in the fields and getting in the hay,
A carriage drove up to the door, and there sat a chap,
With laughing eyes, like yours, that looked from underneath his cap.

He helped a little maiden out, with sunny, gleaming hair,
And deep blue eyes that looking in you seemed to read a prayer;
I tried to make out who they was, but, wife, I didn't know;
I couldn't make the team stand still, and kept a hollerin' "Whoa."

I saw him point across to me, and heard him something say;
I couldn't make the words out, their heads were turned away;
But then an idea struck me quick, just like a ray o' dawn;
Although I didn't know the girl, I knew the boy was Tom—

My boy who ran away from home so many years before;
Our Tom, whom we had mourned as dead a dozen years or more.
I left the team a standin' still, and threw the whip away—
The bull they might ha' gone to smash, I wouldn't ha' cared that day.

I reached the house before 'em, wife, but naught to you I said;
Somehow, harsh words I'd said to Tom kept poppin' through my head;
I couldn't help but think, perhaps, I'd been too quick to strike—
I'd learned that men, like horses, wife, is seldom two alike.

They never stopped to knock at all, but open flung the door—
"Well, father, I've come back," Tom said, "to see you all once more."
I threw my arms around his neck, broke over all my rules;
You did the same, we laughed and cried together—both like fools.

When all was still we found the girl with blue eyes was Tom's wife,
A little daisy he had won to brighten all his life.
How well we learned to love the bride; and, when they went back West,
They wanted the old birds to come and see them in their nest.

"Go and read the letter!" why I've read the letter through,
Hold on, now, here's a postscript, with perhaps a word for you,
Good gracious! what a funny thing; it takes my breath away—
"Tell mother"—say, wife, look at me; is my hair turning gray?

And grandma call me grandpa, just to see how it will seem.
Oh, wife, I think I feel as big as Sheba's famous Queen,
"Tell mother"—kiss me quick and lay your head upon my arm—
"God sent a little baby down to visit at the farm."

A LETTER AND A DUEL.

It was just a year since Harry Egmont had brought home his bride. She was a celebrated beauty; she had been a great belle, perhaps somewhat of a flirt. Although Harry knew that Lucille had married him from the purest affection, he could never wholly rid himself of the demon jealousy; it haunted him perpetually, causing him to imagine that every other man was in love with his wife—which was no wonder, perhaps, considering how handsome she was. Lucille did all in her power to make her husband happy, but, having no idea how strong his feeling in the matter was, sometimes unconsciously gave ground for suspicion by her conduct.

"How many times has Danforth been here this week, Lucille?" asked Mr. Egmont one evening, coming in with a rather clouded brow—for he had met the obnoxious visitor at the gate.

"Three times, I think," said Lucille, hardly turning from the piano at which she had been seated. "Why do you ask?"

"Oh, for no reason; only I do not fancy the man much, and I wondered how you could like him so well."

Lucille looked around, now fairly aroused.

"I don't like him particularly," she said, "but he has such an excellent voice, I do enjoy practicing duets with him. Harry, dear, if you don't fancy him, I won't allow him to come here any more."

As she spoke, she left the piano, and came to her husband's side, putting out her hand kindly.

"I am a brute!" exclaimed Harry, returning her caresses. "Have whoever you please to sing with you; I ought not to interfere."

"Yes, surely you ought, dear, if you think I am the least imprudent in my choice of friends. Do you really dislike Mr. Danforth?"

"Yes, I do, Lucy. I might as well own it; he impresses me disagreeably; more than that, I have heard to-day that he has had one or two disgraceful affairs with married women; so you can imagine I was not very well pleased when I met him at the gate."

A deep flush rose to Mrs. Egmont's handsome face as her husband spoke.

"Mr. Danforth shall not come here any more, if that is his character," she said, decidedly.

"But there is no need of quarreling with him."

"Oh, no; he will simply find me 'not at home' when he calls. He will soon understand."

Mr. Egmont, however, advised nothing rash or so pointed as to make an enemy of the man; and, after some consultation, a gradual withdrawal of favor was decided upon, rather than an abrupt dismissal.

By contriving to be really out at the hours during which Mr. Danforth generally called, Mrs. Egmont avoided seeing him for several days, and fancied that the matter was quite settled. She was soon to learn that this man was not to be so easily dropped. One afternoon, however, he succeeded in being admitted to her presence.

"Mrs. Egmont," he demanded, "have you avoided me purposely?"

"Certainly not, Mr. Danforth—why should I?"

"Because I love you! Oh, Lucille, it is useless for me to keep silent any longer. I love you madly! passionately!" and he threw himself on his knees before her.

"Mr. Danforth!" cried Lucille, starting up in indignation, "how dare you so insult me! Leave my house this instant!"

He rose to his feet and confronted her. She, with her whole frame quivering with anger, her beautiful eyes flashing, and he looking at her with a wilder admiration than he had ever before felt.

"Oh, listen to me!" he pleaded; "do not reject me so wholly; I will be patient; I will not frighten you again; only let me have a little of your regard—you know there is more sympathy between us than between you and your cold-blooded husband."

"Mr. Danforth!" exclaimed Lucille, grand in her overmastering wrath, "if you do not instantly relieve me from your insulting presence, I will call the servants and have you turned out."

"Think a moment, Lucy," he said; "it is not well to make an enemy of me."

"Will you go, sir, or must I ring?" was her only reply.

"I will go," he answered, taking his hat; "but, Mrs. Egmont, I will be revenged for this treatment!"

Without waiting for a reply he left the room, and Mrs. Egmont sank into the sofa, utterly overcome with the violence of her emotions. If her husband had come in then, she would probably have thrown herself into his arms, and told him all the story of her insult and her anger, her first feeling was so clearly one of intense longing for his sympathies and protection. But as the time went by cooler reflections arose; why should she tell him? It would only make him wretched; perhaps even lead to violence. At this new thought, she resolved to keep silence on what had happened. It was surely wiser to guard that as a secret which would distress him so much. So when Mr. Egmont came home his wife met him with her usual smiles.

The immediate result of this was a necessity on which Lucille had not counted. That very evening she and her husband met Danforth at the house of a mutual friend. Her first thought was of intense horror, and that it was impossible that she could meet him as usual; then occurred the reflection that she had no apparent reason for doing otherwise, and, as he saluted her and her husband with his ordinary manner, she responded, but with so much confusion and such heightened color as attracted the attention of Mr. Egmont and others in the room.

This little incident settled the footing upon which she and Mr. Danforth were henceforth to meet. Lucille bitterly resented the insult she had received, and never saw the man without an angry flush; but she continued to exchange ordinary civilities with him. In a week or two they met at a large party. In the crush, Mr. Danforth approached Mrs. Egmont unobserved, and said to her in a low, quick whisper, "Can we not be friends?"

She turned, and seeing who the speaker was crimsoned to the temples, and was so evidently agitated that the gentleman on whose arm she leaned released her, fancying, not unreasonably, that she wished to hold some private conversation with this man, whose mere presence so excited her.

"Will you accept my escort?" asked Danforth, pressing near to her.

"No," she replied, recovering herself; "certainly not." And she drew back decidedly.

"Wait one moment," he said, compelling her to listen. "We are observed. I see you do not wish to create a public scandal. You had better take my arm for a few moments."

Confused and annoyed, Lucille glanced up hastily. Half a dozen pairs of curious eyes were looking at her; and she, deeming that this was the way to silence remark, rested her fingers on his arm. Alas! Her whole manner had betrayed so much feeling that gossip had already seized upon the pretext for discussion; and among those who were watching her most intently was her own husband. All unconscious of this, Lucille walked on with Danforth, every line of her expressive face showing to the most casual observer that this was no mere indifferent conversation.

"You have done wisely, Mrs. Egmont, in not giving cause for remark, by visiting me with your displeasure in public. May I hope that you have also been kind enough to forgive me for my imprudence?"

"No," replied Lucille, impetuously. "I have refrained from insulting you in public, because I did not wish to inflict pain upon those I love, not from any forbearance toward you."

Danforth set his teeth tightly as she spoke, and there was an ugly flash in his black eyes.

"I shall not forget your kindness," he said, with intense bitterness.

"I will relieve you from your attendance," she replied coldly. "I have no wish to extend our acquaintance beyond merest formal salutation. You will please remember this in future."

"I shall forget nothing," he said, significantly. And, with a formal bow, he resigned her to a gentleman who approached.

The scene at the ball created very much comment, and Mr. Egmont himself was not happy when he thought of it. He could not fancy Lucille in any manner disloyal; and yet her agitation, while talking with this man, was certainly very remarkable. The expression of her face, as she met Danforth, haunted him, and he watched her closely whenever after they encountered him. He noticed that her color always changed as she returned the salutation of this once-favored friend, and he grew unhappy.

One afternoon in June, Mr. Egmont came home unusually early from his business. As he approached his house he saw a boy lounging about the gate. Now he had noticed the same person more than once of late prowling near his premises, and his suspicions were strongly excited by his presence. He paused a moment, resolving to watch the lad, who did not appear to observe him, and his apprehensions of some sinister design were seemingly confirmed. The boy stood at the gate a moment, then walked out in a line with one of the windows and looked anxiously up, finally leaned against a tree and then once more went to the gate, this time holding a note to his hand. Mr. Egmont strode up to him.

"Now, sir, what do you want?"

The boy was apparently much alarmed at this.

"I—I," he stammered, "was just a waitin'."

"So I saw. Who were you waiting for?"

"I ain't to tell," in great confusion, and dropping the note.

Mr. Egmont picked it up—it was addressed to his wife.

"Were you waiting for Mrs. Egmont?" he asked, sternly.

"Ye—es, sir."

Poor Harry had seen the address, and he was as white as a sheet as he handed the boy a shilling, and said, "Now tell me the truth; have you brought other notes like this?"

"Yes, sir."

"And who have you given them to?"

"To Mrs. Egmont; she watches for me, and comes out and gets 'em."

"That will do, sir. You may go."

Indeed, he felt as if he should faint away and sink down groaning aloud in his agony if he remained there another moment. The boy departed with a cunning leer on his face, and Mr. Egmont took the note to his study, and, locking himself in, tore it open. He knew the handwriting from the first glimpse of it; there was no need of any signature to tell him that it was Danforth's. Thus ran the shameful communication:

MY DARLING LUCILLE: I cannot meet you to-night without exciting too much suspicion. Oh, my love! how I long for the time to come when you will be wholly mine, and we shall no longer fear these wretched restraints; but until then, for your sake, sweetest, I will be prudent. I live on the memory of our last delicious interview, on the hope of that happy day when we shall escape together to a life of liberty. Until death, your own devoted, D.

It is hopeless to attempt to describe the mad misery into which the latterly-happy husband was thrown by this most infamous note. For a while he sat almost stupefied by the weight of his woe; and then, starting up, he rushed into the room where his wife sat placidly sewing, and flung it at her feet.

"What is it?" she asked, looking up amazed at his strange entrance; and then, seeing how white he was, she soon turned pale, repeating in alarm, "Oh, Harry, what is it! What is the matter?"

"Read that!" said he, pointing to the note.

She looked at him, frightened at his fixed, stern face, and then took up the letter and slowly read it, the blood rushing back in torrents to her face as she went on.

"What an abominable thing!" she exclaimed. "Where did you get it?"

"How dare you ask me?" he cried, furiously. "You know, madam, how you have received these love-letters. Unfortunately for you, this fell into my hands—for I am undeceived. You will return to your father to-night."

"But, Harry," she exclaimed, going toward him, "you surely do not believe—"

"I believe that you are an infamous woman," he replied, harshly; and, before she could say another word, he left the room and, a moment after, left the house.

In another hour, Mr. Wentwood, Lucille's father, sent word to her room that he awaited her in the parlor. Short as was the time since her husband left her, a terrible change had come over Lucille; and the haggard, pale-faced woman who met him seemed to her father scarcely recognizable as the fair young daughter who had left his house so happily a year ago. She met his stern questioning only with passionate protestations of her innocence; these were hard to believe until she told the whole story of Danforth's insulting addresses to her, and his threat of vengeance.

"I understand how it is," sobbed Lucille; "he has written this horrible letter on purpose to compromise me. But, oh, papa, how can I persuade Harry of my truth?"

She was in such an agony of distress that Mr. Wentwood speedily became, instead of the judge, the consoler, and promised to convince his son-in-law of Lucille's innocence, being so fully persuaded of it himself that he began to fancy this an easy task. Somewhat consoled, Lucille and he awaited Egmont's return with what patience they could, but the evening passed away and still he did not come. Lucille grew very anxious, and then desperately alarmed. Mr. Wentwood himself was apprehensive of some calamity, and, at last, started off in search of the missing man. His first inquiries were at the Albany, where Danforth lodged. Yes, Mr. Egmont was there, in the chamber of Capt. Brooks. Mr. Wentwood immediately sent up his name, and, after a long delay, Capt. Brooks appeared. His face was very grave, and Mr. Wentwood felt that his worst apprehensions were to be verified. There was a long and anxious consultation between the two, and, when they parted, Mr. Wentwood took a cab, and drove with what speed was possible back to his daughter's house. Lucille came forward to meet him, wan and worn with her long and terrible night vigil.

"Wrap something warm about you, Lucille, and come with me," said Mr. Wentwood, hastily.

"Harry," she gasped, "is he hurt?"

"No; he is well, and we may yet be in time to save him. He and Danforth are to fight at sunrise."

It seemed as if Lucille could not grow any paler, and yet a shade of ashen gray overspread her face; with a mighty effort of self-control, she restrained all outward manifestation of her agony; and, seizing a large cloak, went out swiftly to the cab.

In the gray dawn of the summer morning, on Wormwood Scrubbs, stood four men, their purpose in utter and horrible contrast with the peaceful scene around them. The seconds measured the distance; and, just as the first golden rays of sunlight stole from the east, Egmont and Danforth confronted each other with murder in their hearts. They were both very white—Danforth, who had not calculated on such a result of his folly, looked uneasy and alarmed; Egmont's expression was resolute, while a fierce fire glowed through the hopeless misery of his eyes.

"One, two, three—fire!"

The fatal words dropped out one by one; and as the last was pronounced the sharp sound of two pistol shots broke the stillness, followed almost simultaneously by a woman's scream. No one heeded that, for Danforth had fallen.

The two seconds went up to him; his face was convulsed with agony, and he lay lividly haggard on the grass, his eyes glazed, his hands twitching.

"My God! have I killed him?" Egmont groaned out the words in anguish; a moment ago he longed for the man's life-blood; now that he saw it flowing he was distressed.

At the sound, Danforth opened his eyes.

"It was a written lie," he gasped. "Listen all of you—you especially, Egmont. I am a dying man; and I swear to you, as I hope to be forgiven, your wife is innocent." He paused a moment, convulsed with pain. "No, don't go; you can't help me, and I want you all to hear. Stoop lower. I wrote that note to compromise her; she gave me no encouragement—but I loved her, and hoped to force her to come to me. God forgive me!"

Unnoticed by all, Lucille had approached the spot, and paused by her husband's side. Danforth was the first to see her.

"She is there!" he said, stirred to sudden life. "Lucille, will you pardon me?"

Egmont turned and looked at his wife. In the deep earnestness of that glance all was explained, all forgiven; and he drew his arm around her as he answered for her.

"The punishment is heaviest on you, Danforth. God knows we both forgive whatever harm you have done."

But the fallen man was already unconscious; and, leaving him in charge of the seconds, Harry returned with Lucille and her father to his own home. He had thought never to re-enter it with her; but, as he pressed his wife to his heart in recovered happiness, she was dearer than ever before.

Danforth did not die; the wound proved not even to be very serious; and so well was the affair managed that the secret of the cause of his illness was unknown beyond a few faithful friends.

Crooked Lake-Michigan Whisky.

Yesterday we met at the depot a man named Shaffner, who formerly lived here. He said that he had been for some time employed on a propeller on Lake Michigan, but, not liking the business he was engaged at, he gave up his situation. He would not say what the business was that he had relinquished, but said it was $200 per month to him. Shaffner is a distiller by trade, and said he had been at work at it until recently. Shortly afterward Shaffner remarked that the Government officers were not smart enough to catch the crooked distillers along Lake Michigan. In explanation he asserted that some of the propellers that ostensibly traded in grain and lumber were, in reality, engaged in the illicit production of spirits. They had on board the complete apparatus for making and distilling, and they converted much of the grain they took aboard into spirits. The vessels were moved in quiet, out-of-the-way, little harbors, distant from ports, where they were able to produce from eight to ten barrels of whisky per day. The spirits were run into large tubs, and these were emptied at night, when the vessels ran into port, by means of hose which carried the spirits into tubs in certain warehouses at the dock. This was the story shadowed by Shaffner, and he asserted that a large amount of whisky was produced by the sailors along Lake Michigan, and was put on the market without paying tax. Shaffner was on his way back to Michigan, but he did not intend to engage in the crooked-whisky business. He said there was money in it, but he thought there was too much danger in it. There may be something in Shaffner's story.—Dayton Cor. Cincinnati Gazette.

Is the 29th of February a Day?

The question whether the 29th of February is legally a day or not has lately been presented to a local court in Indiana. There is authority in that State to the effect that the 28th and 29th of February are to be counted as one day; but, when the Supreme Court so decided, it had not examined an ancient English statute concerning leap year, passed in the twenty-third year of Henry III., which bears upon the subject. Accordingly, in the case to which we refer, the Judge determined to consider the question de novo; and he came to the conclusion that the 29th of February must be regarded as a day, in contemplation of law, as much as any other, and must be reckoned in the legal computation of time, where days are concerned. "Is a man who works on Feb. 28 and 29 to have pay for one day only?" he asks. "Has a judgment rendered on Feb. 28 no priority as a lien over one rendered on Feb. 29? Could a man sentenced to be hung on Feb. 29 be legally executed on Feb. 28?" Of course not. The confusion on the subject has evidently arisen from statutes treating of the entire year as a whole. Thus, there is a provision in the Revised Statutes of New York that whenever the term "year" or "years" shall be used in any law, contract, or instrument, the year intended shall be taken to consist of 365 days; a half year, 182 days; a quarter of a year, 91 days; "and the added day of a leap year and the day immediately preceding, if they shall occur in any period so to be computed, shall be reckoned together as one day."—New York Sun.

Ferocity of the Leopard.

An instance of the ferocity of the leopard occurred in the case of the missionary Schmidt. This worthy man had gone out with a party of Hottentots to another Moravian station to hunt some hyenas which had been very destructive to their flocks, and, in company with one of the men, entered a thicket in pursuit of a beast they had wounded. Instead of the hyena, however, the dogs started a leopard, which instantly sprung on the Hottentot and bore him to the ground. Mr. Schmidt instantly ran forward to the aid of the man, with his gun cocked; but, before he could get an opportunity of firing, the animal left the Hottentot and flew with fury at himself. In the scuffle he dropped the gun, but luckily fell above the leopard, with his knee on its stomach. The animal seized him by the arm with its jaws, and kept striking him with its paws and tearing his clothes in tatters from his breast. Schmidt, however, being a powerful man, succeeded, after receiving another severe bite or two, in seizing the leopard by the throat with his right hand, and held it down, in spite of its desperate struggles, for a few minutes, and until his strength was on the point of giving way, when a Hottentot on the outside of the jungle, who heard his cries, came to the rescue and shot the ferocious beast through the heart, so that its death was instantaneous. Had any life been left, its dying struggles might have proved fatal to Mr. Schmidt. As it was, he was so terribly lacerated that for several weeks his life was in the greatest danger. The Hottentot who was first attacked was less severely wounded, but his face was so much torn by the enemy's talons that his eyes were filled with blood, and he was unable to render any aid to the missionary who had so generously come to his aid.

TURNING TO STONE.

A Very Remarkable Phenomenon.

The fortnightly meeting of the Psychological Society was held recently at the hall, Chandos street, London, Mr. Sergeant Cox in the chair. The subject of the debate was "Psychology of Wit and Humor," by Prof. C. J. Plumtree.

The Professor, before beginning the discussion, said that when down at Swindon three weeks ago he was asked to visit a lady whose case was worthy of consideration. He went with the uncle of the lady and visited her. He found the lady to be about 34 years of age, a widow, and with two children. The lady was lying on a sofa in the corner of the room. The lower part of her body was as white and as hard as marble, with her limbs turned up. When she was removed from Bath to Swindon a box had to be made in which the lower part of her body was placed.

It appeared that in 1863 her husband died, and one day afterward, when she was coming down stairs with her two children in her arms, a drum was sounded, and the start shocked her so much that she fell down stairs, and from that date she gradually grew worse. She lost the senses of sight and hearing, and afterward the power of speech. She felt a strange feeling concentrated in her cheeks, and it occurred to her that she might be able to carry on conversation by others writing on her cheeks. He found that the jaws had been locked for two years, and no solid food had been taken by her during that time. She was fed on soup, milk, cream, etc. She determined to test the sensibilities of the cheeks and lips. Her friends began to write words with the finger on the cheek, which she perfectly understood. He found her eyes closed, and when the upper lid was forced up the eyeballs were turned upward, the same as a person in a mesmeric sleep. She also was unable to move her fingers. She took the pencil in her mouth, and, guiding it with her hand, she wrote the reply.

There was one remarkable phenomenon that the patient could tell colors by touch. He tested her by asking what was the color of his coat. She put it to her cheek, and, after a few moments, wrote on the slate that it was dark gray and small red spots. She also was able to tell the chief characters in a photograph if the carte were passed across her lips and cheek. If she grasped the hand of a stranger, she could tell at any future time who it was. She also was able to tell the melody sung or played to her, if, in the former, the hand of the singer was placed on the cheek of the lady, or, in the latter, if her hand were placed on the piano when the performer was executing.

She was quite resigned to her fate, and seemed to be quite happy. He believed that any lady or gentleman could see this lady if they visited her at her home in Swindon.

The Chairman said such facts were far more convincing than all the essays that could be written on the subject. There were produced two letters from the lady, which were correctly spelled and in proper sentences. She, in answer to a question, thus describes how she distinguishes cloth:

"Black feels raised and harsh; white smooth, cold and dead; drab and gray a little raised, smooth and cold; red smooth and very hot; blue smooth, but grates a little—what I mean by this is, it edges my teeth and all my nerves; brown very grating and hot. Other colors I cannot explain how I tell them."

Something of a Title.

The Czar of all the Russias has a variety of titles longer than the moral law, and less easy of perusal. In the San Stefano treaty he appears as Alexander II., by the grace of God Emperor and Autocrat Panrussian, Moscovite, Kievian, Vladvimirian, Novgorodian; Czar of Kazan, Czar of Astrakhan, Polish Czar, Siberian Czar, Czar of Chersonesus, Georgian Czar; Gosudar of Pskoff, and Grand Prince of Smolensk, Lithuania, Vollhynia, Peodolia and Finland; Prince of Esthonia, Livonia, Courland, etc.; Commander of the whole Northern Country; Gosudar of Iberia, Kartalinia, the Kabardian land, and the Armenian territory; Hereditary Gosudar and Ruler of the Circassian and Highland Princes and others; Norwegian Heir Apparent; Duke of Schleswig-Holstein and Oldenburg, etc.

College Gossip.

Yale's graduating class is the largest ever sent out from that institution. Rutgers students recently pelted Prof. Doolittle with lemons while he was lecturing. Wesleyan has had a religious revival, and two-thirds of the students are now professing Christians. Oberlin has expelled two Freshmen for writing atheistical essays. Williston has not entirely subjugated its rebellious students. The trustees voted to remove Principal Whiton, who had in a measure been responsible for the troubles, and the delighted students burned him in effigy. Thereupon the trustees reversed their vote and determined to sustain Whiton.

The Moffett Bell-Register.

Considerable sensation has been caused here in drinking circles, the saloon-keepers all closing up to await the decision of Judge Bird in certain liquor cases. The court summoned them all to show cause why their license should not be revoked, because the Moffett registers indicated small work. This is the home of Moffett, of Moffett register fame; but the bar-keepers appear to be derelict here just the same as in other portions of the State. The register is regarded as a good thing, but the trouble is the law can't be enforced. —Harrisburg (Va.) Cor. Cincinnati Enquirer.

MADELINE.

My Madeline! My Madeline!
Mark my melodious midnight moans
Much may my melting music mean,
My modulated monotones.

My mandolin's mild minstrelsy,
My mental muse's magazine,
My mouth, my mind, my memory,
Must, mingling, murmur "Madeline!"

Muster 'mid midnight's masquerade,
Mark Moorish maiden, matron's mein;
'Mongst Murcia's most majestic maids,
Match me my matchless Madeline.

Much melancholy music mine;
Many my motive may mistake,
My modest merits much malign.

My Madeline's most mirthful mood
Much mollifies my mind's machine;
My mournfulness's magnitude
Melts—makes me merry, Madeline!

Match-making ma's may machinate,
Manœuvring misses me misween;
More money may make many mate,
My magic motto—"Madeline!"

Most, most mellifluous melody,
'Midst Murcia's misty mounts marine,
Meet me by moonlight, marry me,
Madonna mia!—Madeline!

At a trial in the Court of Common Pleas in Sandusky, Ohio, in 1872, several citizens were subpœnaed to testify as to the character and habits of A. B., the defendant. Among the number was an ex-Probate Judge of grave demeanor. The State Attorney asked this gentleman if he was acquainted with the defendant, and he replied, "Yes."

"Are you sufficiently acquainted with the defendant to know his general habits?"

"Yes, sir."

"Are they good?"

"Fair."

THE PHONOGRAPH.

Mr. Edison Explains the Possibilities of the Wonderful Machine.

Of all the inventions of the present century, says the Chicago Tribune, not one has created such an interest or attracted such a widespread attention as the phonograph. Magazines have teemed with articles upon the inventor and his invention, and the newspaper press has speculated upon its possibilities clear to the verge of the wildest imaginings. The most interesting article, however, that has yet appeared is in the current number of the North American Review, and it derives its interest largely from the fact that it is written by Mr. Edison, the inventor himself, and is, therefore, an official statement of what he has accomplished, and of future probabilities as they appear to him from the basis of his experiments. The article is such as might be expected from the pen of such a man—brief, concise, and clear—without unnecessary flourish, and not transgressing limits of probability, and confined to a statement, first, of actual results; and, second, of probable future realizations.

The actual results that he has accomplished are stated by Mr. Edison in substantially the following form: He has discovered that a vibrating disk is capable of receiving a complex motion that will represent the peculiar property of all the multifarious sound-waves; that a record of them can be made upon plastic material by indentation, and that they can be restored, producing upon the ear the same sensation as if coming direct from the original source—indeed, Mr. Edison claims that the articulation of some individuals has been greatly improved in the passage through the phonograph; that this record can be removed and replaced upon a second apparatus without mutilation or loss of effective power to vibrate the second plate; that it requires but ten seconds to remove the recording sheet, and that it can be sent by mail at a slight cost for postage; that these indentations possess wonderful enduring power, and that the record can be multiplied indefinitely by electrotyping; and that an audible reproduction may be had "by speaking at the instrument from a distance of from two to three feet in a loud tone" by the use "of a flaring tube or funnel to collect the sound-waves and the construction of an especially delicate diaphragm and embossing point."

The most interesting part of the article is devoted to the applications of these properties of the phonograph. The first of these contemplates a revolution in letter-writing. The record-sheet being placed in the phonograph, the matter is dictated and recorded. The sheet is then removed and sent by mail to the correspondent, who places it upon his phonograph and listens to the voice of the one who has sent it. As Mr. Edison says: "Inasmuch as it gives the tone of voice of his correspondent, it is identified. As it may be filed away as other letters, it is a perfect record. As two sheets of foil have been indented with the same facility as a single sheet, the writer may thus keep a duplicate of his communication. As the principal of a business house or his partners now dictate the important business communications to clerks, to be written out, they are required to do no more by the phonographic method, and do thereby dispense with the clerk and maintain perfect privacy in their communications." All kinds of dictation can be readily effected by the phonograph. It can talk to the compositor and record the sayings of witnesses, counsel, and Judge. It can be used as an elocutionary teacher, or as a primary teacher for children. It will reproduce music with marvelous accuracy and power. As the original record can be indefinitely multiplied, and as he estimates that 40,000 words can be placed upon a single metal plate ten inches square, phonographic, self-reading books for the work-room, or sick-room, sold at very small cost as compared with printed books, are among the strong probabilities of the future. He promises the children for the ensuing Christmas holidays dolls that will speak, sing, cry, or laugh, and every species of animal or mechanical toy—such as locomotives, etc., supplied with their characteristic sounds. The last, and in Mr. Edison's opinion the most important, probability of the future is a revolution in the present system of telegraphy by the combination of the phonograph and telephone principles. He claims that by a very simple device one vibrating-disk may be made to do duty for both the telephone and the phonograph, thus simultaneously transmitting and recording the message, and enabling the correspondent to hear it while it is being recorded.

That Mr. Edison may live to see all the probabilities he has outlined become realities will be the very general wish of the whole community, whose needs he is so rapidly anticipating with his wonderful discoveries.

A Tongue Amputated.

Robert F. Hurlbut, Private Secretary of Gov. Bishop, of Ohio, has just had his tongue amputated near the root. The chin was sawed in twain and the jaws spread apart in order to take out the diseased tongue. The work was performed in a comparatively short space of time, and the patient was comfortable and conscious in less than an hour. Next day Mr. Hurlbut walked across the room, and wrote his wants on paper. He is not permitted to attempt to speak, and, of course, could not do so if he desired. The physician thinks he will be able to articulate audibly in the course of time. Thus far the difficulty has been to give nourishment, which has been done by injection. Glass tubes have been secured, and hereafter nourishment will be given by that means until the soreness in the mouth is somewhat subdued.—Cleveland Plaindealer.

A FINANCIAL PHENOMENON.

How the French Paid a Thousand Millions to Germany.

[Translated by Charles Michaus for the St. Louis Times.]

No event of modern times has excited more wide and general surprise than the ease with which the French people paid off the heavy war indemnity of $1,000,000,000 to Germany. It has been a puzzle alike to financiers, to statesmen, and to political economists, how a nation just emerged from a costly (though brief) military struggle could raise so enormous a sum in cash in less than two years' time. National pride, it was widely said, had much to do with it; but no amount of national pride could have raised a thousand millions of dollars in a nation where the conditions of great accumulated wealth and general prosperity did not pre-exist. National pride had not availed to save French honor from condign and overwhelming defeat in war, nor to avert the humiliating aspect of her capital in the hands of a foreign foe, nor to redeem her from the reproach of ill-prepared and undisciplined forces and badly organized campaigns.

Another theory of this rapid payment of the stupendous fine of five milliards of francs was that France was the holder of about $2,000,000,000 of foreign securities, which were sold, and the proceeds invested in the new "rentes" or Government bonds issued at 5 per cent. interest, to raise money for meeting the German indemnity. For, be it mentioned, Bismarck had exacted not only cash payment, without credit, but also payment in gold and silver. The whole sum of $1,100,000,000 (including 200,000,000 francs levied on the city of Paris, and other war contributions levied during the progress of hostilities) was paid in specie, excepting only 100,000,000 francs in notes of the Bank of France, which the Prussians consented to take in place of an equal amount of gold. Inquiries into the current of exchanges actually developed the fact that France was exporting securities and importing gold the whole time of the indemnity payments; but the actual amount to which the flow of the precious metals into France extended on this account could not be accurately learned.

Another explanation of the rapid liquidation by France of this prodigious levy was that the annual income of France is $3,600,000,000, and that the payments to Germany took only one-third of the gross annual earnings of the French people. But there can be no doubt that to the general character for frugality and the accumulated savings of the French people must be mainly credited the great financial phenomenon of the nineteenth century. The enormous loans which the payment of the indemnity compelled the French Government to put upon the market were all promptly taken, and the greater portion of the money came from French people. Five per cent. rentes, or bonds, to the heavy amount of $1,640,000,000, were all taken, at an average price of 83 per cent., thus making the interest to the investors average 6 per cent. Not only so, but the second loan, of 1872, was so eagerly sought for that the subscriptions covered the amount called for thirteen times over, compelling the Government to award the rentes among the subscribers pro rata.

All travelers in France unite in representing the French people as great economists. With them not only does a very little money go a great way in supplying their wants, but the sums saved, even out of the slenderest incomes, represent a handsome surplus. In England there is one man in every five who spends all he gets, but in France there is not one in forty who spends his income; the other thirty-nine lay something by. Profusion and waste, which characterize the use of the means of living in England, and more conspicuously still in the United States, are quite unknown among the French people. Of what nine families out of every ten would here throw away, a French family would make a variety of appetizing dishes; and it is literally true that the French men and women would live, and live well, on the mere waste of American families. These habits of economy enable the people to lay up their little savings year by year, and it is well known that the public funds are the most favorite means of investment with the peasantry. The French rentes can be had in denominations of 100 francs ($20) and upwards, and have always been highly popular with the masses. The principle of popularizing the loans of the Government has worked admirably, and has been borrowed to advantage in the issue of United States bonds, which are now to be had in sums as low as $50.

Here is a fact which speaks volumes in favor of the French system of public laws. So long ago as 1867 the debt of France was held by 1,095,683 persons, who averaged $2,000 each. It is now still more widely distributed. In England, on the other hand, her great public debt of $3,850,000,000 is in the hands of only 126,331 persons, thus averaging more than $30,000 to each holder. It is, unfortunately, impossible to ascertain how many persons hold the public debt of the United States, because so large a proportion of it is in the form of coupon bonds, which pass from hand to hand without registration. In France, all the rentes are inscribed in the name of the holder on the books of the treasury. To have their names in the "Grand Livere" of the public debt is an honor eagerly sought after by the masses of the people.

During all the recent enormous drain upon her resources, which has nearly doubled her national debt, there has not been heard anywhere among the French people the slightest hint of repudiation. The French look upon their public debt as an obligation sacredly due, and it is due in the larger part to themselves.

Another striking feature of the prosperity of France, which aids in enabling her to bear the extraordinary fiscal burdens imposed upon her, is the fact of the wide distribution of real estate among the citizens. Statistics establish the fact that there are 6,000,000 of houses in France, and the majority of them are homesteads belonging to their tenants. Three-fifths of the entire population are inhabitants of the rural districts, while in England the proportion is only one-fifth, four-fifths being residents of towns.

Finally, one conspicuous element in that national prosperity which has brought the world to a wondering recognition of the vast resources of France is the recent development of her commerce. Since 1855 the foreign commerce of France has been considerably more than doubled. Her mastery of the finer mechanic arts and the perfection to which processes of manufacture have been carried are well known the world over. The frugality of her people is only matched by their industry. The whole country teems with productiveness. French fabrics are found in almost endless profusion and variety in all the markets of the globe. It is this constantly growing fertility of production, joined with the causes previously enumerated, which has enabled the French people to bear with such marvelous ease a burden which it was almost universally predicted would crush and overwhelm them.

A Humorist's Dinner.

"Twenty minutes for dinner," shouted the brakeman, as we approached Lathrop.

Arrived there, I entered the dining-room and inquired of the waiter:

"What do you have for dinner?"

"Twenty minutes," was the hurried reply.

I told him I would try half-a-dozen minutes raw on the half-shell, to see how they went. Told him to make a minute of it on his books. He scratched his head, trying to comprehend the order, but gave it up, and waited upon some one else.

I approached a man who stood near the door with a lot of silver in his hand: "What do you have for dinner?"

"Half a dollar," says he

I told him I would take half a dollar well done. I asked him if he couldn't give me, in addition, a boiled pocket-book stuffed with greenbacks, and some 7-30s garnished with postage-stamps and some 10-cent scrip; also, a Confederate bond, done brown, with lettuce alone. And I would like to wash my dinner down with national-bank notes on "draft."

He said they were out of every thing but the bank notes, and that as soon as the train left he would order the waiter to "draw" some.

Nominating a President.

A new method for nominating candidates for President and Vice President by the national political parties is proposed. It is thus outlined by the Cincinnati Enquirer, a Democratic paper, which recommends it to its party in 1880:

"Let the National Committee meet at Baltimore, say, on the day fixed for nominating candidates for President and Vice President; each State delegation meet in its own State, at a place in telegraphic communication with Baltimore, or wherever the National Committee may meet, and send the result of its ballot to the National Committee. When all the States shall have sent in their votes, the National Committee shall count the same, and announce the result immediately to each State Convention. If there shall be no election on the first ballot, the voting to proceed until a nomination shall be made."

It is claimed, and very plausibly, too, that, by the adoption of this plan, bargaining, manipulation of delegations, or carrying nominations by hurrahs, would be done away with, and that the result would be the cool, deliberate work of each State Convention, expressing the party will and the choice of the State.

Senator Edmunds on Church Taxation.

Senator Edmunds, referring to cognate subjects in the Senate, had some sharp things to say about the church. A bill was pending to relieve a church from assessed taxes. Mr. Edmunds objected. He said in substance he was not satisfied that church property should not pay taxes as well as other property. It was estimated that the uncollected taxes upon this property aggregated $50,000. The schools of the District were now about to be closed for want of funds. It was a question whether it was not expedient to make the churches pay their taxes, and let the schools be kept open. It was one of the duties of Christianity to instruct the young. He was not in favor of recognizing this defiance of law. Some of the church officers had set themselves up in defiance of law, and resisted the collection of the tax, and now, two or three years after the property has been sold, they come here and ask the repeal of the law. Such a course encourages resistance to the law. The property was legally taxable, and the taxes should have been paid. Had the money been paid, the schools could have been kept open.—Washington Telegram.

WILHOFT'S FEVER AND AGUE TONIC.—For all diseases caused by malarial poisoning of the blood, a warranted cure. No poison, no arsenic, no mercury, no quinine; no bloated face or glaring eyes, no bursting head or breaking back, no weak knees or paralysis agitans from its use! It is safe, invigorating and leaves the patient renewed in mind and body and sound as a dollar. It wipes out all sallowness, and gives a blooming complexion in the place of that sickly, dirt-eating color peculiar to Chills and Spleno-hepatic derangements. WHEELOCK, FINLAY & CO., Proprietors, New Orleans. FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

DON'T FORGET IT—That you ought to read the advertisement so headed in another column of this paper.

The Art of Prolonging Life.

People generally desire long life and good health. Sickness and premature death are almost always due to violations of the laws that govern our physical being, and of which the masses are ignorant. If men knew better they would do better; but how can they avoid an evil that they know not of? While efforts are made through the public schools to give each child a so-called common English education, yet the children are permitted to grow up and enter upon the responsible duties of active life profoundly ignorant of the structure of their own bodies, and the laws of physical being upon which their health and lives depend. They are sent to school and crammed with arithmetic, grammar and geography, by teachers who, in many instances, have never studied physiology and hygiene. They are taught to locate the mountains and trace the rivers of foreign countries, but are never taught to locate the vital organs and glands of their own bodies, or trace the veins, arteries and nerves in their various ramifications. They are instructed in the flow of the tides and the course of the ocean currents, and the philosophy of wind and storms; but they have no correct conception of the relative effects upon their health of breathing pure or impure air, nor has their attention ever been called to the importance of keeping their bodies clean and healthy by regular bathing. The criminality of such neglect in teaching becomes apparent when we consider that the masses, ignorantly violating the laws of health, bring upon themselves sickness, suffering and death that might otherwise be avoided. In this condition of things we welcome into being any work that is calculated to impart to the masses a knowledge of the structure of their own bodies, the laws of health, and the importance of observing those laws. We find Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser to be just such a work. It is physiological and pathological, and the major part of it should be converted into a text-book for the use of common schools. Its careful study will enable the healthy to preserve their health, and the sickly to regain health. Every parent should read it, and, as their children become of proper age, instruct them in the all-important truths it contains. Were this done, much suffering and premature death would be prevented, and many a youth saved from a life of shame and licentiousness. The book contains nearly 1,000 pages, is profusely illustrated with colored plates and wood engravings, and can be had by addressing R. V. Pierce, M. D., World's Dispensary and Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y. Price, post-paid, $1.50.—United Brethren Aid Journal.

DON'T FORGET that the country is full of tramps and thieves, and that you ought to be provided with a weapon of defense. See advertisement in another column headed "DON'T FORGET IT."

The Greatest Discovery of the Age is Dr. Tobias' celebrated Venetian Liniment! 30 years before the public, and warranted to cure Diarrhea, Dysentery, Colic and Spasms, taken internally; and Croup, Chronic Rheumatism, Sore Throats, Cuts, Bruises, Old Sores, and Pains in the Limbs, Back and Chest, externally. It has never failed. No family will ever be without after once giving it a fair trial. Price, 40 cents. DR. TOBIAS' VENETIAN HORSE LINIMENT, in Pint Bottles, at One Dollar, is warranted superior to any other, or NO PAY, for the cure of Colic, Cuts, Bruises, Sores, etc. Sold by all Druggists. Depot—10 Park Place, New York.

At this season of the year the human system is liable to become disordered from the insufficient efforts of the liver to discharge the excess of bile. If nature is not assisted in her efforts, severe bilious attacks or prostrating fevers necessarily follow, causing great suffering and even death. A little timely precaution, however, will prevent all this, and may be found in that favorite household remedy SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR has been in use for half a century, and there is not one single instance on record where it has failed to effect a cure when taken in time according to the directions. It is, without doubt, the greatest LIVER MEDICINE in the world; is perfectly harmless, being carefully compounded from rare roots and herbs, containing no mercury or any injurious mineral substance. It takes the place of quinine and calomel, and has superseded these medicines in places where they have heretofore been extensively used. Procure a bottle at once from your druggist. Do not delay. Give it a fair trial, and you will be more than satisfied with the result obtained.

CAUTION.

As there are a number of imitations offered to the public, we would caution the community to buy no Powders or Prepared SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR unless in our Engraved Wrapper, with Trade-Mark, Stamp and Signature unbroken. None other is genuine.

Democratic County Convention

TO BE HELD

SATURDAY, JUNE 22nd, 1878.

The Democrats of DeKalb county are requested to meet in convention at Auburn, on Saturday, June 22, 1878, for the purpose of nominating candidates for the several offices to be voted for the coming fall election, and for the transaction of other business before the convention.

By direction of the Democratic County Central Committee the Democrats of the several townships are requested to select, on June 15, 1878, their proportion of delegates to meet at Auburn on said 22nd day of June, 1878, as at a delegate convention. J. R. LANNING, CHAIRMAN
DeKalb Co. Dem Cen. Com.

—Court opened Tuesday with a full attendance—of attorneys, and the usual preliminary motions are being made. Not so much of a criminal docket this term. The term will continue three weeks.

—At last Packard has been removed from the country. He had to be provided for, for the part he took in the election frauds in Louisiana, and as they did not want him in that state, he was packed off to Liverpool as consul, and now the country breathes easier.

—We are glad to learn that the Democracy of Whitley county are becoming thoroughly united, and that the ranks are closing up firm and strong. A citizens ticket, the usual radical dodge, was put up against it in Columbia City last week, and the gallant Democracy scooped them bad.

—We are glad to note that the Capital of our state is not so black as she has been painted. The democrats gained nine councilmen and came out of the late election with flying colors. This shows the value of organization. Indianapolis is not so black as she has been painted, and if democrats there as well as elsewhere, will pull together, they can accomplish a great deal.

—The usurpation of Hayes was a deliberate circumvention by fraud of the people's will in the country where the right of the people to rule themselves is the foundation stone of the government. How great that fraud was, and by what unholly means it was accomplished, the country is just beginning to be fully apprised by such revelations as that made by Senator Conkling, and the still more recent confession of the scoundrels who stole the vote of Florida.

—"Pusillanimous" is the word which Watterson uses to describe the present Democratic house of representatives.—Inter-Ocean.

Watterson always did possess the happy faculty of using the right word in the right place!—Indianian.

Yes, he said that Governor Williams was an honest man of fine executive ability, but our partizan neighbors never quoted Watterson when he spoke well of Blue Jeans.

—Sam Randall, the Speaker of the House, the salary grabber, who took and kept back pay for two years' service as congressman, came down out of his chair last week, to lecture the republicans on economy.—Lagrange Standard.

And while he spoke there sat Garfield, who was Randall's opponent for Speaker of the House, with his salary grab and Credit Mobilier record, and the Standard never once saw him. It's best to keep track of these things as we go long.

—The Cherubusco Herald is about the only paper we have yet seen advocating the Bankrupt Act It should have been repealed long ago, as it has been the means of inflicting more injury upon the business interests of the country than any other ever passed. A man goes into business, borrows money from the merchant, the farmer, the mechanic, gets credit for goods, sells them and pocketing the proceeds, takes the benefit of the bankrupt act. It shields rascality, encourages dishonesty and robs the honest and industrious, and should be repealed.

—If you want you Baby to look bright do not put it to sleep with laudanum when restless, but use Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup. 25 cents a bottle. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

GARRETT, IND., May 15, 1878.

EDITOR COURIER, Dear Sir:—As I have been sojourning a few weeks in the young and thriving village of Garrett, I have noticed that your paper is well patronized and appreciated among the better class of the citizens here, so I thought before leaving, I would write up a few items for your valuable paper about the town of Garrett and high life therein. Last Monday was election day for electing town officers, on which occasion I shall make a few brief remarks. It appears that the chief question at issue was in regard to the school as there has been and is yet considerable dissatisfaction with that institution and the new town trustees have the appointing of a school trustee this spring. Now, as I have been stopping here a few weeks, I have had a fair opportunity of hearing some of the complaints of the people, and to my surprise my attention was called to the following item in the Garrett "Herald" of May 2nd: "One or two—possibly three—no, by the horned spoons, we don't know of any one that is sure they are not well pleased with the School Board." Now this editor reminds us very much of one of Dan Rice's sayings. He said he could teach every animal he had ever tried except a goose, and that he never could teach a goose more than one thing, for as sure as he tried to teach it the second thing, it forgot the first. We notice this is just the case with the Garrett editor. He can write one or two—possibly three, lines in an item, but just as sure as he tries to write the fourth, he forgets, like Dan Rice's goose, what was in the first line, and is sure to make a horned sponned "ass" of himself. As regards the election on Monday last, I shall take up only one ward at a time. There were some anxious office seekers who did not get the nomination at the regular caucus; a secret caucus was called at the DeKalb House Saturday evening before the election, placed a sentinel at the door with orders not to admit any dog except he wore a brass collar, and in order to make a success and gratify a high-tone, eager desire for a petty office a certain banker was put on the ticket for trustee, from the first ward, as a competitor against a working man who works for a living in the B. & O. shops. The election was conducted in this way. The man who had received the regular nomination went to his daily work as usual, appearing as though he cared very little for the office, and not being schooled enough in trickery and dishonesty to see how he could make any money out of an office with no salary attached. A certain banker could be seen on the streets all day, everything was brought up that could be procured to defeat the workingmen The following elements were united: A soda fountain, a fellow from across the railroad, who has never a cent, had plenty of money all day, offering to set up the beer to those who would vote the ticket he was peddling; then a foreman was out trying to buy votes by offering to set up the cigars; the pet lamb of the B. & O. blacksmith shop, formerly known as a constable, was taken over and out of the second ward, doubtless to act as usher between the polls and the demijohn, which was reported to be not far distant; the old saint who acts as foreman in the blacksmith shop, who lives outside the corporation, and has never paid a cent of taxes to the town, was busily engaged all day electioneering his men to go and vote in the first ward, trying at the same time to injure a fellow workman. Such a conglomerated mass of temperance intelligence, wealth, poverty, "soda-water," cigars and long "ears" never was heard of being united on any issue before, and probably never will again Any person would suppose from the braying of the "horned spooned editor" that there had been another Bull Run battle, when with all these combined powers they got five majority.

I wish to call the attention of the public to the Garrett "Herald" of May 2nd, in which we find the following: "Blackguardism has always been used in place of argument by the democratic press." Now, if this is true, the Garrett "Herald" must certainly be a democratic sheet, for by the "horned spoons" a more lying, blackguarding paper never was published in this country by any person or party. The "Herald" was brought to Garrett to work for the interest of the town in general and the republican party. Instead of that it is busily engaged in finishing up the dirty work which its predecessor was not capable of doing Respectable industrious people who have come here and invested all their money in property, and are trying to make an honest living by the sweat of their brow, are blackguarded, their reputations defamed through the columns of this licentious paper, irrespective of party, God, man or the devil. The prospects are inviting to come and invest in Garrett with all this looking them in the face. By the "horned spoons" there never was as much dissatisfaction with any school in this or any other state, as there is in Garrett at present. The citizens have applied to the school trustees, to the county superintendent for relief from tyrrany and abuse of their children, and all of no avail. So before another week goes around, the assistance of the district prosecuting attorney will be called on for relief. Children have come home to their parents wounded and bleeding, others who have been refused to go out of the school room to answer a call of nature, have come home in the most filthy condition, all of which will be shown up next week in its true light, irrespective of the "wild goose" editor and the high popolorum "croquet" clique.

JUSTICE.

Deformities Cured.

The Fort Wayne Journal Says: "Dr Jas. Yarnell, formerly of this place, but now of Rome City, Noble county, Ind., was in our office on Monday last, on his way to Bluffton and other localities, where he has patients under treatment. The Doctor is a social, intelligent, educated gentleman, who has had twelve years successful practice in treating all sorts of deformities, including curvatures of the spine, club feet, and cases pronounced incurable by others. He performs his cures without the knife, simply assisting nature in her work by the application of scientific and ingeniously constructing apparatuses, which are carefully manufactured under the direct supervision of the Doctor, and applied with his own hands. He guarantees a cure in every case he treats. In making this favorable mention of Dr. Yarnell's success in treating deformities, the writer speaks from personal knowledge of the Doctor's successful and skillful treatment, and can recommend him to the public, assured that he thoroughly understands treating deformities of children, and persons of all ages, scientifically and successfully.

[We believe the Doctor is fully deserving of all that is said of him in the above, and those in need of his services will do well to give him a call. He will be at Long's Hotel, Waterloo, on Monday, May 27th, where he can be consulted.]

U can make money faster at work for us than at anything else. Capital not required; we will start you. $12 per day at home made by the industrious. Men, women, boys and girls wanted everywhere to work for us. Now is the time. Costly outfit and terms free. Address True & Co., Augusta, Maine.

A Trip to Wabash.

When the intelligence was received here that there was to be a gala day at Wabash, on the occasion of the laying of the corner stone of the magnificent new Court House to be erected the coming summer, Mr. W. J. Austin, Col. J. L. Davis, ourself and the ladies of this trio, immediately made preparations to participate. Having passed all around it, and even through it at lightning speed, we had a desire to visit Wabash, see its many attractive features and enjoy its hospitalities. Our reception was the reverse of that which greeted Ulysses on his return from the seige of Troy, for kind friends were there to receive and entertain us as the average Wabashian only knows how.

We were the guests of W. K. Davis, Esq., and his accomplished lady. Kirby is one of those rough diamonds, not so dazzling at first, until you get beneath the exterior, to find a kind, genial temperment, and a personnel of a clear, intelligent character with a vein of quiet humor all the way through. And we shall always remember the estimable qualities of the other side of the house. Mrs. Davis is the embodiment of that sparkling vivacity and enjoyment, which fills a home from cellar to garrett with what we all should live for. Affable, courteous, witty, with superior accomplishments, a fine, pure, sweet soprano voice, no wonder all love and admire her.

In the evening, after our arrival, the citizens band, through some fortuitous circumstance, gave us a serenade, regaling us with several of their fine classical selections. The surest index to the enterprise, thrift and industry of a place is, in our opinion, a good band, and we looked no further for evidences of the existence of these elements, after listening to the superb playing of the above organization.

The weather was not propitious for the laying of corner stones, and yet, as large a crowd was in attendance as we expected to see with fine weather. The attendance and parade of the Masons and Odd Fellows was very fine, the procession being over a mile long. Rev. Marine made a splendid address, and the exercises were concluded with an improved condition of the weather. In the evening the fine Commandery of Knights Templar, of Warsaw gave an exhibition drill at the Opera House, which was witnessed by a large and appreciative audience. After that came a social hop in which fair ladies and brave men, (men who had dared the mud and copious showers of rain but a few hours before), mingled with an ease and elegance always delightful and enjoyable We noticed many handsome toilets among the fair sex, from which we conclude that Wabash is not behind her rivals, in a love for the beautiful.

The new Court House already presents an apperance that would indicate a first class structure, and it would be an easy matter to induce the uninitiated to believe that it is to cost $200,000. It is most handsomely located on the edge of the cliff, overlooking the major part of the city, and will give a lovely view of the historical Wabash valley.

Of course we called at the Courier office to meet the enterprising publishers, Messrs. Collins & Linn, who are sending out a paper whose popularity is not confined to Wabash alone. The Courier like its namesake is a Democratic paper, realizing a thrifty vigorous life in one of the blackest soils in the State, for it is terribly Republican in that county. Our friend Linn meets the emergency and grasps the situation with a firm, strong hand. Spicy, pungent items flow from his facile pen with the regularity of a clock, and all recognize and appreciate his efforts.

We met our old friend Thad Butler, and the senior of the Plain Dealer, and renewed a pleasant accquantance formed years ago. The P. D. is a fine local paper, and the present publishers have made it a neat newsy journal. It advocates the interest of the Republican party, but, heavings, it will require a revolution of nature to change that black abode.

Mr. L. M. Davis, brother to J. L. of this place, is doing a fine business in the boot and shoe line. Lou. is an active, energetic merchant, a pleasant, clever gentleman, and stands well among his fellow-men.

Mr. A. T. Austin, a partner in our boot upside down establishment here, is also engaged in the same line at Wabash, and is doing a fine business. We did not see any boot upside down there and opine that the difference in signs would fully represent the condition of the two brothers, knowing full well that in what ever portion they are their jovial pleasant ways always make them friends.

We conclude our imperfect report with many thanks to the kind friends who favored us so much, assuring them of a most delightful visit in their very delightful city.

—Rev. W. O. Butler met with an accident ner Newville a few days ago, by his sulky breaking down, thowing him out hurting his arm and shoulder.

—Owing to the growing trade of the New York Store, the proprietors find it necessary to increase their stock. Forkner is now in the city buying goods.

—The social for the benefit of the Catholic church, will be entertained by Mrs Wm. McIntyre at her residence, next Wednesday evening. All are cordially invited. L. McTIGHE, Sec'y.

LOOK HERE! DON'T SELL Your WOOL until you see the NEW YORK STORE. tf.

—The ladies social connected with the Presbyterian church, will give a strawberry festival next week. Notice of the day will be given through the papers in their next issue.

—The agricultural association at Angola, will give a series of races on Thursday and Friday, June 6 and 7. About $700 in premiums are offered and an interesting time is expected.

From San Francisco.

We have received the following letter from our correspondent who left here a few days ago for the Pacific slope. As he don't like to write for a Democratic paper he addresses it to us personally:

FRIEND TOM.—I am all sound and safe in California after a trip that was a pleasant one on account of the season, it not being the time of year for dust on the Pacific railroad. My journey was devoid of all excitement, until we crossed the mountains into the golden State, when the most magnificent views in the world passed before you, as you are whirled through tunnel after tunnel to emerge every time upon some of the most wonderful scenes in nature, never excelled in any other portion of the globe.

The conductors on the Central Pacific are all men of giant size, selected with great care on account of the many rough characters who infest the principal towns along the route, and who have to be dealt with by men who can manage them. I thought of trying conclusions with one of them but as he was about six inches taller than I was I let him go, besides I was on business and had no time to fool away. The weather is very warm here through the day, but the nights are cool and very pleasant. The rainy season is over, and no more rain, except what comes from the heavy fogs which are a characteristic feature the city of San Francisco, will be here before Nov. or Dec. Plenty of vegetables of all kinds in the markets. New potatoes, strawberries, onions, green peas, cabbage, &c. Living is dear or cheap as you choose to make it. I have a room for which I pay $9 per month, get my meals where I happen to be. I expect to be all settled here within 60 day, and have several good chances to make money. The laws of this State are such that a man is not looked upon as a criminal if he happens to have a little money. Money brings just what a man agrees to pay for it, (in that respect it would just suit Jim. Hazzard), generally about 5 per cent. a month. There are a great many rumors afloat about the fitting out of Privateers in this port by the Russians to prey upon British vessels, and a Russian Man of War is at anchor in the harbor now. I miss the daily papers we got at Auburn. The papers here are not showing half the enterprise the Chicago papers are. By the way, Tom, you promised to send me the COURIER, but true to the traditions of your party have not done so, why is this thus. I would like to be at Auburn for a few hours to see the boys I called my friends. I am afraid they will not be well raised since I left them to take care of themselves. Please give my regards to all. I was on a visit through Chinatown the other day They are a wonderful people, have a quarter of the town to themselves. One of their lodging houses burnt down yesterday and six of them were burnt up. The old Globe theater building is rented by them as a lodging house, and I am told that 2500 make their home in it. Sunday is a day of fun, instead of rest, here, picnics of every kind, theaters horse racing, &c. going on from daylight till dark. After dark every body is on the streets. I am going to-morrow (Sunday) out to Woodward Gardens to a balloon ascension, and to see a troupe of Arabs who perform there every Sunday. If you can find time to write to me and keep me posted in Auburn gossip &c., I will be much obliged, as a bit of news from home is a great thing to one so far away. A. C. DAWSON.

Lecture.

The Good Templars of this city have secured the Rev. W. Langdon Sanders to deliver his great lecture on "Wit and Humor," in Ensley's Hall on Tuesday, May 21st. Under the auspices of the Northwestern Lyceum Bureau, J. S. Bliss manager Mr. Sanders has been repeatedly called to the same platform, and the press in all the cities where he has lectured has given him the highest praise.

The press everywhere is seconded by the public in pronouncing "Wit and Humor," as delivered by Rev. W. L. Sanders, one of the most charming lecturers ever produced.—Exchange.

The lecture on "Wit and Humor," by Rev. Mr. Sanders, last evening, spoke volumes for him.—Times, Austin, Minn.

Rev. W. Langdon Sanders is announced to speak the coming season before Literary Associations for J. S Bliss, Manager of the Northwestern Lyceum Bureau of Janesvill, Wisconsin. He is spoken of very highly, and those who are fortunate enough to hear him may expect an intellectual treat of superior sort.—Chicago Standard.

In order that "Wit and Humor" may be placed within the reach of all, the Committee have placed the price tickets at 25c. Reserved seats can be secured at Willis' book store without extra charge. Doors open at 7 o'clock' lecture at 8. COM.

—We note with great satisfaction that Fort Wayne is making prepgrations to build an opera house. Plans are being made by our efficient architectural friend, T. J. Tolan, of that city, which indicates a very fine building. The Masons are at the front of the movement, and we believe the enterprise will be accomplished. The plans show excellent ventilation and plenty of exits two features that should receive the fullest consideration in the erection of public buildings. It is gratifying to see that our neighbor has awakened from her Rip VanWinkle sleep —Go to McCord's for Yellow Jersey Sweet Potato Plants, Tomatoes, &c., opposite the M. E. church, Auburn.

—J. Miller has engaged in the harness trade at Newville, and is getting up nice sets of harness at very low rates. He warrants good work, and attends promptly to repairing, &c.

—Waterloo corporation elected its old town officers on Monday last with one exception. Mr. Kahn, a greenbacker was elected.—Garrett Herald.

We advise Mr. Kahn to sue for $10,000 at once.

—Another big reduction at the Fruit House, Fort Wayne. Pickled pork reduced to five cents per pound, smoked shoulders 5c, breakfast bacon 7c, second grade coffee 16c.

—The advice from Europe relative to the war, are about as contradictory as election news. We are for war, if war must come, if not, we hope any attempt to show fight will be immediately frowned down.

—Farmers go to N. & G. Ensley's and see their Weir and Carter Cultivators, the latter taking first premium at four state fairs. A new thing and a tongueless cultivator. 2t.

—We understand that Mrs. D. Barnett, while walking along on the sidewalk, in company with her husband, on Sunday last, was tripped by a loose plank in the walk and fell with such force as to break her wrist.—Butler Record.

—Mr. Jas. Anderson has just received a splendid stock of second-growth timber, from which he is manufacturing first-class buggies, carriages, &c., and desires the inspection of the public generall.

—Our accomplished young friend W. T. Bope, Esq., late of Butler, now of North Manchester, was in town last week. Mr. B. has selected a fine field for his talents and is meeting with deserved success.

—The new Catholic church at Avilla will be dedicated May 19th, 1878. Excursion trains will be run from Fort Wayne, Kendallville, Albion and Auburn. Train leaves Auburn Junction at 9 o'clock a. m. and returns 5:15 p. m.

—The Plymouth Democrat, under the admirable management of Col. Dan McDonald, is making rapid strides in journalism. With a new dress and well filled columns, it makes an appearance that is neatness itself.

—Supt. O'Rourke, of the Grand Rapids road, has launched a new steamer on the lake at Rome City, for the still greater entertainment of visitors to that delightful watering place. They call him Captain now.

—The Town Board met last Friday evening, and organized by electing A. L. Hollopeter President. There were quite a number of candidates for the position of Marshal, but after a number of ballots, Joseph Stafford was chosen, at a salary of $450 a year.

—Auburn "Courier:" Pretty girls and pretty spring hats now trot the streets. The hats attract the most attention.

What has soured Bro. Mays? Can it be possible that those beauties do not smile on him?—Lagrange Register.

No, but the hats are the largest.

—A. O. Miller and his fine troupe gave "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and the "Hidden Hand" here last Monday and Tuesday nights to large houses. The Jubilee Singers with him contribute largely to the entertainment, while Mr. and Mrs. Miller always in their superb rendition of character.

—For a sure cure of neuralgia, rheumatism, swollen Joints, headache, lame back, sore throat, and all nervous diseases, use only Lawson's Curative, the celebrated and wonderful pain killer. It is warranted to effect a permanent cure when faithfully used. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

—We observe that our excellent friend Engine Smith of Fort Wayne is a candidate for Cheif of Police of that City. There is only one thing against Mr S. He is to good a man for the position and as it would be an innovation on the old established custom of appointing such a one he will hardly get there. We ask for a dispensation however in his behalf —That new paper at Fort Wayne got mad at what we said about it the other week, and we thank the "Republican" for copying it, as we hadn't room. As to doing service between the handles of a plow, nothing would give us more pleasure, and we believe it would be just as honorable as editing a newspaper. In fact we have done such work and never felt humiliated.

—Mr. Jno L. Davis and Mr. Tom. Mays, editor of the Auburn COURIER, with their ladies, were the guests of Mr. Kirby Davis during their visit this week. We acknowledge pleasant calls from these genial gentlemen during their stay in Wabash. Tom Mays is one of the most jolly, rollicking, whole hearted editors in all Hoosierdom and deserves an abundant measure of success. By the way, Tom is a candidate for County Clerk subject to the decision of the Democracy of DeKalb, and most assuredly he is deserving of that distinction.—Wabash Courier.

—We live at the bottom of an ocean of air, and of necessity breathe more or less of the heavier poisonous germs constantly floating through it. To prevent such from asserting their prejudicial effect upon the system, Dr. Bull's Blood Mixture should be used as its efficiency is simply wonderful. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

Orange Blossoms.

That prince among genial gentlemen, A. S. Leas, Esq., of Waterloo, got away with one of the Teems at Bryan, the other day. Being in the livery business he understands how to manage them. In other words, he was married to a handsome, accomplished lady, Miss Aurelia Teems, at that place, last week. A happy prosperous journey, teeming with prosperity is what we hope vouchsafed the happy couple.

—One of the best Norman horses ever brought to this county, is the fine stallion owned by Mr. A. W. Allen, of Newville. He is a dapple roan, weighs 1700 and is of splendid build, finely muscled, good strong limbs, docile and intelligent. He is at Newville the first part of the week and at Butler the latter part.

—One of the cosiest and most confortable little drug stores in the county, is that under the management of Steepleton & Bowman, at Newville. They keep a good stock of drugs and medicines, and are enjoying a very good trade. Dr. Bowman is kept on the road almost day and night in his practice, and has well earned the name of being a splendid physician. Our friends certainly deserve success.

Pleasant Lake Re-opening.

The handsome pleasure grounds at Pleasant Lake will be opened as a summer resort on to-morrow, Friday, with fine sport and amusement for everybody There are premiums offered to the homely and the pretty, so that all are encouraged to go. Com. Simmons the superintendent has made ample arrangements for the entertainment of all, and we would like to see a large number present.

Remember the Day.

A grand excursion will be given to Nebraska from Ft. Wayne on the 28th of this month, which will arrive at Lincoln the next day. This will take you into the heart of the most magnificent country in the west, and all should avail themselves of the cheap rates offered. Train to leave on Tuesday at 2:40 p. m. For particulars, rates, &c., apply to Fisher & Tons, Fort Wayne, Indiana.

—Enos Weaver, Esq., who for a long time had been suffering from that dread disease, consumption, died last Friday night in the 42nd year of his age Mr. W. was a genial, pleasant gentleman with a warm heart and kind disposition. He leaves a wife and two children. The funeral services took place last Sunday at the Presbyterian church and he was buried with masonic honors, a large number of visiting brethren being present from Butler and Waterloo.

—Senator Don Cameron married Miss Lizzie Sherman of Cleveland last Thursday. She is a daughter of Judge Sherman, and a niece to the General and Senator. The presents amounted to over $100,000. Yet there are thousands asking, begging for employment, going down to abject misery, want and woe, perhaps soon to become tramps and criminals, simply because they have no work and no means, while thousands of dollars are heaped upon those that need them not. Such is human life. Contentment is far better than riches.

St. John and New Era Items.

—W. H. Keeran gave us a correction last week.

—St. John has got the boss croquet grounds.

—Broughton is troubled with school furniture agents every week. Buy a shot-gun; B.

—J. B. Ross sent us an item and many thanks. We were greatly disappointed, for we expected many stamps.

—Cedar Creek has a Sunday text school. It is an organization between a Sunday School and a Lyceum. Very good. SOIGANAUX.

REPORT OF THE ST. JOHN SCHOOL.

Names of pupils who have been neither tardy nor absent during the first month: Callie Fair, Jennie Broughton, Ralph Larimore, Perry Fair, Elmer Knott, Jimmy Hogue, Elmer Wilderson, Clyde Wilderson, Jimmy Doty, Oscar Doty, Eliza Housel.

CALLIE WHETSEL, Teacher.

Record of scholars attendance and punctuality during the past month. Those with perfect attendance are as follows: Willard West, Claude West Mary Pepple, Leach Pepple.

Attendance of others: Joseph Pepple Allan West, Lee West, Jesse Reek, Ella Pepple, Ella Shoaff, Lizzie Work, May West, Britty Whetsel, Clara Gulling, Allie Steffey.

CARRIE B. ESPY, Teacher.

Pyles' School House, District No. 8.

—Rev. Tedrow is holding a series of meetings.

—We have a Sunday School here in a prosperous condition.

—We think our wheat is damaged considerable with frost.

—Wm. Meese delivered a sermon here last Sabbath to an attentive audience.

—Miss Dora M. Hall, of Spencerville, is visiting her friends at D. D. Metcalf's

—J. B. says it fashionable now to snore in church. It may be quite a luxury to indulge in, but it looks suspicious, John.

—Miss Susie Hornberger was made the recipient of a beautiful quilt, presented to her by her scholars. Susie is a splendid teacher.

—J. P. says he is determined never to get married, bound to live an old bachelor. James, rather bad news for marriagable ladies S. S. S.

Spencerville Items.

—Cicero Emanuel has returned home after a sojourn of some months in Kansas.

—Peter Carrol fell down stairs at J. Baltz's a few evenings ago, and received severe bruises.

—J. R. Nichols was thrown from a wagon on Saturday morning, and seriously though not dangerously hurt.

—As Wm. Benninghoof was returning home on Saturday afternoon, in going down a decent on the east side of the bridge, the tongue of the wagon broke, the horses taking fright ran away and overturning the wagon containing four persons, fortunately seriously injuring none of the occupants.

—The use of whisky is an evil, and that of tobacco a pernicious habit, but the careless use of fire a dangerous one. The combined use of the three came near proving an expensive one to the property of Mr. J. Baltz near town. An individual in his employ went to his barn one evening last week, and it is supposed by the careless use of his pipe set fire to the hay. Fortunately help easily procured saved the building before much damage was done.

LaOtto Items.

—Z. A. Young has taken up his residence in the village.

—Dr. Rother of Butler Center, gave LaOtto a call last Friday.

—Lee Zern, of Kendallvill, visited his parents at this place last Wednesday.

—Pres. Sauler, of Huntertown, is manipulating lightning for H. C. Kinzie.

—Wagon-maker Hite, of Green Center has started a shop in Young's old furniture shop.

—Constable Upton is now the owner of the noted Thunderbolt, for which he paid the fabulous sum of fifteen hundred cents.

—Will Wyatt is furnishing the Churubusco paper with very interesting and pleasant items from LaOtto.

—If those parties who are so anxious to see the COURIER, would only go down into their pockets and grasp two silver dollars, and send them to the COURIER office, they would be accommodated without much trouble.

St Joe Items.

—Jammie, the pump man has a new outfit from top to bottom.

—The Sunday school at Sodom School House was reorganized on Sunday last, with S. C. Baker, Superintendent.

—This week closes our school for the spring term. Miss Scholes has conducted the school to the satisfaction of all interested.

—John in a speech delivered at the store Saturday night gave his views of a miser, which was well appreciated by his audience.

—O. H. Widney wants to buy a reaper. What's become of all the machine men. Come one come all, he will treat you well and feed you all.

—Chris thought himself competent to act as chairman of the Greenback meeting, but like Hayes they must have him for President. Nothing like being president, Chris, if it is of a greenback speech.

—Some of the boys and some who are not boys, had a little fun on Sunday with a couple of Italian organ grinders. Shell out your nickels boys the next time and have a monkey show.

—The frost of Sunday night done considerable damage in this vicinity. Those who had tomatoes and sweet potatoes planted, will have the pleasure of replanting. Potatoes that were above the ground have disappeared as if by magic, as have also the potato bug.

—A Dr. Dunlop of Waterloo, addressed a few of the citizens of this vicinity on the greenback question on Tuesday night last. The Doctor's causes for hard times is pretty well set forth, but when he comes to the remedy he had not that part of his little piece well studied, that is our impression.

—Next week we propose to give the names and weight of some of St. Joe's fat girls. DUROC.

A MOST LIBERAL OFFER!

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

E. Remington & Sons, the manufacturers of the well-known Remington rifle, having extensive shops at Ilion, N. Y., have compromised with their creditors. Their liabilities are stated at $1,000,000, and assets $4,000,000.

The Fenians are said to be preparing for a raid into Canada in the event of England becoming involved in a war with Russia. Much activity exists among the Irish Nationalists in Buffalo and other Eastern cities, and military preparations are undoubtedly being made.

Two inmates of the Lunatic Asylum at Blackwell's Island, N. Y., died the other day, and one was seriously poisoned, from drinking a mixture of ale and chloroform, which they had surreptitiously secured....The celebrated running horse Leamington fell dead at Chestnut Hill, near Philadelphia, a few mornings ago.

A New York dispatch states that the Syndicate has subscribed for an additional $5,000,000 of 4½ per cent. bonds, making $25,000,000 taken of the $50,000,000 contract.

There is considerable excitement in New York and other Eastern cities concerning reported preparations of the Fenians to invade Canada in the event of a war between England and Russia.

A party of Russian naval officers arrived in New York a few days ago. They were interviewed by the irrepressible reporter, and, in answer to inquiries regarding the mission of the Cimbria to America, stated that she had on board a number of Russian naval officers who are to take command of a certain number of privateers, which they intend to purchase and fit out, if they can find suitable vessels in this country.

The Home Mutual Insurance Company, of Boston, has been enjoined, and will close up its affairs. Assets, $741,880; liabilities, $1,449,183; outstanding risks at present, $900,000.

THE WEST.

There has been a serious revolt in the penitentiary at Michigan City, Ind. John Kennedy, a desperate character, under sentence for life for murder, from Indianapolis, followed by Pink Miller and some twelve or fifteen other dangerous men, made an unsuccessful attempt to break out of prison. They were fired upon by the guards, and Kennedy was shot and seriously wounded. The others became demoralized at the fall of their leader, and retreated to their cells....C. Robert Bailey, of Carlinville, Ill., and George T. Dodge, of Fair Haven, O., students of Wabash College, at Crawfordsville, Ind., were recently killed at the latter place while going on a freight train. Their bodies were frightfully mangled.

A Minneapolis dispatch says a revised list of the losses and insurance by the late fire makes the total loss $824,160, and the total insurance, $519,300. The loss of life is definitely ascertained to be eighteen. Speculation continues to be rife as to the origin of the explosion. The theory of Mr. Christian, of the fire originating in the friction of the dry stones, communicating to an explosive gas generated from mill dust, is generally received. Another theory is that the building became supercharged with electricity thrown off from the shafts and not neutralized by conductors. As to the mills, no doubt is entertained that all will be rebuilt at once. Gen. Washburn states that he will put up a mill on the ruins of the Washburn "A" which, it is believed, will be the largest in the world, containing fifty runs of stones.

The large woolen mills located at South Chicago, Cook county, Ill., have been swept away by fire. Loss estimated at $150,000; insurance, $86,000. The mills will be rebuilt....A dangerous counterfeit note of the denomination of $100, on the Merchants' National Bank of New Bedford, Mass., are in circulation in the West. Look out for them.

Chicago elevators contain 362,715 bushels of wheat, 1,283,250 bushels of corn, 152,628 bushels of oats, 33,604 bushels of rye and 399,449 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 2,231,646 bushels, against 6,319,836 bushels at this period last year.

The existence of a formidable whisky ring, which bids fair to rival in the extent of its frauds the famous St. Louis ring, has been unearthed at Cincinnati. Frauds to the amount of over $1,250,000 have already been discovered. It is alleged that Gen. Weitzel, Internal Revenue Collector at Cincinnati, is badly mixed up in the crooked work.

Advices from the far Northwest report that Sitting Bull and his warriors are actively preparing for another campaign, and that even Red Cloud's band, who were transferred to a new reservation by the Government last fall, are threatening trouble....Hon. J. Donald Cameron, United States Senator from Pennsylvania, was married at Cleveland, Ohio, last week, to Miss Sherman, niece of the Secretary of the Treasury, and of Gen. Sherman. The wedding was an unusually brilliant affair. One hundred thousand dollars' worth of presents were bestowed.

THE SOUTH.

Advices from Texas say the band of train-robbers that has for several months been plundering the Houston and Texas Central and Pacific railroads has been broken up, and a number of the gang arrested....A son of Col. Fitzsimmons, Marshal of Georgia, acting as deputy, and pursuing a gang of illicit distillers, recently succeeded in capturing some of them armed, and, in default of evidence of the work they had undoubtedly been engaged in, he caused them to be put on trial for carrying concealed weapons, and convicted them all. Such a trial was a great novelty in that section, and the result was a matter of general surprise.

POLITICAL.

The President has nominated ex-Gov. Packard, of Louisiana, as Consul to Liverpool, Eng., and ex-Gov. Lucius Fairchild, of Wisconsin, for Consul General to Paris, France.

Indiana municipal elections: Indianapolis—Total vote, 13,180; Republicans, 6,220; Democrats, 5,748; Nationals, 1,212. Lafayette—The Republicans elect four Councilmen and the Democrats two; total vote, 2,783, of which the Nationals cast 465. South Bend—Republican candidate for Mayor elected; Council a tie. Fort Wayne—Democrats carried seven wards; Republicans two. Terre Haute—Nationals elected the Mayor; Council stands four Democrats, one Republican, one National. New Albany—Republicans chose a majority of the Councilmen. Richmond—Republicans elect four Councilmen, Democrats one. Jeffersonville—Four Democratic and one Republican Councilmen elected. Greencastle—Entire Republican ticket elected. Logansport—Democrats elect nearly all the Councilmen. Kokomo—Two Democratic and two Republican Councilmen elected.

The State Convention of the National party of Pennsylvania was held at Philadelphia on the 7th inst. Nearly every county in the State was represented. The Chairman, in his address, reviewed the condition of the party, stating that from 5,000 votes in 1876, it has increased to nearly 55,000 votes in 1877, and that, with its thorough organization there was no reason that entire success should not be achieved in the next campaign. S. R. Mason and Christopher Shear were nominated for Governor and Lieutenant Governor on the first ballot. The platform generally re-enunciates the principles of the Toledo platform.

The Nationals of Massachusetts talk of nominating Gen. B. F. Butler for Governor....The first State election of the coming political campaign will be that of Oregon—in June. State officers, a Congressman and a Legislature are to be elected.

GENERAL.

The City of Rio de Janeiro, the first of John Roach's Brazilian line of steamers, which sailed from New York the other day, took out one of Edison's phonographs, a present from Mr. Roach to Dom Pedro, Emperor of Brazil. The phonograph was charged before its departure with the delivery of an address from Mr. Roach to the Emperor, with compliments and congratulations in view of the establishment of the new line. This is the first instance of the use of the phonograph for such a purpose.....It is reported from Mexico that an attempt was made by the revolutionists to oust the Diaz Government of Chihuahua, but it resulted in a failure. A number of conspirators are in jail; others fled.

The authorities at Washington have ordered the United States officers, civil and military, along the Rio Grande, to exercise the utmost vigilance in arresting persons suspected of an intention to invade Mexico for the purpose of overthrowing Diaz.

WASHINGTON.

The Governments of Switzerland and Holland have accepted the invitation of this Government to participate in the conference on the silver question....The Syndicate has decided to take an additional $5,000,000 of the 4½-per-cent. bonds, making the total amount thus far taken under their second contract $20,000,000.

Owing to the forwardness of the general appropriation bills, it is thought by a number of members of Congress that an adjournment can take place toward the last of June.

The Secretary of the Treasury has called in the following five-twenty bonds on account of subscriptions to the 4-per-cent. loan: Coupon bonds dated July 1, 1865, namely: $50, No. 53,001 to 56,000, both inclusive; $100, No. 90,001 to 95,000, both inclusive; $500, No. 63,001 to 66,000, both inclusive; $1,000, No. 114,401 to No. 120,000, both inclusive. Total coupons, $3,000,000. Registered bonds redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after the 1st of July, 1870, as follows: $50, No. 1,901 to 1,950, both inclusive: $100, No. 15,201 to 15,700, both inclusive; $1,000, No. 30,101 to 30,900, both inclusive; $5,000, No. 8,301 to 8,450, both inclusive; $10,000, No. 15,508 to 15,780, both inclusive. Total registered, $2,000,000. Aggregate $5,000,000.

The State Department has been officially notified of the acceptance by Greece of the invitation of this Government to participate in an international conference on the subject of the proper ratio to be fixed between the values of gold and silver. Three European nations having now accepted the invitation, it is competent for our Government, under the terms of the recently-enacted Silver bill, to make definite arrangements for holding a conference.

FOREIGN NEWS.

News comes from Mexico that a revolution has broken out in the State of Durango. The insurgents were preparing to take Camargo, and the garrisons of Mier and Matamoras were expected to pronounce in favor of Lerdo. A force of 300 Lerdists have crossed into Mexico from the Texas side. There was much excitement along the Rio Grande....A Belgrade dispatch says the attitude of the Servian people is increasingly menacing. They are entirely averse to another alliance wi'h Russia....According to late cable dispatches Turkey still presumes upon possible eventual English interference, and refuses to surrender the fortresses according to the treaty stipulation.

The inquiry into the murder of the late Lord Leitrim resulted in the remand of the prisoners. On articles of clothing found in some of the prisoners' houses blood stains were found. The County Inspector of Constabulary said he had received information connecting every one of the prisoners with the murder....The British Government has ordered 1,000,000 pounds weight of lint and other appliances for the wounded....A correspondent in St. Petersburg telegraphs that even the most sanguine in the Russian capital are abandoning all hopes of peace. The arrangements for the congress make no progress. England demands that Russia shall withdraw her army first, and then her fleet will follow suit. An agreement on this question of mutual withdrawal is, therefore, not probable....Corbett & McClymont, builders of London, Putnam, Surbyton, and Westgate-on-Sea, have failed. Liabilities, $7,000,000; assets, upwards of 1,000 houses valued at from $2,500 to $40,000 each.

A cable dispatch states that "at Constantinople another palace revolution is threatened. The conspirators for the overthrow of Sultan Abdul Hamid and the accession of Murad, or somebody else, actually fixed one day last week for the attempt. The fear of Russian interference caused a change of the plans, and the conspirators say they must wait until the Russians go."....The small-pox is epidemic in the city of London.

A dispatch from London says that a basis of arrangement, which the powers desired to submit to the Czar, has been agreed upon. The arrangement is in five divisions: The first division proposes that two regions of Bulgaria north of the Balkans shall be conceded to Russia, and that the southern portion shall remain to a great extent under the authority of the Sultan. The second division relates solely to the Asiatic compensation, which it is proposed shall be reduced to a minimum. The third division relates to the straits question, and will be arranged hereafter. The fourth division demands definite settlement of the war indemnity. Under the fifth division it is proposed that Thessaly and Epirus be accorded the right of self-government, thus securing for them the protection of Europe and national independence....The change in the public opinion of Russia in a peaceful direction is said to be very marked, and to be the result of the recognition of the serious consequence that would inevitably result from a new war.

Prince Bismarck is suffering from the return of his old neuralgic affection....Specials from Berlin state that Russia has decided to refuse to liberate the Turkish prisoners of war numbering 60,000, in consequence of the uncertainty that the Porte will maintain neutrality in the event of a war between England and Russia....Forty thousand Russian reinforcements have been forwarded to Jassy.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS.

Friday, May 3.—Senate.—Not in session.

House.—The House devoted the day to the consideration of the Legislative Appropriation bill, which was completed in committee of the whole. There was a long debate over the amendment increasing the salary of the Commissioner of Agriculture from $3,000 to $4,500. The amendment was finally adopted....Mr. Cutler introduced a bill relative to the transportation of animals, and Mr. Whitthorne presented one to encourage shipping.

Saturday, May 4.—Senate.—Not in session.

House.—Mr. Stephens, from the Committee on Coinage, reported a bill to retire the 5 and 3-cent silver pieces, and to stop their further coinage; also, providing that fractional or subsidiary silver coin shall be a legal tender to the amount of $20, and shall be exchangeable at the treasury for other legal tender money when presented in sums of $20 or over. Ordered printed and recommitted....The House completed and passed the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill. As it came from the committee of the whole the appropriations recommended by the Appropriation Committee were increased by over $97,000. As the bill finally passed the House these were increased by $211,928, making the aggregate appropriation contained in the bill amount to $14,956,698. In the amount of increase is included an additional appropriation of $178,138 for reopening the New Orleans mint....A number of personal pension bills were passed. Among them were pensions to the widows of Gen. Robert Anderson, Gen. Charles L. Lovell, and Admiral Charles Wilkes.

Monday, May 6.—Senate.—The House bill to forbid the further retirement of United States legal-tender notes was brought before the Senate, and temporarily laid aside....The Pension and Indian Appropriation bills were reported from the respective committees and placed on the calendar....The bill to repeal the Bankrupt law was before the Senate, but was laid aside and the bill to repeal the Specie Resumption act was taken up. Mr. Gordon, of Georgia, spoke at length in favor of repealing the law....Mr. McDonald presented a petition signed by a large number of persons praying that Gen. John C. Fremont be included in the bill now pending to place Gen. James Shields on the retired list of the army. Referred.

House.—An effort was made in the House to suspend the rules and pass the bill reducing the tax on tobacco from 24 to 16 cents, but it failed. The yeas were 120 to 115 nays—not two-thirds....Mr. Thompson introduced a resolution declaring that all propositions to change or modify the Tariff law are injurious and detrimental to the general welfare of the people, and that it is unwise to waste time at present in the discussion of the Wood Tariff bill. Referred to the committee of the whole on the state of the Union....Mr. Jones introduced a bill providing for the appointment of a commission to have charge of the investigation of the contagious diseases of farm stock, their causes, means of prevention, cure, etc....The following bills [illegible] demnify Illinois and other States in regard to swamp lands; by Mr. Phillips, to enable soldiers of the late war to preempt land to the extent of 160 acres; by Mr. Morrison, to amend the law relative to a tax on native wines....The House spent much time on the bill establishing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia.

Tuesday, May 7.—Senate.—Mr. Cockrell moved to take up the House bill to forbid the further retirement of United States legal-tender notes, which was read a first time yesterday, and said that he moved to take it up now, so that it might be read a second time. The motion was agreed to—yeas, 33; nays, 25. The bill having been read a second time, Mr. Morrill moved that it be referred to the Committee on Finance. Pending the discussion, the morning hour expired, and consideration of the Pension Appropriation bill was resumed. The bill, after some discussion, was read a third time and passed. ..The Indian Appropriation bill was called up and discussed.....Mr. Voorhees presented a petition of citizens of Camden, N. J., favoring the passage of a law making six hours a legal day's work for all workmen employed by the Government....The Senate, in executive session, confirmed the nomination of Sanford S. Blodgett, of New York, as Consul at Prescott, vice C. S. Sims, recalled. There was a long discussion over the nomination of D. C. Baker, Collector of Internal Revenue for the Austin (Tex.) District, but it went over without action.

House.—After three hours' discussion the House passed, without calling the yeas and nays, the bill establishing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia. The bill provides that the General Government shall pay 50 per cent. of the expenses....The House, by the close vote of 109 yeas to 108 nays, decided to take up the Wood Tariff bill, and Mr. Banks delivered a long speech in opposition thereto.

Wednesday, May 8.—Senate.—Mr. Cockrell called up the House bill to forbid the further retirement of legal-tender notes, and it was on his motion referred to the Finance Committee....Mr. Morgan submitted a concurrent resolution touching the relations of the United States with Mexico.....The Indian Appropriation bill was discussed.

House.—The Speaker announced the Committee on Census as follows: Cox of New York, Mills, Stenger, Ligon, Smith of Georgia, Carlisle, Hatcher, Ballou, Jorgensen, Ryan, and Williams of Oregon.....The Committee on Elections reported in the contested-election cases from the Second District of South Carolina, the Sixth District of Mississippi, and Oregon, declaring the sitting members, Cain (colored), Republican; Chalmers, Democrat, and Williams, Republican, entitled to their seats. The report was adopted....The House discussed the Tariff bill and the bill to regulate inter-State commerce.

Thursday, May 9.—Senate.—After the transaction of some routine business of an unimportant nature, the Senate went into secret session for the consideration of the bill for the payment of the Mexican awards of 1868, and certain alleged fraudulent claims connected therewith. The doors were thrown open, the bill read a third time and passed....The Bankrupt-Repeal bill was then taken up, and a long discussion ensued touching the date at which the repeal shall go into operation....The Indian appropriation bill was passed.

House.—The House passed a joint resolution for the enforcement of the Eight-Hour law for employes in all departments of the Government....A bill was passed to restore certain lands in Iowa to settlement under the Homestead law....Peter Cooper, who was in the city on his way to South Carolina, was voted the privileges of the floor....The Tariff bill was taken up, and Mr. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, addressed the House in opposition to the bill. Mr. Harris, of Georgia, followed in a speech advocating the measure.

Names of Colleges.

Harvard College was named after John Harvard, who, in 1638, left the college £779 and a library of over 300 books.

Dartmouth College was named after Lord Dartmouth, who subscribed a large amount, and was President of the first Board of Trustees.

Brown University received its name from Hon. Nicholas Brown, who was a graduate of the college, went into business, became very wealthy, and endowed the college largely.

Columbia College was called King's College till the close of the war for independence, when it received the name of Columbia.

Bowdoin College was named after Gov. Bowdoin of Maine.

Yale College was named after Elihu Yale, who made very liberal donations to the college.

Colby University, formerly Waterville College, was named after Mr. Colby of Boston, who gave $500,000 to the college in 1866.

Dickinson College received its name from Hon. John Dickinson. He made a very liberal donation to the college, and was President of the Board of Trustees for many years.

Cornell University was named after Ezra Cornell, its founder.

A Law That Ought to Be Revived.

Recent defalcations in Massachusetts have revived the memory of the act by which the Massachusetts Bank was incorporated in 1871, and which provided that if any President, Director, officer or servant embezzled or converted to his own use any of the effects of the bank, he should be set upon the gallows with a rope about his neck, or be set upon the pillory for the space of about two hours, should forfeit all his personal estate and the issues of all his real estate during life. He was also to be rendered infamous and incapable of sustaining any office, civil or military. This shows what was thought of breaches of trust in those honest days, when they were fewer than they are now.

Enormous Increase in the Value of Books.

Those who have old or rare books to sell had best take advantage of the present rage for such articles and make hay while the sun shines. At a sale in Paris the other day a collection of 774 books brought $68,000, among them being five volumes of the original edition of Lafontaine's "Fables," which brought $2,390. A copy of the "Livre de Manteville," 1480, of which only one other copy is known to exist, brought $1,220, and a collection of portraits and eulogies in verse by Mlle. de Montpensier, cousin of Louis XV., dated 1659, brought $2,880, and was sold the next day at an advance to Baron James de Rothschild. And less than twenty-five years ago a copy of this work sold for only $51.

Thirty thousand tons of fresh beef and mutton, worth $8,350,000, were imported into Great Britain from this country during 1877. The bulk of it was sold by the butchers as "prime English beef."

WASHINGTON NOTES AND NEWS.

The House Committee on Agriculture have unanimously recommended the passage of Representative Cutler's bill declaring the Department of Agriculture one of the executive departments.

The treasury authorities say that the coinage of the new silver dollars from this time forward will be nearly $3,000,000 monthly. There continues to be a small demand for the silver dollars themselves, but there is a great demand for the silver-coin certificates.

The figures at the department show that the amount of fractional currency still outstanding is $16,805,000. The printing of fractional currency was stopped in February, 1876, and, although a large amount was on hand at that time, it was mostly destroyed. It is thought at the department that not more than $5,000,000 of the sum still outstanding will ever be presented for redemption.

For the first time in many years gold, silver, and greenbacks are practically on an equality at the paying-teller's window at the treasury. Silver dollars were paid out at par for greenbacks, and either greenbacks, silver, or gold as might be called for by those settling interest accounts. The currency balance is rapidly increasing on account of the exchange of silver dollars, and the legal tenders thus taken are used again in all currency transactions.

The Treasury Department continues to receive information of cases where persons entitled to large sums of interest due in gold have refused gold and taken greenbacks instead. A gentleman collecting interest at the treasury in Washington declined to take $3,000 due him in gold, and made a special request for greenbacks. The saving of gold in this way upon the pending payments of interest will doubtless be very large, and the expectation at the Treasury Department is that it will henceforth make an important element in the increase of gold for resumption purposes. So says a Washington correspondent.

The statement of imports and exports of the United States during the nine months of the current fiscal year, ending March 31 last, shows as follows: Domestic exports of merchandise, $522,581,923; foreign exports of merchandise, $10,449,207; total, $533,031,130. Imports of merchandise, $329,801,629. Excess of exports of merchandise over imports, $203,229,501. Exports of specie and bullion, $23,036,092. Imports of specie and bullion, $19,749,849. Excess of exports of specie and bullion over imports, $3,316,243. Total excess of exports of specie and merchandise over imports, $206,545,744.

Among the valuable public documents recently issued from the Government printing office at Washington is a volume containing the diplomatic correspondence of Hon. E. B. Washburne during the Franco-German war and the insurrection of the Commune, in 1870 and 1871, while he was the Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States at Paris. This correspondence is exceedingly interesting, being not only a record of the eminent services rendered by Mr. Washburne during that period, but embodying the history of two years of the most exciting events that have ever occurred in the French capital or in European war or politics.

The National Redemption Agency at Washington makes the following statement for the past ten months: National-bank notes disposed of, notes fit for circulation assorted and returnable to banks of issue, $120,550,000; notes unfit for circulation assorted and delivered to the Comptroller of the Currency for destruction and replacement with new notes, $39,551,900; notes of failed, liquidating and reducing banks deposited in the treasury, $8,775,600. Total, $168,877,500. Same for corresponding ten months last year, $184,090,500; decrease this year, $15,213,000. Decrease during the month of April just passed, $5,619,100.

The bill recently introduced in the United States Senate by Mr. Booth, of California, for the repayment of land-office fees on certain classes of void land entries, has been reported upon favorably by the Committee on Public Lands. It provides for refunding all fees and commissions paid by innocent parties upon locations of soldiers' and sailors' additional homestead claims, subsequently canceled as fraudulent, and applies likewise to all cases where homestead or timber-culture entries are canceled for conflict, or where, from any cause, the entry has been erroneously allowed and cannot be confirmed. The committee recommended its passage, and it will probably receive favorable consideration.

"The biennial publication of the blue-book," says a Washington telegram, "serves to explode the popular fallacy that Ohio has received a greater number of appointments, according to population, than any other State. A careful compilation of this official roster discloses the fact that Ohio, in respect to the greed of her citizens for office, is much behind many other States, and that Maine and Maryland rank all others as States of officeholders. From this statement it certainly appears that Ohio has been badly abused, and that the Executive has not as yet done justice to the State which produced him. The compilation of officeholders, both in executive departments at Washington and in the foreign service, shows the following excess or deficiency over the proportion to which the States would be entitled if the quota was based upon population: Maine, 97: Connecticut, 22; Maryland, 149; Massachusetts, 68; New Hampshire, 44; New York, 143; Pennsylvania, 53; Virginia, 57. The States that are deficient are: Illinois, 159; Indiana, 113; Iowa, 59; Michigan, 43; Ohio, 57; Wisconsin, 45; and New Jersey, 6."

Old and New.

"Ah! how times have changed since I was young," remarked an old man. "In those days the young fellows would have been spanked if they went courtin' before they were of age; but now they begin courtin' the pillers in their cradles, and it's ten to one if they ain't engaged to their nurses before they can blow their noses."

The Congressional Elections.

The ciphering politicians are already employing their leisure moments in fixing up the chances as to which party can carry the next House of Representatives at the election next fall. The Democrats have now a majority of fifteen. The close Republican districts, those carried by less than 500 majority, were the following:

District.	Rep. Maj.
Fourth California	1
Third Massachusetts	8
Second Florida	18
Third Illinois	468
Ninth Illinois	497
Thirteenth Illinois	262
Fourth Indiana	365
Sixth Indiana	276
Eighth Michigan	388
First Missouri	219
Third Missouri	39
Third New York	262
Third Ohio	451
Tenth Ohio	271
Second Wisconsin	328

In like manner the following table names the districts carried by the Democrats by fewer than 500 votes:

District.	Dem. Maj.
First Connecticut	130
Eighteenth Illinois	20
Ninth Kentucky	398
Sixth Indiana	14
First New Hampshire	43
Eleventh New York	427
Thirty-second New York	409
Second Ohio	75
Fourth Ohio	86
Thirteenth Pennsylvania	81
Eighteenth Pennsylvania	49

In the Eleventh New York District, also, the Democratic candidate was elected by 427, owing to a Republican split, which is counter balanced by a Democratic split in the Second Missouri District, giving it to the Republicans by 314.—Chicago Tribune.

The Crops—Flattering Prospects.

The New York Times of the 3d inst. prints dispatches from twenty-nine States and one Territory, giving the condition and prospects of the crops of the whole country. The correspondents, almost without exception, send good news. The first week in May has not for years seen the general crops of the country in so advanced a condition. An exceedingly open winter, followed by an early spring, has set forward planting and sowing by from three to five weeks. In the New England and Middle States the spring is three weeks earlier than usual. The grass is well up. The apple trees promise an unusual crop. More corn will be planted than last year, but fewer potatoes. The Southern and Southwestern States report a larger acreage and better condition of grains than last year, and an enormous cotton crop is predicted. From all the Western States come the most encouraging reports as to the great staples. The dispatches cover parts of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, and Minnesota, and show an increased acreage of from 10 to 30 per cent. and a bountiful promise of large harvests. Nebraska, Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee, Kansas, and Arkansas expect about 15 per cent. more than their usual yield of cereals. Kansas expects a crop of nearly 20,000,000 bushels of wheat for export. The Indian Territory reports the promise of unusual yields in wheat, cotton, and tobacco. Colorado cultivates one-third more land than in most previous years.

The Late John Morrissey.

Mr. Morrissey's career has certainly been a remarkable one. He was born in the town of Templemore, Tipperary county, Ireland, Feb. 12, 1831; emigrated to the United States when 5 years of age, and for many years resided at Troy and Lansingburg, in New York. He worked for a time in a paper mill, and afterward learned the trade of a brush-maker. Subsequently he engaged as a deck-hand on a Hudson river steamer, and then became a runner for a steamboat company in New York city. In 1852 he went to California, and soon made his appearance as a professional prize-fighter. His engagements from that time until 1858 were numerous and very successful, and he finally won the champion's belt. In the latter year he retired from the ring and entered politics, where he became a power with a certain class in New York. He was finally elected to Congress, and served a term with no discredit to his constituents. His last political experience was as a candidate for the State Senate, in which he had a remarkably close campaign, winning, however, by a small majority. His health has not been good since, and he has been under medical care for many months. At last his strong constitution succumbed, and he was forced to yield to the universal champion. There were many better, and it is certain there were many worse, men than John Morrissey.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Phonograph Edison.

Mr. Edison, as a young telegraph operator at Memphis, was known for the quaint drawings with which, in odd leisure moments, he illustrated the Southern press reports. One habit was to convert the tails of his g's and y's into faces, with the most ludicrous expressions imaginable. Another habit was to draw a railroad curve around a hill, with a train of cars at full speed; on the first car was a T, on the second Y, and so on until Tyler, the signature to the report, was spelled out, and on the last car, barely perceptible around the curve, was "30," or finis. This continued for some time, until a Memphis editor published a paragraph praising in the highest terms the beauty of the sketches, but objecting to them on the ground that the printers took up too much time in admiring them, and in trying to find appropriate cuts to represent them. This was the last of the "illustrated press reports," as Edison was exceedingly sensitive. Who knows but that if he had turned his attention to drawing he might have rivaled Nast?

The number of horses in the United States is estimated at 8,000,000, Illinois ranking first in number; New York next, with over half a million; then Ohio, Missouri, Pennsylvania, Texas, Iowa, Indiana and Kentucky. The number of horses in the New England States is estimated at 500,000, Maine having the largest number, and Massachusetts next.

All Assistant Treasurers throughout the United States have been authorized to exchange silver dollars for greenbacks.

THE TARIFF.

Our Grave and Reverend Senators Indulge in a Little Talk Upon the Subject.

[From the United States Senate Proceedings.]

Mr. Blaine called up his resolution declaring that any radical change in our tariff at this time would be inopportune, and said that he did so for the purpose of having a vote thereon.

Mr. Beck objected, and said that he proposed to discuss the resolution as fully as he could.

A debate followed as to when the resolution of Mr. Blaine should be considered.

Mr. Beck said that all the troubles now existing in the country grew out of the fact that we had built a wall around ourselves and confined our trade to ourselves. Under our present tariff system it was impossible for us to compete with any other nation for the trade of any other people. Until the system should be changed there would be no prosperity in this country, no matter what might be done about gold, greenbacks, or anything else. The country was growing poorer and poorer every day on account of this tariff. He read the resolution of the St. Louis Democratic Convention in regard to tariff.

Mr. Wallace asked if the same party, at its previous National Convention, did not remit the same subject to the Congressional districts.

Mr. Sargent—Did not the convention remit it to the Congressional districts because it nominated the chief of Protectionists—Horace Greeley?

Mr. Beck, continuing his remarks, denounced the present tariff, and said the other day a great parade was made when the steamship City of Para was launched. The President and Cabinet went to the launch, and Representatives and Senators were in attendance. Mr. Roach may have built that ship as cheap as it could be built in England, and an English vessel laden with similar goods might sail side by side with the City of Para to a South American port—Valparaiso, for instance. Upon arriving there the Englishman would sell his goods and take those of the people of Valparaiso in exchange. He would land them free in England, where they would be manufactured. Mr. Roach could not sell his goods, because the people had no money, and he could not take their goods in exchange, because it would cost him from 40 to 60 per cent. in gold to land them at any of our ports. We might build ships and send them out with cargoes, but they could not bring cargoes home on account of our protective tariff. The time was coming when men on this floor and in the other end of the Capitol must cease to legislate to protect monopolists, or other men would be sent in their places. He referred to the works of R. J. Walker and other writers on this subject, and said he proposed hereafter to refer to them more at length.

Before concluding his remarks he yielded to Mr. Blaine, who replied to his arguments, and said he thought it one of the anomalies of American politics that the seat of Henry Clay in the Senate was the place from which a free-trade argument should be made. Blaine argued that it was the sentiment expressed by the Senator from Kentucky (Beck) in his remarks which held back the advancement of the Southern country today. The Senator had referred to the tariff of Robert J. Walker. Did he know it led to bankruptcy and ruin? He (Blaine) was glad to see developed a little collision among his friends on the other side of the subject. Referring to the argument of Mr. Beck, that our ships could not get a return cargo, he said the Senator was mistaken. It was well known we took a great deal more from South America than we sent there. There was no more agitation in that country than this in regard to the tariff.

A medical student forwarded parts of a human body from Chicago to an acquaintance near Genoa, Olmsted county, Minn., to keep for him until he arrived there. The student not coming as soon as expected, his friend hired a boy to bury it, and the boy, to save labor, threw it into a creek, from which water is taken by many families for household uses. The explanation relieved the people of the neighborhood of fears that a murder had been committed, but all the waters of the creek cannot wash away their disgust at its pollution.

THE FINANCES IN THE SENATE.

Able Speeches by Messrs. Ferry, of Michigan, and Voorhees, of Indiana.

Mr. Ferry called up the House bill to repeal the Specie-Resumption act, and read a lengthy argument explaining the amendments reported by the Committee on Finance. He referred to the fact that United States notes and gold were nearly equal to-day, and argued that this was hastened by the passage of the act to restore the standard silver dollar. Alluding to the passage of the act of Jan. 14, 1875, to resume specie payments, he said he joined in it as a compromise measure reluctantly. After explaining the amendments reported by the Committee on Finance, he said that if the bill should be agreed to as amended it would give the country a volume of currency of $990,000,000. He argued that the bill would restore commercial confidence. It would result in our own people holding the national debt instead of foreigners. The recent sale of $50,000,000 of bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury was an assurance of this and an evidence of the advancement of public credit. The Government should now turn its attention to upholding its credit with its own people. He next referred to the coin required by the Government, and said no fears need be apprehended that the Government would have to go abroad to seek coin to meet its requirements. The necessity for denying United States notes their rightful place in the circulation of the country had departed. He believed greenbacks and coin would be at par before the 1st of July next, and referred to the announcements daily made by business firms and banking associations, that they had resumed specie payments. Referring to Wall street, he said all the knowledge of finance did not dwell solely with the wise men of Gotham. New York city, which had been so clamorous for specie resumption, now seemed to be the last to respond. In conclusion, he argued that the passage of this bill would be to settle our finances upon such a basis as would relegate our financial difficulties from the halls of Congress to the marts of commerce.

Mr. Voorhees then took the floor, and read a lengthy argument in favor of repealing the Specie Resumption act. The amount of human misery, wretchedness and vice which the law had caused could not be estimated. It had overthrown property values simply beyond the power of language to describe. Ten thousand million dollars' worth of property has been absolutely confiscated. He argued that the American people had been educated on the subject of finances during the past five years, under such circumstances as breed revolution, unless they were met by measures of relief. The greenback dollar, on account of the confidence the people had in it, had forced itself upon equality with gold. He referred to the gold-room of New York as a mob of gamblers, and argued that the Government could not redeem $50,000,000 with gold within a week's notice from to-day. The notes of the Government had advanced to an equality with gold because the people had forced the Government to treat its own notes with respect. There never was the slightest reason why the paper money of this country should have become depreciated. He favored the adoption of an amendment compelling the Secretary of the Treasury to receive United States notes for duties on imports, not after the 1st of October next, but immediately. That would at once equalize our currency. To resume specie payment on the 1st of January next made certain a dark, perilous, and unhappy future. The farmers had mortgaged their property, and if specie payments were resumed these mortgages must be paid in coin. It was the duty of the American Congress to so legislate as to secure to the farmer his home and to the industrious mechanic living wages. The toiling millions who arose in the morning before light and worked until after dark were constantly being lectured on economy by dwellers in palaces, by masters of hired attendants. The poor were to give up luxuries which they had not in order that the rich might have more. Far was it from him to incite the people, but he would at all times vindicate them against the aspersions of those who first oppressed and then denounced them. He referred to Communism, and said that it was the advocates of extreme measures, those who favored resumption of specie payments, who fostered the spirit of Communism. In conclusion, he argued that the repeal of the Specie Resumption law would bring light and hope to many darkened homes. It would cut the ligatures of contraction, and activity and prosperity would revive. Nothing since peace was declared at Appomattox thirteen years ago would be hailed with such shouts of gladness. Popular relief would insure popular tranquillity, and turbulence in the labor regions would cease.

National Banks and Gold Resumption.

A few national banks have resumed gold payments on their notes with a flourish of trumpets. This is simply a piece of brag. The notes of the banks are so scattered through the country that to pick up those of any one of them would not pay expenses, unless there were an unusual demand for gold. The treasury is the real redemption agency of the banks. In case of resumption, the banks must redeem in greenbacks or gold. When the demand for gold for exportation arises, as it certainly will when the proper money of the country ceases to be hoarded and gold and silver are added to the entire mass of circulation, then the treasury must respond to such demand or suspend. There is no comparison as between a bank (unless it is a central national bank like that of England or France) and the treasury, as respects the demand for gold. The demand for gold on a local bank may depend on its credit, and thus be purely sentimental. The demand on the treasury, on the contrary, is always a commercial demand, except in case of war or a general collapse of credit. When the entire mass of circulation in the country is unduly expanded, the value of the whole as compared with other property, is cheapened, the gold part as well as the paper part. This makes money, the country over, plenty and cheap, and all other property dear. This of course, makes the market of such country the best for the foreigner. He brings his goods here because they fetch more here than elsewhere. But when he comes to consider what he shall take in return for them, he finds it to his interest to take that property which is the cheapest here, but the dearest abroad. This property is, of course, money. But the paper part of our money he cannot take. It will not pass abroad. Consequently he takes the gold part, which is equivalent. This is the drain which our treasury has to meet. And at times it has become so intense that there is no instance in the history of paper money in which a Government has been able to sustain specie payments for any length of time.

Nor is it alone the amount of Government and bank paper afloat which causes this drain on the treasury. When private and corporate credit revives, every bond, note, draft, check, bill of exchange, and all such means of exchanging property are actually and truly so much added to the circulating medium. The effect of such addition is to cheapen the entire mass of money in the country, paper as well as specie, and cause the latter to be exported in exchange for goods, which goods are made nominally dearer here than in any other country. For these reasons we maintain that specie resumption is an experiment, and that there is no instance in the history of the world in which specie resumption by a Government has been successful for any length of time.—Chicago Daily News.

APPRECIATION, NOT RESUMPTION.

[From the New Haven Union.]

John Sherman has given up all idea of resuming specie payments on the 1st of January next, under the Resumption act of 1875. His chief aim is to bring about the appreciation of the greenback to par with gold, and then, like the arrant trickster that he is, endeavor to make the public believe that he has really brought about specie payments.

There is now outstanding a paper circulation of about $640,000,000, every dollar of which ought to be readily convertible into coin when resumption takes place, otherwise there is no resumption. Mr. Sherman claims that he has now $80,000,000 of coin in excess of all demands. He thinks he can issue $10,000,000 of coin certificates in excess of coin deposited, and holds at least $10,000,000 for which no demand will be made. Under his arrangement just made with the old Syndicate he will get $50,000,000 more by the 1st of January, thus giving him a grand total at the date of resumption of $145,000,000 of coin. The price under which Sherman proposes to dispose of $50,000,000 of United States 4½ per cent. bonds to the money brokers is not as favorable as it might be, but Sherman doubtless holds to the view expressed by the New York Tribune, that "the Government could well afford to pay $5,000,000 or even $10,000,000 rather than fail in its undertakings." That is to say, the carrying out of John Sherman's policy will be so beneficial to the capitalists of Wall street that they consider the expenditure of a few millions of the people's money in their behalf quite the thing on the part of the Government. Well, by the most favorable showing, granting that Sherman's schemes all turn out just as he expects, the Government will have $145,000,000 of coin on the 1st of January next, with which to redeem $640,000,000 of paper. Can actual resumption take place on this basis? Of course it would be absurd to argue that such will be the case. The Government and banks can only redeem about one-fifth of the paper outstanding.

Sherman, however, does not propose to resume specie payments, but only to bring about an appreciation of the greenbacks to par with gold. When asked by Gen. Ewing if the banks would not take his small basis away from him at the start, he answered no, and then threw out a threat as to his power to cripple the banks should they show any lack of faith in his plans. He went on to unfold his scheme. He desires Congress to empower him to reissue $300,000,000 of the greenback circulation. That is to say, he wants to float just that amount of irredeemable paper money. He thus accepts as correct the theory of the Nationals, that it is wise to float an irredeemable paper money. And no doubt the proposed action of the Senate Finance Committee in the presentation of a bill making the greenbacks a full legal tender, and receivable for all dues, including customs, has Sherman's sanction. This measure alone if enacted long ago would have brought the paper currency to a par with gold, but coupled with the coin transactions of the Secretary and the remonetization of silver there is no doubt of its effect in bringing about appreciation in 1879.

We have clearly demonstrated that the Secretary of the Treasury has no intention of establishing specie payments. He acknowledges his inability to substitute coin for the volume of paper money afloat. By stealing some of the greenback thunder, however, he proposes, and undoubtedly will bring paper and coin together. Will this restore confidence and start the country upon an era of prosperity? Not at all. A slight move on the European chessboard or a concerted movement on the part of the money brokers of Wall and Lombard streets is likely to take away Sherman's base and force the Government to suspend the so-called specie payments established. Such a plan is not a permanent and satisfactory settlement of the financial problem. The currency will be kept contracted and the volume cannot be adjusted to the wants and necessities of the business of the country. The principle must be recognized that the Government alone possesses the sole prerogative of issuing money, and that an elastic system is the only salvation for our industries. Under Sherman's plan the per capita of circulation will be a trifle above $9, while it should be certainly equal to that of France, which is $36. Sherman and his followers want to perpetuate the national banks, which are a standing menace to the commercial interests and a burden to the people. While they hold sway the currency is sure to be kept inadequate to the wants of business. The experience of France proves that a full legal-tender paper currency can be floated in almost unlimited quantities and maintained at par with coin. This fact called forth the following from Victor Bonnet, the celebrated economist:

"It apparently reverses the economical and financial principles which the authorities on the subject have hitherto labored to establish. * * *

"Is financial science assuming a new aspect, and proving that we have been all wrong in fearing irredeemable paper money? Are we to learn that ideas have made progress, and that we are on the eve of realizing that famous 'wagon-way through the air' spoken of by Adam Smith and Ricardo—a paper circulation without metallic base? * * *

"This is the new problem which agitates the world, and as to which there is more uncertainty than ever, after what has recently taken place in France."

Here is presented the problem of the National party. We favor the establishment of a paper-money system which will not depend upon the caprices of the capitalists of the world for its value, thus giving them an enormous power over the people.

VALUABLE FIGURES.

Something Which the People Should Cut Out and Keep

[From the Albany Workingmen's Advocate.]

NAIL THE LIE.

The hackneyed old song, "There is just as much money in the country as ever there was," has been answered by all currency reformers so often that it looks almost like carrying water into Lake Erie to go over the ground again. But to close up the mouths of the base and ignorant we publish the official record as compiled by the Northwestern Miller, of La Crosse, Wis., trusting that those who doubt the figures will take the trouble to verify their correctness from the official reports:

AMOUNT OF CIRCULATING MEDIUM, SEPT. 1, 1865.
[Compiled from Official Records.]

United States notes	$ 433,160,569
Fractional currency	26,344,742
National-bank notes	185,000,000
Compound-interest legal-tender notes	217,024,160
Temporary loan certificates (ten days' demand)	107,148,713
Certificates of indebtedness	85,093,000
Treasury 5 per cent. legal tenders	32,536,901
Treasury-notes, past due, legal tenders and not presented	1,503,020
State-bank notes	78,867,575
Three-year treasury notes	830,000,000

AMOUNT OF CIRCULATING MEDIUM SEPT. 1, 1877.
[Compiled from public debt statement and last statement of Comptroller of the Currency.]

Greenbacks outstanding	$ 358,040,997
National-bank notes	315,620,247
Fractional currency, including silver	39,172,114
Total Sept. 1, 1877	$ 712,833,258
Contraction from Sept. 1, 1865, to Sept. 1, 1877 (twelve years)	$1,283,845,412

And here is the other side of the picture, which will show for whose benefit this systematic robbery of the people is being made:

The bonded indebtedness of the United States on the 31st of October, 1865, was:

Six per cent. bonds	$ 945,562,512
Five per cent. bonds	218,207,100
Total bonds	$1,163,769,612

On which the yearly interest, the greater part of which was payable in legal-tender notes and not in gold, was as follows:

On 6 per cent. bonds	$56,733,750.72
On 5 per cent. bonds	10,910,355.00
Annual interest on bonds	$67,644,105.72

According to the public-debt statement for Aug. 31, 1877, the total bonded indebtedness of the country was as follows:

Six per cent. bonds	$ 814,341,050.00
Five per cent. bonds	703,266,650.00
Four and a half per cent. bonds	185,000,000.00
Total	$1,702,607,700.00

On which the yearly interest is:

On 6 per cent. bonds	$ 48,860,463.00
On 5 per cent. bonds	35,163,332.50
On 4½ per cent. bonds	9,325,000.00
Total interest	$ 93,348,795.50

RECAPITULATION.

Bonded indebtedness, May 31, 1877	$1,692,964,650.00
Bonded indebtedness, Oct. 31, 1865	1,162,769,612.00
Increase in bonds since Oct. 31, 1865	$ 529,195,038.00
Annual interest, May 31, 1877	$ 93,120,212.50
Annual interest, Oct. 31, 1865	67,644,105.72
Increased annual interest	$ 25,476,106.78
Total increase on bonded indebtedness from Oct. 31, 1865, to Aug. 31, 1877	$ 538,838,088.00
Total increase of annual interest from Oct. 31, 1865, to Aug. 31, 1877	$ 25,704,689.78

How any intelligent man, after reading the above, can fail in seeing and denouncing the infamous policy of contraction, is what we cannot comprehend.

Meeting of the Illinois Central Committee.

The Illinois State Central Committee of the National party recently held a meeting at the Tremont House, Chicago. There were present Gen. Bates, candidate for State Treasurer; Dr. D. B. Sturgeon, of Toledo, Chairman of the National Committee; S. M. Slade, Elgin; Charles Boone, Jo Daviess county; S. M. Smith, Kewanee; R. W. Nelson, Joliet; Thomas Wolfe, Paxton; H. H. Stevens, Macomb; Col. B. S. Heath, Pekin; Dr. W. L. Reed, Piatt county; J. W. Evarts, Centralia; Richard Springer, Plano; James Springer, David Gill, A. W. Herr, J. H. Randall, Chicago.

The meeting was organized with James Springer in the chair, and Thomas Wolfe, Secretary.

After the reading of the minutes of the Springfield meeting, Dr. D. B. Sturgeon, of Toledo, was called upon to inform the committee of the progress of the work of the National Committee. The gentleman said that he had no set speech to deliver, but he represented the party of "the new departure, and could say that all was progressing favorably. Over 200 newspapers in the country had espoused their cause. They expected, within the next two years to elect the Chief Magistrate of this country. He cited the Republican as an example of the growth of a party. The men who founded it started upon the one idea of opposition to the extension of slavery. He went on to discuss organization. Cities must be organized by wards, the country by counties, and all amalgamated and working under the State organization. In each election precinct there was to be instituted a council, composed of not less than ten voters, who should elect four officers. In this way information was to be disseminated by means of documents. A charter was to be granted to each council. The engraving at the head of this document embodied among other things a greenback held down by the silver dollar. The doctor stated that 100 clubs had been organized under the present charter. Previous organizations numbered thousands. Tracts would cost less than a cent apiece. A song book had not been hit upon. It had been difficult to find anyone to furnish just such songs as they needed. Another thing: It had been determined to issue charters to minors' clubs, who it was hoped would cast the telling votes in 1880 that would elect the National President.

At the close of the oration the President stated that the reports from the Congressional districts were in order. The reports from nearly all the districts were highly encouraging.

One of the World's Wonders.

The great fourfold waterfall, the Fall of Garsoppa, on the west side of India, near Honore, little known as it is, is one of the wonders of the world. A writer says of it: "Difficult it is to convey in words any picture of the stupendous scene. There is the river, three hundred yards in width, flowing through soft woodland, its waters, split into many glassy currents, gliding round bowlders, and islets—when, instantly, bed and banks are gone, and in their place are savage, terrific walls of gaunt rock, plunging to depths the eyes dare not look into, down which the shuddering waters fall at four points nearly equidistant on the irregular curve of the abyss. From the lip of the precipice to the dark pools at its foot is an accurately measured distance of eight hundred and thirty feet, and down this prodigious descent pour the four cataracts, each arrayed in its own special robes of grandeur and beauty. First, on the western side, is the Great, or Rajah falls. A branch of the river runs over a projecting ledge, and—nowhere touching the Titanic wall, which hollows in—descends in a stately, unbroken column, gradually widening its shining skirts into a black, unfathomable pool eight hundred and thirty feet below. The precipice runs backward, curving in an irregular bay, on whose further side the next fall, named the Roarer, shoots slanting down a third of the height into a rocky basin that shoulders out, whence it boils out into a broad massive cataract, plunging five hundred feet into the same pool opposite its kingly neighbor. Leaving the bay, next on the general plane of the precipice comes the Rocket fall, running impetuously over the brim and down the face of the stupendous wall, to to which it only just clings with a broad band of glistening, foaming water, speeding in quick gushes, incessantly darting out myriads of watery rockets and vaporous arrows, with which all its volume seems alive, and pouring clear at last in a dense shining curtain into its own pool. Last and loveliest, La Dame Blanche glides down the grim, colossal rampart in lapse after lapse of delicate, lace-like veins, now blowing out in bright, misty spray, and again quickly gathering up the white folds, and so stealing downward with a whispering murmur, till gently sinking in a sparkling shower into a pool whose ink-black surface is hardly ruffled."

An Imperial Nimrod.

The Cologne Gazette, in one of its last numbers, contains a curious summary of the achievements of the German Emperor in the hunting-field. It seems that since the year 1819, when, at the age of 22, the Emperor, then Prince William of Prussia, began hunting, he kept a schiessliste, in which he entered an accurate account of the head of game killed by his own hand. The list, a formidable one, commences with a bison or aurochs, a now almost extinct animal, killed in 1869, when hunting in the extensive domain of the Prince of Plesz. Next come two bears, three wolves, 779 large and 629 small boars, eleven chamois, 230 stags, 278 red deer, 845 fallow deer and 145 does. Of smaller game his Majesty killed 2,908 hares, thirty-three rabbits, thirty-nine foxes, eleven badgers, 910 pheasants and 162 partridges. The total number of head of game falling under the gun of the German Emperor, from the commencement of 1819 till the end of 1877, sums up at 6,996, or, roundly, 7,000, being at the rate of about 120 per annum. His Majesty's long career as a sportsman, extending over very nearly three-score years, passed not entirely without accidents. The most serious of these was one that happened on the 16th of December, 1819, when Prince William, in the act of loading his gun, while hunting with Herr von Wulknitz at Lanken, received a shot in the right hand, which necessitated the amputation of the greater part of the forefinger. The spot where this accident happened is marked by three trees, planted in memoriam.

A Desperate Outlaw.

The most notorious outlaw in South Carolina is Bob Redman. He has given the revenue men lots of trouble in the last six months by his crooked distilling, and to-day, while a posse of seven officers attempted to arrest him, at a place called Rocky Bottom, he shot and fatally wounded two of them—John Abren and William Owens. When the officers found Redman he was sitting in the house of a friend, holding a child. They intended to shoot as soon as he put the child down, but, as usual, Redman was too quick. While he still held the young one, he deliberately drew two pistols, and fired with the above result. As quick as thought he then threw the child on the floor, and, running out to the yard, mounted a horse, which bore him away at break-neck speed. In the confusion, and while the two men lay bleeding and dying, the other five men were completely demoralized. Redman is supposed, by this time, to be safe in one of the mountain fastnesses.—Greenville (S. C.) Cor. Cincinnati Enquirer

AN ELOQUENT PLEA FOR PEACE.

Speech of Senator Gordon, of Georgia, at the Boston Commercial Club Banquet.

My Fellow-Countrymen of Boston:

Let me repeat that salutation, for I feel that the time has come when I may address the people of the commonwealth of Massachusetts as my fellow-countrymen. Before thanking you in behalf of my Southern friends and myself for the compliment of this generous reception, and the touching cordiality of this greeting, let me correct a misapprehension. Strange to say, the newspapers for once have made a mistake. They have reported me as on my way to Boston to make a speech. This is a great mistake. I have not come into your midst as a teacher, but as an observer. I have not come to talk, but to listen, to look, and to learn. These Southern friends and myself have come to look at your great factories, your manufactures, your great industries and wonderful material developments, and to gather inspiration from that proverbial energy and enterprise which have enabled you to conquer unfriendly nature, and to convert the bleak hills of New England into productive farms to support your commerce and your manufactures. We have come also to put you upon notice, and I take this occasion to serve that notice, that we of the South intend to enter the race with you in some of those branches of industry which hitherto have been yours peculiarly and almost exclusively. We have water-powers unexcelled, which we are going to utilize, and even now are utilizing. We have a climate most balmy and genial and healthful. We have rich mines of coal and iron, and we intend to wake from their long sleep in their mountain beds these twin sons of Hercules, and set their arms to work in securing the great industrial wealth which awaits us. And if your people of the East are not alert and active, we intend to overtake you in the race, to strain along abreast with you, and I am not sure but that on the home stretch we shall yet lead you on some of these lines of enterprise.

We are all of a common country, and the prosperity of one section gives new hope, new life, new energy to other sections. When the memory of past differences has gone, when we shall come together, as on this occasion, with the common impulse of co-operation for the welfare of the country, when sectional animosities are no longer felt or cherished or encouraged, when such gatherings as this, irrespective of party alignments shall be had in every section of this great country, when each shall feel in the other a brother's interest, then will come not only the day of universal peace, but of unprecedented prosperity. Then will the whirl of the Georgia spinning-jennies answer the shuttle of Lowell's looms, the forges of Alabama echo back the "anvil choruses" from Pennsylvania, the song of the Southern cotton pickers blend with the rattle of the Western reapers, and the hum of American industry, all over the land, rise in a harmonious anthem of peace to God, who hath given us such a country, blessed it with His richest munificence and peopled it with the grandest race of men. To help on this happy consummation you have extended to us and we have accepted this invitation to Boston.

We are most fortunate and happy in being permitted to greet you in the freedom and unreserve of kindly, social intercourse, and as we grasp each the other's hand to tell you with entire sincerity that we are not enemies but friends. And, gentlemen, judging our Boston dinners by the banquet you have spread before us, I cannot conceive how any man could make a post-prandial speech in your city in which there would lurk aught of hostility, or distrust, or resentment toward any portion of this great republic. I cannot conceive how, under any circumstance, any man in Boston, surrounded by the monuments of the early struggles of our common ancestry, in this spirit-stirring atmosphere, amid these thrilling associations and sacred memories, could so forget these and forget himself as to repudiate the sentiment of that broad and enlarged patriotism and philanthropy which should bind all Americans together in the bonds of immortal sympathies. [Loud applause.] I thank you for that response. I care not what mere politicians may say, the true statesmanship of the country, the true sentiment and intuitive perceptions of the people of the country will refuse to believe and refuse to base the future legislation of the country on the unreasoning assertion that any portion of the people are the enemies of the country. In his heart of hearts the politician does not believe it. You men of Massachusetts, you Republicans or Democrats, do not believe it. We here make profert of ourselves. Do we present to you the appearance of bloody-minded enemies of our common country? Where is the evidence of that hostility, what have we done, what have we said, what votes have we cast, what revolutionary spirit marked our course in the country's peril one year ago to justify such an imputation upon our fidelity to law, or to the union of these States, or to the peace, the honor, and the prosperity of this Government of our ancestors? It is true we have had a war. But that war was in one sense a conflict of theories of constitutional constructions. That conflict began in the halls of Congress, and ended at Appomattox Court House. It was in another sense a war over slavery. It began with the disappearance of that institution from your midst, and ended with its extinction on the American continent. What more was there left for us to quarrel over? It is true that, like Betsy and her husband, we were "out," but, like that couple also, we quarreled and made up and agreed to quarrel no more. The question ought to be no longer whether the circumstances of birth, of education or conviction carried men to one side or the other during the war (for we must respect convictions which are strong enough to evoke the spirit of self-sacrifice and are essential to great characters), but the question must be, in the future, who has proved himself the greatest patriot by doing most for his whole country? I know that no human power can long prevent this consummation. The people will put the politicians out of place who attempt it. There are laws of human action as resistless as those of the material world. You can no more check the flow of good will in this country since the causes of difference are gone, than you can prevent the flow of your Merrimac on its way to the sea. Indeed, more easily stop the river in its course, for to do this you have only to build a wall as high as its source—as high as the snow drift on the White mountains; while to prevent a people inhabiting the same country, inheritors of the same memories and rights of liberties, with the same blood in their veins, with common interest, common hopes, and a common future, from coming together as friends, you must build a barrier between them as high as heaven itself, for the law which compels is the edict of the God of humanity.

Oh no, my countrymen! The causes that divided us are gone, and gone forever. The interests which now unite us will unite us forever.

Preparing for the Coming Campaign.

WASHINGTON, May 6.

The joint committees of Democratic Senators and Representatives, appointed by direction of the recent Democratic caucus, met on Saturday to consider a plan for conducting the coming campaign. They will report at the adjourned meeting of the caucus. There were present Senators Wallace, McDonald, Jones of Florida, Cockrell and Ransom, and Representatives Randall, Banning, Blackburn, Morrison, Hunton, Reagan, Wood, Clarke of Missouri, Jones of New Hampshire. Senators McDonald and Jones and Representatives Blackburn, Banning, and Morrison were appointed an Executive Campaign Committee, and were instructed to actively co-operate with the resident committee and National Executive Committee for campaign purposes. The redistricting of Ohio was discussed, and it was the sentiment of the committee that the State should be redistricted in accordance with law, so as to give the Democrats their rightful preponderance. The question as to the methods to be employed to raise funds to carry on the active work of the campaign was left to the discretion of the Campaign Committee. The recent development of the Florida election frauds was briefly discussed, and a determination arrived at that no resolution on the subject shall be introduced just yet, although it was generally contended that the honor of the American people required a thorough investigation for the purpose of laying before the country a complete history of those frauds.

The May-Pole in England.

Great were the doings in the old time around the May-pole, for which the tallest tree was selected. It was drawn to its place by as many as thirty or forty yoke of oxen, their horns decorated with flowers, followed by all the lads and lassies of the village. The pole was wound or painted with gay colors, and trimmed with garlands, bright handkerchiefs, and ribbon streamers, from top to bottom.

With great ceremonies, and shouts of joy, it was lifted to its place by ropes and set up firmly in the ground; and then the people joined hands and danced around it. The whole day was given up to merriment, every one dressed in holiday clothes, doors and windows were adorned with green boughs and flowers, the bells rang, processions of people in grotesque dresses were arranged, and the famous morris dancers performed.

In this dance the people assumed certain characters. There was always Robin Hood, the great hero of rustics; Maid Marian, the Queen, with gilt crown on her head; Friar Tuck; a fool, with his fool's-cap and bells; and, above all, the hobby-horse. This animal was made of paste-board, painted a sort of pink color, and propelled by a man inside, who made him perform various tricks not common to horses, such as threading a needle and holding a ladle in his mouth for pennies.

The various characters labored to support their parts. The friar gave solemn advice, the Queen imitated lady-like manners, the fool joked and made fun, and the horse pranced in true horsey style.

This morris dance is supposed to have been brought in early times from Spain, where the Moors danced it, and where it still survives as the "fandango."

In other places wreaths were made on hoops, with a gayly-dressed doll in the middle of each, and carried about by girls, the little owners singing a ballad which had been sung since the time of Queen Bess, and expecting a shower of pennies, of course.

All this May-day merriment came to an end when our grim Puritan fathers had power in England. Dancing around the May-pole looked to them like heathen adoration of an idol. Parliament made a law against it, and all the May-poles in the island were laid in the dust. The common people had their turn, when, a few years later, under a new King, the Prohibitory law was repealed, and a new May-pole, the highest ever in England (134 feet), was set up in the Strand, London, with great pomp. But the English people were fast outgrowing the sport, and the customs have been dying out ever since. Now a very few May-poles in obscure villages are all that can be found.—Olive Thorne, in St. Nicholas for May.

Mr. Schleicher's Plan.

Representative Schleicher, of Texas, has introduced in Congress a bill to sell $50,000,000 of the 4 per cent. Government bonds, the proceeds of which shall be appropriated for the immediate completion of Government buildings now in process of erection in various parts of the country. Mr. Schleicher finds the principal buildings now in progress, and the amounts necessary to complete them, to be as follows: Philadelphia, $3,000,000; Boston, $2,000,000; Chicago and St. Louis, $1,500,000 each; the new War and Navy Department in Washington, $5,000,000; Albany and Memphis, $250,000 each; Hartford, $300,000; Utica, Harrisburg, San Francisco, Little Rock and Nashville, $150,000 each. Instead of having money appropriated for completing these buildings and others in small amounts annually, Mr. Schleicher wants them finished at once, so that the payment of rents may stop, and the laboring classes may be given something to do.

A Queer Custom.

In Thibet it is the custom for a woman to have a plurality of husbands. The usual practice is for two, three or four brothers in a household to marry one wife. They all reside in one house and the children are to be the joint offspring of all. It is inconceivable to us that such a system should exist for an hour; but in Thibet, far from giving rise to the evils which might be expected to flow from it, it works easily and well, and the pictures which travelers give us of Thibetan households display a degree of domestic happiness which certainly equals that enjoyed in much more favored lands.

Fuller reports of the election held Tuesday, gleaned from state exchanges, indicate a condition of public opinion and drift of sentiment that must encourage every democrat in Indiana. With very few exceptions the democracy has gained in every important point in the State, but nowhere, perhaps, more notably than in Marion county. We had everything to contend against, as usual, but a compact organization came within one in the lower house of wrestling the control of affairs from the hands of the radicals, making a gain of nine councilmen. Although the republicans have held Indianapolis for nearly twenty years with two exceptions, it is safe to predict that in the coming election Marion county will be redeemed.—Ind. Sentinel.

Interesting Discovery.

A somewhat interesting relic was dug up near Chester, Illinois, last week. It was an image sixteen inches high, thirty-two inches round the waist and weighed forty-one pounds. It is of soapstone or slate. It is in a sitting posture, with the right leg drawn up and the right hand resting on the knee. There is nothing remarkable in this; but there are carvings on the idol which attract attention. On its breast is the figure of an elephant, which shows either that the maker knew something about the Asiatic elephant, or that the elephant existed in this country synchronously with the race that carved these images. Around the head, too, there is an inscription which, if it could be deciphered, would probably tell an interesting story. The writing is said to resemble the Egyptian hieroglyphics.

Never Known to Fail.

Dr. Morris' Syrup of Tar, Wild Cherry and Horehound has never been known to fail in permantly curing obstinate coughs, colds, croupe, whooping cough, nor any diseases of the respiratory organs, and it does it, too, at once. It is not necessary to take it for a long time before you can discover its beneficial effects. Its sale in this community is immense, and its popularity universal. It should not be classed with compounds put up by inexperienced hands. Do not fail to give this great and potent remedy a trial. It will not and cannot disappoint you. Try it once. Trial size 10 cents. Regular size 50 cents and one dollar. For sale by F. E. Davenport. Also agents for Prof. Parker's Pleasant Worm Syrup, which never fails. Pleasant to take. and requires no physic. Price 25c.

"J. N." AND THE PRESS.

"J. N thus said, in a friendly conversation, last Saturday:

"Did you every take into consideration that the entire press of the country since the 18th of Febuary, 1853—over a quarter of a century ago, have done me more injury than good as my position created general prejudice. I will, of course, forget the past, but will in the future call the roll and ask of the press of the entire world, as sentinels on the tower of truth to get ready to do me justice, as a Representative of Principles which resist the general prejudice of the age, as all truth has done from immemorial. Let the world cease to hate me for a principle of mind which their prejudice would not allow them to converse respecting or recognize. Let the veil now be lifted and truth unveiled forever. All for the cause."

Enjoy Life.

What a truly beautiful world we live in! Nature gives us grandeur of mountains, glens and oceans, and thousands of means for enjoyment. We can desire no better when in perfect health. but how often do the majority of people feel like giving it up disheartened, discouraged and worried out with disease, when there is no occasion for this feeling, as every sufferer can easily obtain satisfactory proof that Green's August Flower will make them as free from disease as when born. Dyspepsia and Liver complaint is the direct causes of seventy-five per cent. of such maladies as billiousness, indigestion, sick headach, costiveness, nervous prostration, dizziness of the head, palpitation of the heart, and other distressing symptoms. Three doses of August Flower will prove its wonderful effect. Sample bottles, 10 cents. Try it. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

The Real Hero.

In 1793 the Prussian officers of the garrison of Colberg established an economical mess, of which certain poor emigrants were glad to partake. They observed one day an old major of hussars, who was covered with the scars of wounds received in the Seven Year's War, and half hidden by enormous gray moustaches. The conversation turned on duels. A young stout built cornet began to prate in an authoritative tone on the subject.

"And you, major, how many duels have you fought?'

"None, thank Heaven,' answered the old hussar, in a subdued voice; "I have fourteen wounds, and Heaven be praised, there is not one in my back, so that I may be permitted to say that I feel myself happy in never having fought a duel.'

"But you shall fight one with me,' exclaimed the cornet, reaching across to give him a blow.

The major, agitated, grasped the table to assist himself in rising, when a unanimous cry was raised:

"Don't stir, major.'

All the officers present joined in seizing the cornet, when they threw him out at the window, and sat down again at the table as if nothing had occurred

A Little too Modest

A lady on the northside wishing to test the Merits of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup thought it would never do to ask the druggest in the name of "Bull." Why, dear me, she couldn't say Bull to save her life, and called at last on a neighbor woman for suggestions on the matter. Dr. Cow's, Dr. Calf's, Dr. Buffalo's and Dr. Oxen's Syrup were all mentioned. The latter suited. "Yes, that will do—Dr. Oxen—the very thing, the druggist will understand that." A walk of two squares found her at the counter of Dr. H——'s store, when the following dialogue occurred:

"I wish a bottle of Dr. Oxen's Cough Syrup.'

"Dr. Oxen, Oxon, why, mam, I don't believe I keep that. You mean Cox's Hive Syrup, don't you?'

"Oh, no, I mean, mean Dr. Oxen.' and then she seemed wrapped in solemn thought for a moment, when a bright idea seemed to beam forth. Hasn't Dr. Oxen got a relation or—'

"Oh, yes, you mean Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, yes, yes.'

The lady sat down a moment and all was over.—Indianapolis Exch.

An important vote took place in the House of Representatives on last Friday on a "war claim," which was reported and championed by Keifer, the Republican member from Springfield. Mr. McMahon, of Ohio, moved to lay the bill on the table. This was the test vote. The motion failed—yeas, 60; nays, 110. An analysis of the vote shows the following state of affairs: Of the 60 yeas 30 were Republicans and 30 Democrats. Of the 30 Democrats 25 were from the North. Of the 110 nays (being those in favor of the bill) 51 were Republicans, 50 were Southern Democrats and only 9 were Democrats from what were the non-slaveholding States. The debate for the bill was led by Keifer, Oliver, Thompson, all Republicans, and General Bragg and McMahon, of Ohio, Democrats, resisted. It will be seen that the bill passed by a combination of Southern Democrats and Republicans. The excuse given by Republicans was that the claiment was a "loyal" man. This is the same excuse—so easy of proof at this late day—under which the Treasury has been depleted already, under Republican rule, of $100,000,000—the sum admitted by John Sherman as the amount paid by his party. This record and the debate upon the bill will be a document of value to Democratic stumpers.

"OFFICIAL ADMISSION OF THE CORRUPTIONS OF THE GRANT REGIME BY SECRETARY THOMPSON AND HIS CHIEFS OF BUREAUS."

These are the startling head lines of the history of official corruption as they appear in Monday's Chicago Times They, indeed, outline most forcibly a monster crime of the Grant era of official corruption. The light is breaking in, revealing to the astonished gaze of the people the roberies committed under the cry of "loyalty" and "reform." With all these facts staring them in the face the Radical ring of Columbia City have the audacity to ask Democrats to support their party of theft in a "no party" movement.

New York Firemen's Time.

Capt. Crum of steam fire engine No. 4 invited several gentlemen to the engine house, 39 Liberty street, yesterday morning to view a practice drill. The stalls of the horses are twenty feet in the rear of the engine, and are broad side to it, so that the animals must back out from them. The first trial was hitching from the stalls. The men were lounging near the engine, the horses stood quietly in their stalls, in which they were fastened by halters. Capt. Crum stood by the side of the gong, with a small wooden mallet in his hand, and one of the visitor gazed intently upon the face of a stop watch, held in his hand. The Capt. struck quick on the gong, at the same time pulling the lever that loosend the halters. In the stalls there was a snort and a wild clatter of hoofs, and the horses, Bill and Charley, tore out from behind the engine, stopping abruptly at the pole. The men sprang to their places, there was a sharp clashing of snaps and steel rings, and the driver, who had sprung to his seat and seized the lines, called "Ready," the stop watch recorded 9¼ seconds from the time of striking the first blow on the gong. A repetition of the trial was made with the horses taken from the stalls and standing just behind the engine. In 5 seconds they were ready to start.

The triumph of the exhibition, however, was when the men were sent up stairs to their sleeping room and the horses returned to their stalls Again the gong struck, the men seemed to reach the foot of the stairs at a single leap. there was another rush of horses, and in exactly 9 seconds the driver shouted, "Ready."

Now Being Published.

The supplementary series of Ancient Classics for English readers, edited by the Rev. W. Lucas Collins, M. A., 16mo fine cloth, $1 each.

The volumes of the new series now ready are: I, LIVY, by the editor. II, OVID, by the Rev. A. Church, M. A. III, CATULLUS, TIBULLUS and PROPERTIUS, by the Rev. James Davies, M. A. IV, DEMOSTHENES, by the Rev. J. W. Brodribb. V, ARISTOTLE by Sir Alexander Grant, Bart., LL. D.

The volumes yet to appear will consist of Lucretius, Anacreon, Thucydides and Pindar. The series will not exceed ten volumes.

We welcome the appearance of a supplementary series of 'Ancient Classics for English readers,' which was certainly very much required, if the publication was to answer the purpose for which it was originally designed. . . . Mr. Collin's 'Livy' is almost, if not quite, equal to the best of the preceding series. . . . Mr. Church's Essey is a very complete and scholarly performance.—London Times

We have spoken in praise of this series so often, we need add nothing now. It is a great thing to have the marvelous treasur-house of classic literature opened to English readers.—Chicago Advance.

It ought to find a great deman, and should be in every school and coledge library as well as the private libraries of gentlemen of culture.—Boston Traveler.

VIVA.

By Mrs. Forrester, 12mo. extra cloth, $1.50.

A work of unusual power and interest. The plot is deeply attractive, the characters are striking, and the management of the story throughout is very skillful. Intensity seems to be Mrs. Forrester's forte, and it is as fully exemplified in this book as in her uncommonly brilliant "Dolores." In "Viva" the reader will find unflagging entertainment.—Boston Saturday Evening Gazette.

THE DAUGHTER OF AN EGYPTIAN KING.

A romance. From the German of George Ebers, author of "Narda," etc., by Henry Reed. New edition. 16mo. Fine cloth, $1.25.

It is a wonderful production.—New York World.

The plot is a most interesting one, and in its development we are given an accurate insight into the social and political life of the Egyptians of that time.—Boston Evening Traveler.

SEED-TIME AND HARVEST:

Or, During My Apprenticeship. A romance. From the Platt Deutsch of Fritz Reuter. New edition. 8vo. extra cloth, $1.25. Paper cover, 75 cents.

Fritz Reuter is one of the most popular writers in Germany. . . . The charm of his stories lies in their simplicity and exquisite truth to nature. This is one of the best of Reuter's stories, exhibiting his turn for the pathetic as well as for the humorous.—New York Evening Post.

A FEARFUL TRAGEDY.

A Dark Leaf from the Criminal History of Virginia.

Among the numerous moss grown old tombstones in the graveyard at Williamsburg, Va., is one which bears the following inscription:

Sacred to the memory of
SARAH SEMPHILL,
Who Died at the Age of Twenty-five, Slain, with her two infant daughters,
by Her Own Husband.
She was Fair to Look Upon, Pure as Snow, and Beloved by All Who Knew Her.
Divine Providence Alone Knows
Why She Had to Perish
So Miserably.

This epitaph, some of the words of which are hardly legible any longer, is the only record left of the most terrible domestic tragedies that ever took place in the Old Dominion

It was in 1798 that John Semphill, a young man, who said he was from Santa Cruz, in the West Indies, arrived at Williamsburg, and settled there as a tobacco planter. He had plenty of money, and was able to purchas about 1,000 acres of the finest soil within a short distance of the old town.

Being apparently a gentleman in every sense of the word, he was admitted to the best society in his new home, and a year later he was married to Sarah Jones, a beautiful heiress, the wedding festivities being celebrated with extraordinary pomp and splendor. In course of time two daughters were born to the young couple, and everybody predicted a long career of cloudless happiness for them.

Alas! how terribly these bright anticipations were to be disappointed. It was on Christmas eve, in 1801, that a strange looking man, in a sort of military uniform, appeared at the house of Mr. Semphill, who was in Richmond at the time. Mrs. Semphill received the stranger in the parlor.

"Do you speak French, madam?' he said to her in very broken English.

She replied in the affirmative.

"Then, madam, please send your two nurse girls with the children out of the room.'

She did so, and looked interogatively at her visitor. The latter hesitated a moment, and then said, in a tone of deep emotion:

"Poor lady, I have terrible tidings for you.'

',Heavens!' she cried, turning very pale.

"My husband—'

"Your husband is an infamious villian!

"Sir!' she exclaimed, indignantly.

"He has basely deceived you. He is an escaped galley-slave, a thief and a murderer.'

She uttered a heart rending scream.

"Do tell me the truth!' she gasped.

"He is a Spanish thief, and was sent to the galleys of Barcelona for life. He made his escape from thence, and fled to Cuba, where he robbed and murdered a rich planter. I am here to take him to Cuba, where the scaffold surely awaits him.'

The afflicted lady had become strangely calm.

"Sir,' she said to the stranger, 'before you arrest him will you permit me to hold a private interview with—with—"

"His true name is Juan Cefirio. If you will let me remain in an adjoining room until he returns from Richmond, where he has gone, I understand, you may see him privately.'

"I expect him back every moment.'

Half and hour later Cefirio, alias Semphill, made his appearance. His wife briefly told him everything. He flew into a terrible rage.

He shot her through the heart, and rushed out of the room to the nursery, where he stabbed his two little daughters.

The next moment the Cuban officer, who had rushed after him, grappled with him, and succeeded, after a desperate struggle, in shackling him.

The news of this horrible tragedy spread like wild fire through the old town, and in less than twenty minutes a large concourse of people had gathered in front of Semphill, alias Cefirio's house.

Vociferous threats to lynch the murderer were made, and the deputy sheriffs who were promptly on hand to arrest him, had the utmost difficulty in taking him to jail, where he was chained to the floor, having threatened to commit suicide.

The villain was hung on the 17th of May, 1803.

For Sale.

The undersigned having had very bad health for some time past, desires to sell out his Hardware and Tinware establishment, which he offers at reasonable rates. Possession given immediately. Inquire of JULES BURETT.

Poor, But not Proud.

"I'm as poor as free-lunch turtle soup but I don't glory in it,' said a wead eyed waif of trouble, with a breath like the oder of an old stocking, as he sat down on a bench among the pariahs in Washington Park the other morning.

"Merciful Moses!' exclaimed a sparsehaired mendicant, whose back hadn't carried a new coat for twenty years, "show me the chap as does, an' he kin take my share cheap."

"Trouble has follered me like a shadder from the cradle, an' there never was a time when I was any more free from misfortune then I am of graybacks this minute, but I don't go round with a tin horn an' a banner tellin' the world I'm poor, do I?"

The crowd edged up around him and listened with open mouths.

"I say I don't flaunt my poverty," he continued. "I'm not proud of it nor puffed up over it like some folks is, an' I don't crow over them as is better off, nor make brags that I have more trials an' less to eat than any other livin' soul."

"No more do I," put in a man with a face that had long been a stranger to water. "I grins and bears it."

"Job's turkey was a fat bird to the side of me, but what's the good of my puttin' on airs? It won't make feathers grow on a station-house p'ank, will it? An' kin boastin' about my misery put another bean in the soup or give my stomach any more to do? Nary time, it can't. Conceit never put a full spoon to anybody's mouth. Land knows I've got plenty of rope if I wanted to brag, but that ain't my nature."

"Lots more of us can be hit with the same pole," chimed in a thin man with a tight belt.

"Yes, maybe; but if you'll hold your breath you'll say less," resumed the first speaker. "There was Lazarus now; look at him. He was poor enough to be respectable, by long odds. But I discount him, boys—I do, heavy. He had sores that was intices' to a hull pack of dogs, but you couldn't find a scab on me big enough for a pup to smell of before its eyes was open; an' then agin, you can't prove he didn't own the hounds himself! Do I look able to kick my own dog! Well, I should say not. Poverty, boys, is my best holt. It's the only thing in this world I ever had plenty of; but, as I said before, I don't flaunt it around and glory in it, nor I don't y'arn for any more of it. Poor! You couldn't find fat enough about me to grease a watch!"—Cincinnati Breakfast Table.

MY LOVER.

BY EMMA MORTIMER WHITE.

At last I am blessed with a lover,
Just what a lover should be—
Devoted and constant, and handsome,
Handsome as handsome can be.

Devoted!—devoted, believe me!
He never has left me a day;
I am ever his pride and his darling—
Without me he cannot be gay.

He cares for no lovelier lady;
To him I am very fair;
Contented he rests on my bosom,
Kisses my lips and my hair.

Handsome!—his cheeks are like roses,
His head is run over with curls,
His forehead is white as a snowdrift,
His teeth glimmer clearer than pearls.

His eyes they are bright as the sunshine,
With lashes that cannot be beat,
And then I know that you've never Seen such hands and such feet.

Wealthy? He's careless of money—
Money to him is but dross;
Silver and gold, for my lover,
Are only for pitch and for toss.

He must have been born to a fortune—
He's lived at his ease ever since;
If you'd see but the style of his dressing,
You'd probably think him a prince.

Shirts thick frosted with stitching,
Silken embroidered socks;
I think the most of his money
He keeps in a patent box.

He'll show you a golden guinea,
On which he cut his first tooth,
Strung on an azure ribbon,
Tied with a love-knot, forsooth!

Of teeth he has half a dozen,
Set to the cunningest mold;
For I am my lover's mother—
For he is but one year old!

THE BANK ROBBERY.

"When you have something more to offer me beside yourself, Frank De Vere, I will accept you; not before."

This was Nellie Blanchard's reply to her companion's passionate avowal of love. She was cold, proud and beautiful; the only child of genteel, but poor parents. It was a matter of surprise to the neighbors that Frank De Vere had ever been allowed the privilege of calling on her at all. The truth was that Miss Blanchard was fond of making conquests. She met De Vere at the house of a friend; discovered that he was above mediocre in appearance and talent, and decided to make him a victim. How well she succeeded, after an acquaintance of a few months, we already know.

"Do you mean, Nellie Blanchard," said her lover, "that you refuse me because I am poor?"

"I mean what I said!"

Frank De Vere's passion for the woman before him amounted to idolatry. If it had been less, he, with his good sense, would have despised her.

"Nellie," he said, "if gold is all that separates us, it shall not sunder us long. Only promise me this—wait one year for me."

The woman hesitated a minute; she never had the most remote idea of marrying him, and she did not like to commit herself. Yet she must get rid of him some way. There was little danger of his making his fortune in a year, so she considered herself safe in saying, "Yes, Frank, I will wait for you."

"Then you are mine! I soon shall claim you! Until then, good-by!"

He clasped her in his arms a moment, gave her a lover's kiss, and was gone. She looked after him, not to sigh, but to thank Heaven that she had rid herself of him so easily.

It was in the days when California drew throngs of gold-hunters to its mines. Frank De Vere took passage the week after his last interview with Miss Blanchard, and in due time arrived safely at his journey's end. The weeks passed on. It was easier for De Vere to dream of wealth than to accumulate it. He had only been able on his arrival to obtain a situation as under-clerk in a banking-house. As his merit became known he had risen rapidly in favor with his employers, and was now occupying the position of cashier, with a large salary. Under ordinary circumstances he would have been contented; as the seeker of a fortune in a short space of time, he was not.

The allotted time of his stay was nearly at an end. With all his economy he had not laid up $1,000. He knew that Nellie Blanchard could not be bought for less than $50,000. Something must be done. What that something was he had not yet concluded when he retired to bed one eventful night in his life's history. The morning after that night, the porter of the house came running from the room where De Vere slept with one of the clerks, which opened into the one in which the safe was kept. The man's face was white with fear, and his eyes nearly starting from their sockets.

Out into the crowded street he went, screaming: "Murther! murther! A bloody murther!"

"Where?" said a policeman standing near.

"In there," pointing toward the young men's room.

It was a horrible, sickening sight. The clerk, Charlie Sowle, lay on the floor, with his face upturned, and stamped with intense suffering. Several ugly gashes were about his face and breast, from which the blood slowly trickled, helping to swell the crimson pool in which he lay. From his white lips, at intervals, there came a groan, which told the lookers-on he was not dead. On the bed lay Frank De Vere, gagged, firmly bound, having a deep flesh-wound in his arm, from which the blood had flowed so freely that the bed-linen was completely saturated.

He was speedily released, and asked by a dozen at once, "Who did it?"

"Between 2 and 3 this morning," he said, "I was awakened by Charlie, who whispered, 'Some one is at the safe.' I listened a moment, and distinctly heard a noise in the inner room. 'You are right, Sowle,' I said, and instantly felt for my revolver. It was not there. Alarmed, I asked Charlie in an undertone, 'Did you remove my pistol?' 'No; is it gone?' The next instant he added, 'Good heavens! mine is gone, too.' Together we arose, and crept softly to yonder door. There, with the safe open, by the dim light of a lantern, were two men masked, so that I cannot describe them. I would have stolen out of the house and sought help, but Charlie, who always was brave to a fault, would not listen to that. 'Don't you see our pistols lying there on the floor behind them?' he whispered; 'we will secure them yet.' And before I could offer the first objection he was half-way across the room, stealing on tip-toe toward them. A slight noise caused one of the villains to look round. Just as Charlie reached for his revolver they discovered him, and sprung upon him, and dragged him back into this room. I think they would have spared him had they not that instant caught sight of me. One ran a bowie-knife through him. The other sprung at me. Charlie fell back, saying, 'Oh, Frank! they have killed me.' The demon who had assassinated him did not seem to be content with his work, but inflicted the other wounds you see, hoping to make a sure job of it. I was unarmed, and could not effect much with my antagonist. I got this cut on my arm, and, the other man coming to his friend's help, I decided to offer no more resistance. So they gagged and bound me, and, after taking what they wanted, left us. Charlie, poor fellow! has laid there moaning ever since, at intervals, and I was powerless to help him.

Frank De Vere looked with anxious countenance at his companion.

"Do you think he will ever get over it?" he asked.

A physician in the room stooped and examined him.

"Well?" said De Vere

"He will die," was the answer.

"Would that he could be spared," said Frank, as he bent over his friend with streaming eyes.

The dying man roused a little at the words, and, turning his eyes on De Vere's face, gave him a look fraught with such a sense of injury that one would have thought he imagined Frank his murderer. He closed them in a moment, and opened them no more. The wounded man was taken to a hospital, where he died that day.

It was found that the robbers had taken cash to the amount of $200,000. The police, after the most vigilant exertions to secure the murderers, were unable to discover them.

Frank De Vere would remain no longer in the place; he gave up his situation, and went to try his luck in the mines. Fate favored him. Gold came readily to his hand. In a short time he had accumulated more than he in his wildest dreams had ever hoped for. Satisfied with the fortune he had made, he started for his native town. As soon after his arrival as possible he called upon the woman who promised to wait for him. He found her in the parlor. Walking straight toward her, he held out his arms.

"Nellie, I have come to claim you."

Surprised though she was to see him, she could not be surprised into committing herself before she understood how affairs stood with him. So, before a word of welcome came from her lips, she asked: "Have you anything to offer besides Mr. De Vere?"

"Two hundred thousand dollars, Nellie."

She brightened instantly. To the haughty but needy belle the sum seemed enormous. She allowed the outstretched arms to embrace her, and the lips of the new-comer to kiss her.

"You will become Nellie De Vere?" he whispered.

"Yes, Frank."

After an evening spent in rehearsing the past and arranging for the future, they separated. When he had gone, she hid her face in the sofa, and wept bitterly.

"Albert," she murmured—"dear, dear Albert, the only one I ever loved, it is hard to give you up!"

Then, rising, she dashed the tears from her eyes, and, with clenched hands, paced the room to and fro, murmuring, "I am ashamed of you, Nellie Blanchard; I thought you were made of sterner stuff. Will you give up wealth and position for love in a cottage? No—never!"

So she decided to marry Frank De Vere. Before the year was out, she became his wife. Time passed away. Fate had been kind to Mr. and Mrs. De Vere, to all outward appearances. He had accumulated an immense fortune, and had risen high in favor with his fellow-men. Old Father Time had dealt leniently with his lady. Mrs. De Vere, twenty years a wife, was quite as beautiful, and much more voluptuous in figure, than Nellie Blanchard had been. It had not taken Frank De Vere long to learn that his wife did not care for him. He loved her so that for many years he had tried to make himself dear to her. The more he exerted himself to please her, the more disgusted she became with him. The poor man kept looking forward to the dawn of a brighter day, when the rosy leaves of hope were turned to bitter ashes by the humiliating discovery that the secret of the wife's aversion was that from the time she engaged herself to him her heart had belonged to another. She taunted him with the fact one day in a fit of anger.

"Why did you marry me, Nellie?" he asked.

"You know without asking—for your money."

"Then you sold yourself."

She winced a little.

"You do not love me?"

"I do not love you—never have—never will."

"Would you like the world to know this, and break the chain that binds us, which seems to gall you so?"

"No; 'twould gain me nothing."

"I believe I understand you, Mrs. De Vere. To the world, hereafter, we will be what we have seemed heretofore. At home, we are strangers. Does this suit you?"

"Yes."

The haughty dame swept from her husband's presence, glad that henceforth she would be free from the caresses of the man she could never love. The husband watched her out of sight, then fell to the ground, where he lay writhing in agony of mind, muttering, "Oh, merciful Heaven! my punishment is greater than I can possibly bear!"

After this they met only in the presence of their guests, or in company.

This was years ago, when Lulu (an affectionate diminutive for Louisa), their only daughter, was a wee child. She was 17, now; and, on the day of which I write, was looking forward with pleasing anticipation to the evening. For that evening she was "coming out." When the company assembled, Lulu moved among them like a spirit of light. Her lovely, innocent face was, perhaps, less perfect than her mother's. But, if perfection wore another charm, it was one which had no beauty for the score of lovers following in her train. The father stood at one side and gazed upon her, comparing her to a beautiful picture, and as far above the crowd around her as were the stars.

He was interrupted in his thoughts by a voice at his elbow exclaiming, "Who is that in the white satin dress, with diamonds in her hair?"

"Miss De Vere."

"She is a beauty, by Jove! and they say that her father is well off. I believe I shall marry her."

"Hush!" said the speaker's friend, in an undertone; "De Vere is not three feet from you."

"Ha! ha! what do I care? The old chap and I are friends; he will no doubt thank me for taking his daughter off his hands," he replied.

The host confronted the man angrily, but, instead of uttering the intended reprimand, he fell senseless to the floor. He was carried to his room, a physician called, who soon pronounced him out of danger. A message was sent to the man who had so singularly affected De Vere that he wanted to see him. The stranger obeyed the summons. Frank De Vere motioned to those attending him to leave the room, and beckoned the new-comer to his bedside. The man went in obedience to the gesture, and looked fearlessly down in the invalid's face.

"You have found me at last, Albert Carlton," moaned De Vere. "Now that you are here, what do you want?"

"Want? Dare you ask me? Coward, thief, murderer that you are! I have half a mind to kill you this moment in your bed."

And he glared fiercely on De Vere, while he held over him an open knife.

"Mercy! mercy!" gasped the poor man.

"It is easier for you to cry for mercy than it was to grant it," said Carlton.

"For God's sake, don't speak so loud," said De Vere, his face livid with fear. "I will make you any reparation you ask; only, for my child's sake, spare the honor of my house."

"It is beyond your power to bestow what you took from me," said Albert Carlton, fiercely. "I was sent by a woman who loved me, and whose passion I more than returned, to seek a fortune ere we were married. I had been a long time from her side, and, meeting with no success, I determined to make a bold stroke, rob the bank, and return with my booty home. You know how affairs turned out. It will serve you right to repeat them. I made my entrance into your room, and took your pistol before you discovered me. Sowle had not come in yet. I had no desire to shed blood, and was glad to spare your life on the conditions you spoke of—going halves. In the midst of our work Charlie Sowle interrupted us: he was at our mercy, yet we promised to spare him and take him in as a partner. You remember how indignantly he refused, and, with his pistol at my head, called aloud, 'Help, help!' Alarmed, you silenced him with your bowie-knife. He fell back gasping, imploring you, his old friend, to spare him. You had gone too far, and kept on with your bloody work until you had finished him. Ugh! it was an ugly job; I am glad my hands are washed from it. Then you planned that I should gag and tie you to your bed; you even wounded yourself, that the detectives might the more readily believe the tale you should tell. Afterward, you told me how well your plan had worked; how poor Sowle had lived through the night, and nearly terrified you to death for fear he would revive sufficiently to expose your crime; he died at last. You met me, received your share, went to the mines, pretended to make a fortune; and then when I had entrusted my share to your safe keeping you made off with it. I was in despair; for with the loss of my money I lost also the woman I loved, inasmuch as before I could make another adventure I learned that she was married. To whom I never heard, and whether now living I do not know."

"What can I do for you?" murmured De Vere.

"I want half you are worth."

"You shall have it."

"I will also take your daughter in marriage."

"Good heavens, Carlton, don't ask that of me!"

"Then you shall be exposed."

The man turned to go.

"Come back, Carlton; I'll do all I can for you. Dine with us to-morrow. Leave me now, for I suffer deeply."

The next day Carlton was punctual. He was made acquainted with Lulu at the dinner-table. In a few minutes her mother came in at the side door, and took her place at the table. The husband proceeded to introduce them.

"Mrs. De Vere, allow me to present you to my old acquaintance, Mr. Albert Carlton."

She looked up quickly as the name was spoken, flushed and paled alternately when she had looked Mr. Carlton in the face. Then, rising suddenly, she left the room.

At a later hour, Albert Carlton found himself alone in the library.

"To think of her as the wife of him who caused me to lose her is maddening!" he muttered to himself.

"Then you have not ceased to think of me?" said a voice at his side.

Turning about, he beheld Mrs. De Vere.

"Cease to think of you, Nellie! The love I bore you has been increasing from that day to this. And now, with a world of love in my heart for you, I am doomed to behold you the wife of another!"

"Oh, Albert," she said, "all these years that have separated us have been so dread and terrible!"

"Nellie! my darling, you almost make me think that there is happiness in store for us yet!"

"And ma there not be, Albert?"

"If you say so, Nellie."

He held out his arms to her, and she leaned her head against the breast that so many years ago had been her resting-place. Together they plotted to leave the house that night and flee to another country. That evening Frank De Vere gave Carlton the promised money.

"In the morning," said the father, "I will give you my daughter's answer."

That night De Vere came to the conclusion that it was a thing impossible to broach the subject to Lulu.

"Dead men tell no tales," he muttered, as he went to his desk and took from it a knife. Stealthily leaving his room, he stole toward his guest's chamber, which was at the end of the long passage. He was half-way there, when he detected the sound of muffled footsteps approaching him.

"The villain is coming to murder me," he thought; "he shall not escape me."

In a minute, he felt his enemy's breath upon his cheek, and knew it was his time to strike. So he grasped the figure, and made a thrust in the darkness with his knife. The victim made no resistance; only gave utterance to one unearthly shriek.

De Vere recognized the voice. It was his wife.

Terror-stricken, he stood bending over the inanimate form, when the door of his guest's room opened, and Albert Carlton came out with a light. De Vere stepped hastily aside in a niche devoted to statuary. When Carlton saw the woman he loved lying there weltering in her blood, he forgot to look for her murderer, but knelt beside her, kissing the cold lips, and whispering words of love to her. The sight maddened the husband.

"Devil! destroyer of my happiness, take that, and that, and that!" he shrieked, as he stabbed the man he so bitterly hated.

De Vere hurried to his room and locked himself in. He soon heard footsteps hurrying to and fro, and exclamations of horror. By a private passage he descended into the street, hailed a passing vehicle and drove away. He was sought after for months, but never found.

Years afterward, in a distant land, he learned that both Carlton and Mrs. De Vere recovered, and that they were living together.

"Thank Heaven," he said, "that my hands are washed from their blood; if Charlie Sowle were only living I might yet be a happy man."

A few months after this he wrote to Lulu, begging her to come to him. She went, and with her went her husband, a fine-looking man, many years her senior. When the father looked upon him his face assumed an ashy hue, and he gasped out, "Charlie Sowle, how came you here?"

"The hospital report was false; I did not die. I thought I could gain nothing by contradicting your story, so I let it pass. I subsequently became acquainted with your daughter; she loved me, as I did her. We were married. For her dear sake, I freely forgive you the injury you did me."

"If you will accept a blessing from as bloody a hand as mine has been," said De Vere, "take mine now."

He called Lulu, gave her hand to Charlie Sowle, pronounced a father's blessing, then fell back in his chair. Lulu, with a little shriek, went to him. He was dead.

Lulu had cause, after many years of domestic happiness, to thank a merciful providence that her father's hand had not murdered Charlie Sowle.

Names of Vehicles.

Among the medley of names at present or recently given to pleasure carriages some are unintelligible, while others defy all etymological scrutiny. The landau is named from a town in Germany; it is a coach that may be used open or closed at pleasure. The landaulet, as its name implies, is a lighter and smaller landau. The barouche, a favorite open carriage in summer, is of French origin, as is the barouchet. The britzschka was introduced from Russia about half a century ago. Why the phaeton is so named we cannot pretend to say; but the vehicle so called belongs to the barouche and britzschka group. The cabriolet is French, and so is the vis-a-vis. Droitzschka came from Russia or Poland—an old kind of an affair, modified in England into a vehicle fitted for invalids, aged persons and children, with its formidable name shortened into drosky. The curricle is one of the few kinds of two-wheelers with two horses abreast; while the tandem is a straggling affair with two wheels and two horses, but one of the horses behind the other. The cab (short for cabriolet) is a handy bachelor's vehicle; the gig is about the lightest of all, being little more than an open-railed chair, supported on the shafts by two side springs; the dog-cart is a gig, with a space underneath to contain either dogs or luggage; while the tilbury, named after the coachman who invented it, is a modified cab. The stanhope, named after a noble lord, is another of the family of single-horse two-wheelers; and so is the sulky, for one person only; and so the buggy, and the jaunting-car, and the whisky. The dennet, we are told, has three springs peculiarly arranged, and "was so called because the three springs were named after the three Miss Dennets, whose elegant stage-dancing was much in vogue about the time this vehicle came into use." The French misanthrope, for one person, was probably the origin of our sulky. The fly is a roomy carriage let out to hire; why it is so called is not quite clear. The French fiacre neither denotes a particular person nor a special origin; there happened to be a figure of St. Fiacre in the front of the building where the first lender of these vehicles kept them. When we consider how readily the name hansom has come into use among us, as the designation for a vehicle, we need not marvel at the French having adopted fiacre. Victoria, clarence, brougham, are so many proofs of the ease with which the names of persons are given to new forms of carriages.—All the Year Round.

A Novel Way of Balancing an Account.

Baron R——, one of the gravest and most decorous Judges on the Irish bench, had a younger brother singularly unlike him, who was a perpetual thorn in his side. A scapegrace at school, the youth would learn nothing, and was the torment of his teachers. Having been set a sum by one of the latter, he, after an undue delay, presented himself before the desk and held up his slate, at one corner of which appeared a pile of coppers.

"What is the meaning of all this, sir?" said the master.

"Oh!" cried the youth, "I'm very sorry, sir, but I really can't help it. All the morning I've been working at a sum. Over and over again I've tried, but in spite of all I can do it will not come right. So I've made up the difference in half-pence, and there it is on the slate."

The originality of the device disarmed the wrath of the pedagogue, and young R—— was dismissed with his coppers to his place.

DEATH AT SEA.

How Soldiers Fear It—A Sad Scene.

[From the Boston Commercial Bulletin.]

Soldiers die bravely on the battle-field, and resignedly in the military hospital on shore, but there is something very sad in a soldier's death at sea. The surroundings of the ship-hospital are unfamiliar to his eye; the roll of the vessel is painful to him, and the thought is ever present to his mind that if he was on shore, if he could see the green fields, or even the snow-clad earth, his recovery might be possible. Although nothing could be more comfortable than the couch on which he lies, and scarcely anything more soothing than the gentle roll of the vessel to one in his condition, he longs to stretch his limbs on the barrack hospital bed, and to feel that he is on the firm ground.

Then the thought of the lonely burial in the wide waste of waters obtrudes itself upon his mind. To be launched over the vessel's side into the lonely ocean, committed to the deep, and left without a stone or wooden cross to mark the spot where his mortal remains were consigned to their everlasting rest, all this is inexpressibly saddening to the dying soldier. On shore, his comrades would have followed his remains to their resting place in the church-yard, and fired a farewell shot over his grave, and, with reluctant step, have left him to sleep the sleep that knows no waking till the trump of the archangel summons the dead to judgment.

How different at sea! Sewed up in a hammock, the corps to which he belongs summoned to the gangway-slip, a few short but solemn prayers said over the dead, and then the awful words:

"We commit this body to the deep!"

A plunge, and the corpse sinks into the sea; the flag is lowered; the vessel sails on, and the dead is left alone to the tossing of the angry waves, or to sink deep into the coral caves of the ocean. No comrade may come in after days and drop a tear over that grave; no loving hand may come and plant a flower there; it is lost; swallowed up in the immensity of the great graveyard of the deep.

The writer has stood by the side of a dying comrade in the hospital of a troop-ship, and heard the dying give utterance to such thoughts as the above.

"What does the surgeon say?" he asked. "Tell me the truth, comrade. I am not afraid of death."

"It is better that you should know the truth. He has no hope."

"I thought so. Well, God's will be done; but is hard to die in the middle of the ocean. If I had been on shore, even in a foreign country, it would have been easier. It is hard to be buried at sea."

"The sea will give up its dead."

"Ay, that is right, comrade. I ought to think of that. Seamen, they say, like to cherish the thought that they will be buried at sea; but I am a soldier. I would die happier if I knew that I would be buried on shore and be followed to the grave by my comrades. There is something beautiful in a soldier's funeral on shore. The solemn music—that Dead March in Saul—how I used to love it! My poor mother! It will grieve her to think that I was buried at sea. Read that, comrade, about the sea giving up its dead."

The chaplain at this moment approached, having been sent by the surgeon. He read the passage of scripture asked for, and many other beautiful passages.

The dying soldier closed his eyes during the reading. He lay silent for a long time after the chaplain had ceased. Then he opened his eyes and muttered, feebly:

"No funeral parade; no music; no farewell shot over my grave—committed to the deep. The—sea—will—give—up its—dead. Comrades—my mother—farewell!"

And he ceased to live.

Next day the vessel came to a stop for a few minutes. The ship's bell was tolled, the flag floated at half-mast, and the soldiers of the corps to which the deceased belonged were paraded at the gangway. The prayers were said, the body launched over the side, and the vessel resumed her course. Some of the members of the other corps on board were surprised on learning, late that evening, that a soldier had been buried during the day.

It is better that such things should be so. Nothing can be gained by saddening men unnecessarily. Cheerfulness is one of the most potent of sanitary agents. Every care should be taken to maintain it among large bodies of men.

A Bill to Prevent Customs Frauds.

Secretary Sherman has drafted and had introduced in the House of Representatives a bill to prevent frauds upon the customs revenue. It provides that, whenever any person not a United States officer shall furnish to the Secretary of the Treasury, or to any chief officer of customs or District Attorney, original information concerning any fraud upon the customs revenue, perpetrated or contemplated, which shall lead to the recovery of any duties withheld, or of any fines, penalty, or forfeiture incurred, whether by importers or their agents, or by any officer or person employed in the customs service, such person so furnishing information shall be entitled to receive one-third of the gross proceeds of such duties, the fine, penalty, or forfeiture so recovered to be paid under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

The bill further provides that whenever any officer of customs shall detect or seize goods, wares, and merchandise in the act of being smuggled, or which have been smuggled, or who shall detect a fraud by undervaluation or any other device upon the customs revenue, such officer shall be entitled to receive one-fourth of the gross proceeds resulting from such seizure, or which may be recovered on account of such fraud. Provided that this section shall not apply to any officer of customs whose annual salary is $4,000 or more.

The bill repeals Section 16 of the act entitled, "An act to amend the customs-revenue laws and to repeal moieties," as well as all other acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the foregoing.

ATTEMPTS are about to be made, under the auspices of the British Government, to open up more ports along the seaboard of India, in the hope of obtaining improved facilities for the distribution of food in case of future famines.

THE FARMER'S DAUGHTER.

Spring ruled in earth and air;
The breeze was soft and scented with the flowers
"Come, let us walk ere day away doth wear,"
My friend said suddenly, 'mid studious hours—
Whither, I do not care!"

Together forth we set;
He led me far along the river way
All blue with flowers that whisper "Ne'er forget,"
And, when I spoke of turning, answered, "Nay,
A little farther yet."

Amid the meadows green
A farm-house nestled: "'Tis not very far"—
My friend persuaded—"if you have not been,
I'll take you: on a farm the chances are There's something to be seen."

Once there, my friend delayed;
And I, half piqued, could see his glance go round
Until it rested on a lingering maid,
Who looked at him, and then upon the ground,
And then retreat essayed.

Homeward our steps we turned.
"And who's the damsel?" quoth I; and he—
"Why, nobody," and looked with eyes that yearned
Toward where, above us [illegible],
Love's planet faintly burned.

Be True to God.

Whatever the world may say or do,
In your life and soul to God be true;
For the world may laugh, or the world may chide,
But it cannot take you from Jesus' side,
Or take your Savior away from you,
And what the world says, as the years glide past,
Will die away like the wintry blast.

Life's Burdens and Hopes.

A SERMON BY REV. DR. THOMAS, OF CHICAGO.

If there be any month in the year that should bring to man only gladness, that month is May. The winter is past. The streams, no longer bound in icy beds, go laughing along their way. The earth is covered with green, and growing grass and budding leaf and blossoming tree all tell of life and hope. Birds of beauty and song come back to sing about our homes. All nature is joyous. And yet not all. The tears of man fall in beautiful May as well as in bleak November. And it seems even harder to weep in the spring-time than in the autumn or winter; for the dreary days keep company with sorrow, but the brighter days have not always the power to cheer, and often seem almost a mockery in the presence of grief or suffering.

It would be pleasant indeed could we make this springtime the truthful representation of all life, and see in that picture only forms of beauty and happiness. But we cannot. The years of man do not keep pace with the seasons. It is now spring to our earth, but it is already autumn and winter to many of the children of earth. These spring days fall not alone on childhood, but upon old age and feebleness as well. The earth's air is not all light with song and laughter, but is heavy with sighs and tears. "We that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened." The thought of the text is that mankind while in the body, while in this world, are burdened or oppressed, and, being oppressed, they cry out for relief; but they do not want this relief through underclothing, or through divestment, or by being deprived of what they have—that is, being annihilated—but rather of "being clothed upon," or invested with something higher, "that mortality might be swallowed up of life." And the hope of mankind is in the plan and purpose of God. "He hath wrought us for this self-same purpose," and "He hath given unto us the earnest or pledge of the spirit;" that is, there is in man a spirit that is ever trying to struggle upward, is ever longing for that which is above; and this longing, this struggle to be free, is the earnest, the pledge, or the way in which the divine spirit assures man that there is something better beyond, and thus cheers him on with the hope of what is yet to be.

Let us look at this double view of our world; the burdens and the hopes of mankind.

Many of these burdens seem to grow out of, or to be closely related to, man's bodily conditions. The sense of the text seems to be that of oppression, or burden, or hardship, or labor, imposed through the relations of matter to spirit. We need not dwell long upon these. They are all matters of common experience. We are burdened with the everyday labor of life. We may bear this burden lightly, making, as far as possible, a pleasure of a necessity—and it is well to do this—but still the load is upon us, and we must bear it; we cannot lay it down. Think how many things we should like to do could we be free from daily toil. We should like to roam over the fields and prairies, and gather the wild flowers of May. We should like to travel, to read, to paint, to play, to converse, but we are tied down to work. Our bodies must be fed, and clothed, and housed; and to do this the field and the shop and the store must all be kept busy. The spirit often feels that this is a burden, and longs to be free.

Then there are the burdens that come from weakness and disease and old age. Matter has weight, is inert, is dead, and it requires power to vitalize it, to support it in upright form and to carry it about. We tire from physical exertion, even under the most favorable conditions. There are very few so strong and perfectly healthy as scarcely to be conscious of their bodies only from a sense of vigor and buoyancy. What watching, what working, what care and doctoring to keep their bodies well; and with all our efforts how much sickness and pain, And these increase the burdens of life. Add to these the many forms of disease that afflict mankind, the long list of accidents, and losses of life and property on the land and the sea, and add to these the burdens of years, and the weakness and failing of strength and vision that come with old age, and it is not strange that our world groans, cries out from its sense of oppression.

Not only do we find these burdens resting upon individuals, but being upon individual life they thereby spread out and beame a part of the universal life. And not only do they rest upon bodily want, but upon the heart's life and affections, and the whole realm of mind and spirit as they reach out for truth and goodness. One living by himself and within himself may know only his own burdens; but let him press his way out into the great world of labor and thought and care, let him feel the tread of the world's muscle, let him feel the throb and pulse of the world's brain and heart, let him feel the real life of humanity, and he will then know something of the universal struggle, and see how it is that "the whole creation groaneth and travaileth together in pain until now." Oh what a world of struggle and burden are we called to look upon! Mothers with the care of home and children. Fathers with the burden and anxiety of business. Statesmen with the tangled affairs of the nation. Philosophers with the problems of thought. Philanthropists with the suffering of humanity. The church with darkness and sin. It seems to me that our whole world is brought up to a tension and strain never known before. The whole life of humanity seems intensified. Questions of government and law and religion are all casting their immense weight into the scales at once, and no one seems to know what the result is to be. Like the creaking and groaning of the ponderous wheels and engines in a great ship in the storm, humanity cries out in all lands.

As we look out upon this wide scene of toil and care and suffering, there is one thing that must impress us deeply; and that is the courage and endurance of our race. One would think that mankind would grow weary of the burden and seek to lay it down. One would think that the race would become almost discouraged at the simple struggle for existence. One would think that the great army of fathers and mothers, the great army of laborers, and business men, and statesmen, and moralists would grow weary of the struggle for life and bread and law and religion, and lie down in despair. But such is not the case. The daughters of to-day become the wives and mothers of to-morrow. The sons of to-day go out to plow the same fields that their fathers tilled before they came, or take their father's places in bank or office or commerce. Statesmen and philosophers and divines turn over the same old questions of thought that puzzled Lycurgus and Plato and Paul thousands of years ago, and the soldiers of to-day march over the same fields where fought the armies of Alexander and Cæsar. This is indeed a grand quality in man that he will not give up the struggle. Not one in ten thousand seeks death by self-destruction; and of the suicide it is always safe to say that the foundations of reason have in some way been unsettled. The struggle of man for life and thought and principle covers our whole world with a mantle of glory. In the face of hardship and want man struggles on. In the face of disease and death he makes the longest and best fight he can. In the face of ignorance and sin he presses on, planting the outposts of knowledge wherever he goes, and lifts up the flag of liberty over hill and plain. In the presence of cruelty and wrong he lifts up the cross and points to the tears of Jesus Christ; and over the grave he places the emblem of immortality. Oh, a grand struggle is this of our race. Rough as is the way of life, hard as are its trials and heavy its burdens, our race has stood up bravely under all for thousands of years; and as one generation has gone down another has taken its place, but not one in all the long line has been willing to end the conflict, or wanted to lie down in despair. At the end of thousands of years, years of toil and suffering, years written all over with change and sickness and death, man is not discouraged. He is not willing to be unclothed or divested. He wants to toil on. On the foundations of the old city or empire he seeks to build the new city, and to found the new civilization. Out of the blackened ruins of the old Chicago uprises the new and fairer Chicago of to-day. Before the dead are buried, or the fires quenched, plans are laid and work begun to rebuild the great mills of Minneapolis. A dozen men may lose their lives from a broken rail or a treacherous bridge, and a hundred men will take the very next train to recover their bodies and to repair the damage. Men are not disheartened in the world of thought and religion. Here, as in other things, they display a tireless energy and an unddying courage. If the Ptolemaic system of astronomy is found to be untrue, they give it up for the Copernican. If one system of philosophy will not solve the mystery of thought and being, another comes to take its place. Socrates and Plato succeed Thales and Pythagorus; Reid and Cousin succeed Bacon and Locke. The Reformation succeeded Romanism, and a broader catholicity is fulfilling the promise of the seed sown by Luther. This is, indeed, a grand quality in man.

Now, back of this sublime courage and endurance of our race there must be some unfailing power, and beneath it and within it there must be some powerful impulse or inspiration. That power is God. That inspiration is hope. Man does not fall because God does not fall. Man does not sink down in despair because hope ever points the way to something better beyond. And hope ever points that way because it is in the secrets of God; because it sees ever beyond where reason can go; sees through the darkest night the morning of the new day. And it sees this, again, because it is in the plan of God and in the nature of things. Hope is as June to May. It is always in the advance, and sees the flowers and the fruit even before the buds have opened.

About "Dying of Overwork."

But is overwork always the sole cause of the deplorable result? Human capacity for work is almost unlimited, and one of the simplest and best definitions of health is "being able to do a good day's work easy." Other questions then arise. Was the victim obedient to the inexorable laws of health? Did they put, as Emerson says Englishmen usually do, a solid bar of sleep between every two days? Did they eat and drink health and vigor, or dyspepsia and debility and paralysis? Did they preserve the equilibrium and vigor of the physical system by taking regular and energetic exercise, filling their lungs with the oxygen of pure air? Did they heed Sir Philip Sidney's four wise rules for lengthening life—

Great temp'rance, open air,
Easy labor, little care?

—New York Express.

He Had to Do It.

On the night in question they had been married scarcely a year. She had to sit up to wait for him until 12 o'clock, and then she went to bed. At 3 o'clock she was awakened by hearing him at the door. She opened the window and asked who was there.

"Me!" he responded, in a thick voice.

"Where have you been until this hour?" she indignantly demanded.

"I've been to lodge," he managed to articulate.

"Oh, you have, eh? Well, as you've been lodging until this time, I guess it won't hurt you any to sit up the rest of the night."

American Exhibits at Paris.

Paris, Wednesday, May 1, 1878.
[By Cable to the Associated Press.]

The display of scales by Fairbanks & Co., New York, is very grand, and creditable to the exhibitors, showing the advancement made by them over those of any other American or foreign manufacturers, and reflects great credit on American workmanship. The exhibit surpasses all others in merit at the Paris World's Fair.

Mason & Hamlin, who took the first medal for their cabinet organs at the Exposition in 1867, and have won the highest honors at every world's exhibition since, are here in competition with a fine lot of organs. Several other American makers exhibit, but few if any of them will venture to compete.

WATER-WAYS.

Interesting Letter from Ex-Gov. Seymour, of New York, to Senator Windom, of Minnesota.

Dear Sir: I am glad to see that you hold your ground with regard to water routes. In a little time the public mind will be with you. In this State there has been a great change in the views of our people. High tolls, frauds and other abuses had run down our canals to a point so low that most men thought their days had gone by, and that they would be of little or no use in the future. The railroads pushed them hard to get them out of the way. In 1870 we began to fight for low tolls. After a time they were cut down from 6 to 3 cents on a bushel of wheat from Lake Erie to the Hudson river. This was done after very hard work to bring it about. They were then put down to 1½ cents, then to 1 cent over the whole length of the Erie canal. No one now makes war against these very low tolls, and a very large party has grown up which asks for free canals. Grain can be carried, and give the boats a fair profit, for less than the tolls paid the State a few years ago. Six cents a bushel is enough to pay the State, the boats and all charges.

The whole country has been stirred up about the kind of money we shall use. However grave this may be, it is a little matter compared with the question of our ability to sell to the world what we raise on our lands. If we can do this we shall have all the gold and silver we want. If we fail to do this we shall be poor, our credit will be low, and our money will be scarce and poor. We are to raise more grain than we ever have raised. The changes of times are driving men from the cities into the country. Those who come from Europe are mostly those who till the soil. A like state of things exist elsewhere. War may, for a time, make a call for our grain, but we must not count upon war which may not take place, and which, in any event, will soon be over. Can we sell our grain in Europe against those who raise grain in Europe? We can, if it does not cost too much to get it there, and this will turn upon a very small sum. The question is not, If it costs 3 cents more to get it to market, how much will this tax the States of the West? but, Will this little change stop the sale of our grain abroad? The men who know the most about this trade say that at most times it will. If 3 cents profit can be made it will be bought. If not, it will be left on the hands of our farmers to bear down the price of that which we use in this country. If it costs 3 cents too much to carry grain, we shall lose many millions of dollars. If the West does not sell its grain it cannot buy of the East what the East has to sell. The wheels of commerce and industry will all be checked.

To show you what the reduction of one-half a cent a bushel will do, I send you the report of the Comptroller of this State, which proves that, when about a year ago the toll was changed from 1½ cents to 1 cent per bushel it brought back the trade to the Erie canal. I wish you would note the fact that this was not due to the large crops of last year. Less grain was sent to the seaboard in 1877 than was sent in 1876, up to time the canals closed. What the canals gained last year the railroads lost, namely, about 18,000,000 bushels of wheat.

We do not know that there will be a war between Great Britain and Russia, but all must see that we are to have a long fight with Russia for the markets of Europe, and upon this turns the whole question of the revival of the trade and prosperity of our country.

Can our railroads give us a victory?

No one thinks of them more highly than I do. We cannot do without them. They have uses of their own whoich water-routes cannot meet. On the other hand, without water-routes they will and do charge more than they should. They have cost too much. They cannot live unless they make pools with each other. In other words, they say openly that it is not their policy to carry for a low price and thus make trade, but to carry less and charge more. They cannot make pools with water-routes, because each man owns his own boat. For this reason English railroads have bought up English canals to get them out of the way. They have done this in other countries in Europe. They have tried to break down the lake, river, and canal routes in this country. They will fail as to the great lakes and the Erie canal.

I do not know enough of the Mississippi river to speak about it. I hope its trade will be kept up. It may turn some from New York, but it will be for the good of the whole country, if it keeps the railroads in check. There must be a steamboat route from the Mississippi river to the great lakes. It will not only carry much grain, but it will do much more good by keeping down charges.

Just now most men think the water-routes have lost their value. The truth is, they grow in value as new railroads are made. The Erie canal was never worth so much to New York as it is today. It carries at a low rate, and makes the railroads do the same. I am very truly yours, etc., Horatio Seymour.

Natural Selection.

Investigators of natural science have demonstrated beyond controversy, that throughout the animal kingdom the "survival of the fittest" is the only law that vouchsafes thrift and perpetuity. Does not the same principle govern the commercial prosperity of man? An inferior cannot supersede a superior article. Illustrative of this principle are the family medicines of R. V. Pierce, M. D., of Buffalo, N. Y. By reason of superior merit, they have outrivaled all other medicines. Their sale in the United States alone exceeds one million dollars per annum, while the amount exported foots up to several hundred thousand more. No business could grew to such gigantic proportions and rest upon any other basis than that of merit. It is safe to say that no medicine or combination of medicines yet discovered equals or can compare with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, for the cure of coughs, colds, and all pulmonary and blood affections. If the bowels be constipated and liver sluggish, his Pleasant Purgative Pellets will give prompt relief; while his Favorite Prescription will positively, perfectly, and permanently cure those weaknesses and "dragging-down" sensations peculiar to females. In the People's Common Sense Medical Advisor, an illustrated work of nearly one thousand pages, the Doctor has fully discussed the principles that underlie health and sickness. Price $1.50, post-paid. Adapted to old and young, single and married. Address R. V. Pierce, M. D., World's Dispensary and Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y.

A Guinea for a Sixpence.

A firm in New York seems unfamiliar with the London story of the man who offered to sell real guineas at a trifle, but could find no buyers. Geo. P. Rowell & Co.,—the "Newspaper Advertising Bureau," propose, for one hundred (?) dollars, to put a ten-line advertisement in some thirty standard weeklies, and to slide it into a thousand other weeklies free. Do they expect people to take the offer? Any one acquainted with the high rates of these standard weeklies can see that the thing is ridiculous. Rowell & Co. must know very well that acceptances of the offer would be so many items to charge to profit and loss. We retract our insinuation about their ignorance of that London story. They probably know it too well, and are shrewd enough, by taking advantage of that human trait at which the story hints, to make a stroke for fame as men of startling liberality, and at the same time run no risk of pecuniary loss.

J. R. LANNING, CHAIRMAN
DeKalb Co. Dem Cen. Com.

—Certain movements among the Republicans, points to another southern outrage campaign.

—The Legislature of Ohio has redistricted that state so that the Democrats got 14 congressmen out of twenty —Senator Voorhees has presented a petition in the U. S. Senate, asking that six hours be made a days work; and the Indianapolis Journal is surprised that the Senator did not make it two hours, or declare all work illegal.

We take the above from the Waterloo Press of last week to show how very mean and low some radical sheets can be, and how stupid they imagine the people to be. They say Senator Voorhees presented a petition. Who else would present such a thing to the United States Senate from Indiana but a Senator from that State. Say the people of Indianapolis would sign a petition praying for a law to compel the editor of the Journal to tell the truth, Senator Voorhees or McDonald would have to present it to that body. But in the above item they insinuate that Senator Voorhees made out the petition and presented it, when it was sent to him by his constituents, signed by Republicans as well as Democrats. It is a little mean to misrepresent things in this way.

The Electoral Fraud.

In the contest in the House to bring about an investigation of the Electoral Fraud, the Republicans will soon find out in what an utterly indefensible attitude they have placed themselves. If it is not an open plea of guilty and confession of crime, no party ever plead it. Nor will all the sophistry and ingenuity of Messrs. Garfield, Hale and Conger bear the test of common sense. How does the case stand before the country, regardless of any partisan effect?

Messrs. Garfield and Hale were chiefly instrumental in and instigators of the theft of the electoral vote of Louisiana. Every intelligent man knows that both Hale and Garfield were both down there and supervised the job. Every intelligent child knows that without their powerful aid and influence, Wells and Anderson—who were but the instruments—never would have dared the dangerous deed. The investigation proposed therefore directly aims at Hale and Garfield themselves. They are among the parties to be investigated. If they had ordinary decency or shame, their great personal interest in the matter, would have dictated silence If they had a clear conscience they would have demanded this investigation in order to vindicate the themselves. But as they have a guilty conscience and not a particle of shame or decency, they had the audacity to lead the opposition. In doing so did they not confess their guilt?

The answer, that they only opposed it because it did not grant them an investigation into alleged frauds in Oregon and Mississippi, is no answer at all This is and can not be an investigation in what was intended, or should have been, but what actually was done. The vote for Oregon was count for Hayes, and that settles the matter so far as Mr Garfield is concerned. The allegations about Mississippi are preposterous.—This is not to inquire why people voted nor how they voted, but simply why and how, after the people had cast their ballots, they were robbed of the result of their election by infamous republican leaders and the returning boards. Besides, in the creation of the electoral commission, the republicans themselves distinctly admitted that their charges against Mississippi were groundless. They dropped those charges and consented that they should not even be presented as disputed questions before the electoral commission. In the counting of the votes of those states not a single objection was made to them by a single republican. They then and there finally, and irrevocably consented to their legality, and debarred themselves from future cavil or objections. They did this, too, after a committee of the senate, under the lead of Morton, had concluded a most searching, expensive and thorough investigation into the election of Mississippi. After hundreds of witnesses were examined the result was so palpable that the committee dropped the whole matter and never made a report. It did not ask even to submit the question to the senate. The issues were joined and the pleadings were closed when the electoral commission was created, and the republicans themselves left all mention of Mississippi out of them. To bring up the matter now is not only to go behind the returns, but a ridiculously great distance further. To compare this with the case of Florida—where the very person whose vote would have given the state to Tilden, but who gave it to Hayes instead, now confesses that he did so fraudulently, and only through great pressure of the agents of Mr. Hayes—is preposterous nonsense.

Turn and twist and toil as they may the republicans can not escape the dilemma in which their leaders have placed them. Beneath all the shame and subterfuge remains the plain fact that they are afraid of the truth, opposed to investigation, allied to fraud, and closely identified with the crime of the nineteenth century.

We understand he will run on passenger train No. 6. He has gained many friends while among us. J., you have our best wishes, and we hope you will meet with success in your new position.

PERKINS.

GARRETT, IND. May 18th '68.

EDITOR AUBURN COURIER—A meeting was held at the Episcopal church, Wednesday evening, May 8th, for the purpose of determining whether Rev. Trimble's congregation and the people of Garrett could make up his salary, for the ensuing year—the Garrett goat as he is called here, but which should be the Ohio goose, says it was to determine whether the congregation desired to retain Rev. Trimble as its minister, after preaching his farewell sermon Sunday evening, and says this appears to be a strange turn of affairs. Nothing definite was accomplished by the meeting Being an interested party in this affair, I wish to mention a few facts in regard to this matter. Nine tenths of the people of Garrett were in favor of keeping Mr. Trimble here, and a gentleman of the church went among the people to see what could be done in regard to his salary. All things went favorably, and since certain parties begin to find out that Rev Trimble was written to return to his parish, goes around among the people telling them he does not want Rev. Trimble to return. I would ask the said goose, did he ever lay an egg on the altar of said church. I think not. Said goose was very thankful to the gentleman spoken of, in fact all the reading matter there ever was in the goose's sheet, was put there by said Rev. Trimble, and now he goes around with others trying to defame the character and reputation of said gentleman, but he will find out, and that soon, that Garrett is getting too hot for his feathered Majesty of Rome.

GARRETT, IND., May 21, 1878.

EDITOR COURIER, Dear Sir:—Please allow me space in your valuable paper to express a few facts in regard to the election and administration of the town of Garrett. I noticed in your last paper two very long articles from here on the same subject, and as I am directly interested in the welfare and prosperity of the town, I wish to make the following statement. Our elections are controled to a great extent by men who have no property here, and who have publicly declared that they never intended to have any in this town, and would not be bound to live here for the whole town. The new board of Trustees met and organized on Monday evening, May 18. There being no change from last year except the trustee from the third ward, treasurer and assessor. On motion of J. Wm. Wagner, of the second ward, F. D. Bisett was chosen chairman. Next in order was the reading and approving of bonds. First offered was E. D. Bryant's bond (treasurer,) signed by E. D Bryant, H. S. Morse and S. M. Sherman. The bond was objected to on the ground, "can a trustee who has the approving of a bond go on the same bond?" After some conversation on the question, the board adjourned till May 27th. The "Herald," which is published here every Thursday didn't come out until Friday morning—delayed on account of a lot of blackguard filth which some of Powell's intelligent literary "asses" had tried to compile in a chronicle form. There was nothing in it worthy of note. If the "Herald" contained less blackguardism and a little more intelligent reading matter it would be of more credit to the editor and the town in general. The "Herald" of May 9th says: "The Railroad and Land Companies pay about three-fourths of the collectable taxes." We will admit the above to be true, but did it not cost the town of Garrett $150 last summer to drain a certain prive cellar? It must certainly be very gratifying for those companies to know they have paid three-fourths of this bill. H. S. Morse says the reason N. B. Rowe was defeated for trustee in the third ward, was owing to the (Rowe) being in bad company. Mr. Rowe is is a very respectible citizen, who received the nomination at the regular caucus, but we must admit that he was in rather questionable society when he was in company with H. S. Morse. The following are a few questions for H. S. Morse to answer. Is this the H. S. Morse who brought N. W. Gifford, former freight agent, to Garrett with flattering recommends? The man who gambled away his wife's property and then left her with her little children houseless, homeless and without money or any visible means of support, upon the cold charity of the world, and who before he left succeeded in bringing his father-in-law to financial ruin? Is this the H. S. Morse who brought that man Glazier, the painter, to Garrett and recommended him as an honorable, trustworthy young man, and assisted him in establishing a credit in town, and when he had contracted large bills at all the stores and owed a poor widow woman a three month board bill, stole away from the town between two days. Are you the H. S. Morse that brought the noted pettifoger, VanNorman, to Garrett and went around town locked arms with him, introducing him to every one you would meet as a first-class lawyer and a gentleman of integrity, and who by your assistance as a town trustee, was made the city attorney, and who in the course of three months left the town on one of your passes as master of transportion on the B. & O. R. R., owing a bill at all the saloons and dry goods stores, and a fifty-five dollar board bill at the DeKalb House? Are you the H. S. Morse who recommended that noted rascal and swindler Carver, to the citizens of Garrett as a straight forward and reliable man, the fellow that was tracked up for three or four years as a defaulter and who dare not let his post office address be known, but would go to Altona for his mail. The fellow whom H. S. Morse acknowledged gave two hundred dollars as a bribe when he was tracked to his hiding place, to escape the hands of the officers. The rascal that was Morse's partner in the banking business? Can this be that same H. S. Morse? Are you the H. S. Morse that bolted from the caucus which you went into, because you did not receive the nomination, and then procured the nomination at a secret caucus, and wrote a sugar-coated letter to a certain man, trying to beg his support by making flattering promises, and how bad you wanted the office. Why did all your stool-pigeons work so hard for your election? Why were you so anxious to have that man who sits in the bank with you elected town treasurer? For what amount is that bank responsible? Is it a safe depository in which to trust the taxes which is to be collected of the poor laborers of Garrett, and the treasurer under straw bail? Are these unreasonable questions for the tax payers of Garrett to give due consideration to? In conclusion has this H. S. Morse ever been instrumental in bringing a gentleman of integrity and responsibility to Garrett? VanEveran, VanNorman, Donahoe, Gifford, Glazier, Carver. And yet Rowe was in bad company.—Bah!

Are Coming

The Lone Star Jubilee Singers will appear at Ensley's Hall Tuesday evening, May 28th. This is a first-class troupe, and have been in organization over five years, under judicious training. They not only render the finest selections of plantation melodies, but execute the finest selections of Quartettes, Duetts and Solos. Those who love good music will never regret hearing this famous troupe.

—The case of Darling vs. Spooner, for damages on a charge of malpractice came up last week in court and was concluded last Monday, the jury after being out but a short time, returned a verdict of not guilty. The case was ably managed on both sides, Messrs. Woodhull and Dills for plaintiff and Best, Rose & Hartman for defendant. A large number of witnesses were introduced, among them some very able physicians, and the verdict was not unexpected. Physicians can not be held responsible for the carelessness of their patients.

—A fellow by the name of Potter, is running a wheelbarrow from Albany, N. Y. to San Francisco, and we look upon it as a great waste of muscle. The journey is 3324 miles long, and he has to do it 215 days, Sundays not counted. He reached Fort Wayne last Friday and was received by a large delegation—of boys and hotel runners. Now if Sergt. Bates could be induced to sit astride of the barrow and cary the flag, and Ed. Kenedy follow in the rear with some of his poetry, they could say at the end of their journey, "When shall we three meet again."

—Without the least intention to flatter, we can say that the lecture Tuesday evening, by Rev. Mr. Sanders, was really a fine one, equal to those who have a much wider reputation in the lecture field. The subject, "Wit and Humor," was clearly defined and many examples given in a most happy pleasing style. The audience was an appreciative one, and their frequent demonstrations showed the extent of their enjoyment. We hope that Mr. Sanders will give us at an early day, his other popular lecture, "Backbone," as we have heard frequent remarks expressing a desire to that effect.

A Serious Charge.

When God made the world, he accumulated more sand than he wanted so he dumped a big pile of it over in Pulaski county. The boys who have been trying to raise cabbage in this sand have given up the enterprise and joined the National Greenback party for a living.—Kokomo Tribune.

Most of the boys of this county, who joined the National Greenback party, did it because they "didn't have the sand," to grow cabbages or anything else that requires any ambition. They get their living by deadbeating.—Auburn Republican.

We are not familiar with the character of the men who have become identified with the greenback movement in De Kalb county, but if they are anything like the citizens who from the nerve and backbone of the greenback party in this "neck of the woods," the above charge is a base slander which we did not think the intelligent editor of the Republican would stoop to perpetrate.—Angola Herald.

The above is a great slander upon our citizens. Among those identified with the greenback party are some of our best citizens, and the malignant charge of their being dead beats, is a mean contemptible fling at some of our best farmers.

A Midnight Murder.

AN OLD CITIZEN BRUTALLY SHOT DOWN.

THE ARREST OF LOUIS ABBOTT.

The quiet of a peaceful home has been invaded, and the hand of the murderer has done its fatal work. Last Friday at the hour of midnight, Frank Holton, one of the early settler of DeKalb county, residing about three miles east of Summit, about seventy-three year old,

WAS BRUTALLY SHOT DOWN

at his own threshold. The particulars are as follows:

Mrs. Bratton, a married daughter of Mr. Holton, residing in his family, was awakened in the night by a noise. She cried out to her parents in the next room, and the old gentleman got up, and as he reached the door, the report of a pistol was heard, and then a cry from him that he was shot. It was found afterward by the traces of blood, that after being wounded he went out on the porch and then back again to his bed, where he was found dead. The ball entered the left breast just above the heart, cutting an artery. The daughter screamed, when the murderer told her to shut her d—d yelling or he would shoot her too. Mrs. Holton and her daughter, in great terror, remained quiet, and they could hear the murderer rummaging the house, though he did not enter their rooms. They testified at the inquest that he must have remained in the house about two hours. Mrs. Holton went around the house and through the window into the room where her daughter was. Here they remained in fear of their lives until morning, when

THE ALARM WAS GIVEN.

A search was at once made by the neighbors, and about 10 o'clock they found one Louis Abbott, at a place called Steubenville, near Summit, on the line of the Canada Southern Railroad, about four miles from the scene of the murder. He was arrested by M. P. Barker and Geo. Cosper, and a revolver was found under the mattrass of a lounge at Mr. Hoffman's, where Abbott was. There were six cartridges in the weapon and one chamber empty. At the post mortem the bullet was extracted and it corresponded with those in the revolver. Abbott denied ownership in the revolver, though it is reported now that he afterward confessed it was his. By the time the coroner's inquest was over, the crowd had increased and a strong

FEELING IN FAVOR OF LYNCHING

was developed. A rope was procured and several attempts to throw it over Abbott's neck, but by the firmness of the arresting parties, among whom were the above gentlemen, Geo. Maxwell, John Sommers and J. J. VanAuken who stood with drawn revolvers in his defense, he was rescued and placed in jail at Auburn about 12 o'clock Saturday night. We had an interview with Abbott Sunday morning. He was asleep in his cell at the time, but aroused himself, and made

THE FOLLOWING STATEMENT:

I have been working near Huntertown planting corn; went to Summit to get some money due me before I was arrested for forgery last fall; slept in Barker's barn Friday night, and then went to Yuba Dam (Steubenville) to get breakfast. When there I was arrested; knew Mr. Holton and had worked for him for some time. He was a good friend of mine and were on good terms. I had nothing to do with his murder, and did not have a revolver.

Abbott says Canton, Ohio, is his home and that he is twenty-three years of age. He was sent to state's prison from Fort Wayne in June '76 for grand larceny, and from Auburn last fall for forgery, but on a decision of the supreme court a new trial was had in the last case, on a charge of forgery, as the signature to the forged instrument was so villainously bad that no name could be legibly recognized. He appears entirely indifferent to his surroundings, and treats the matter with the utmost nonchalance. The daughter said that if Abbott was in the country he was the murderer, as she recognized his voice when he told her to stop her screaming or he would shoot her, too.

The Grand Jury has been re-called and a presentment of the case will be made this term and possibly it will go to trial. All excitement has subsided, and there is a general desire that the prisoner have a fair and impartial trial. This the law guarantees to all and we believe it will be complied with.

The following is the verdict of the coroner's jury:

We, the undersigned jurors, empaneled and sworn on the 18th day of May, 1878, at the township of Franklin in the county of DeKalb and State of Indiana by James J. Latson, the Coroner of said county, to inquire, and true presentment make, in what manner, and by whom Francis Holton, whose body was found at said township, county and State, on said 18th day of May, 1878, came to his death. After having heard the evidence and examined the body, we do find, that the deceased came to his death by violence, and that said body has upon it the following marks, to-wit: A gun shot wound on the left breast, passing through the left pulmonary artery, then passing through the lung. Said gunshot wound was caused by a pistol ball, Calibre No. 22. And we the jury do further find, that said gunshot wound was inflicted by one Lewis Abbott, and that said injury or gun shot wound was the immediate cause of the death of said Francis Holton. Signed.

Cyrus Jackman, J. O. Beard, John Murrer, Ezra E. Lautzenheiser, Joseph Sewell, Adam Hamman.

San Francisco, Cal., May 12, 1878.

T. C. Mays, Auburn, Ind.—If you only knew what a scrape you have got me in by exacting a promise from me to write to you regular, you would be ashamed of yourself. Most of my time is spent in running around the city. I am settled in business, and it is such that I have to be out on the go about four hours a day. However, it suits me and what is better still, it pays. I see by some letters I have received from my friends at Auburn, that it is predicted that I will be back to Auburn before long. I think they will have to come here if they want to see me, as they are very much mistaken. I have not had any desire to see Auburn since I left, except the natural one to see my friends. I expect to have them out here before long, and I am about purchasing a property close to the city of Oakland; it is only forty miles from this city, and a ticket good for a month costs only $3. Trains run every thirty minutes, and besides Oakland is a better place to live in than this city. It is free from the cold winds and fogs that are San Francisco's great drawback. I was out to Woodward's gardens last Sunday to see a baloon ascension and the wind was terrible. They had to let the gas escape, and after standing in a crowd of about 15000 persons about two hours I left; however, I am going to stick to it as it is advertised for this week. I saw no less than seven different pic nics leaving town last Sunday. The Knights of Pythias held a street parade and excursion Wednesday. They made an elegant appearance. Business of all kinds has been very much depressed here for the last year, but things are looking better now, and what is a better indication still of returning prosperity, real estate is advancing, and there are great many investments being made by capitalists, in expectation of an advance over present prices. We have an orator here called Kearney, who is trying to raise a grand row with the police. He is a demagogue of the worst kind, and his speeches would not be tolerated in an eastern city. He and his followers got beautifully cleaned out last week by the police. About one hundred were badly clubbed and since then the workingmen's movement has been on the decline. This climate has a tendency to make one want to sleep late in the mornings. To illustrate, I arose this morning by a mighty effort at four o'clock, thinking I would look through the markets, and on arriving there, was informed that the business did not get under full blast until about six o'clock. After this I shall slumber on, knowing that I will see all that is to be seen if I get up at my usual hour. The Chinese problem is making a fearful division in the ranks of all parties, and you can hardly find out of a crowd of twenty men over three or four who do not have some solution of their own to this question. I think that they will stay, as there seems no way open by process of law by which they can be made to go.

Wm. O. Brian, one of the great Bonanza firm, died a few days ago, and instead of his estate being what it was supposed to be, from twenty to fifty millions of dollars, it was sworn in under six. Just think how the poor man had to economize to keep up appearances, while everybody thought he was wealthy. He had a great many personal friends, and has made the fortunes of most of them by giving them points in regard to the stock market. There seems to be a great rivalry between the Bonanza firm and Senator Sharon, and of late Sharon has got the best of them in several transactions, but he has the Palace Hotel on his lands and took all of Ralston's real estate at high figures, which he still holds and the Bonanzas have the most ready money. Every business possible in California is made a monopoly of. For instance, a few years ago some sharp fellows went to work and got up a corner on broom corn, bought all they could find and instead of selling it at an advance, went into the business of manufacturing and made their pile. I met an old school mate of mine, who left Spencerville over nineteen years ago, Mr. David Henderson. Cey Plum will remember him. Also Mr. John Maier, of Fort Wayne, who is in the fire patrol, Mr. S C. Evans was up to this place for a few days, and a number of my friends from the south part of the state are at present in the city, so under the circumstances I have a good time.—Crops of all kinds in California will be immense this season, and an era of renewed prosperity seems about to open. Give my regards to all my friends, you know about who they are. If any one in Auburn thinks of coming out here, if they will write to me in regard to what they want to go into, I can help them, as the business I am in makes that kind of help a specialty. I have received no Courier as yet, and am beginning to think I never shall. But I must close—so much deep thought as I have to undergo, in the composing of a letter is very trying to a delicate constitution. In the words of the Poet, I cease.

A. C. Dawson.

More Orange Blossoms.

We never heard of so many marriages in May before. There was Don Cameron and Donna Sherman, they joined fortunes (about half million) only a few days ago, and now one of our merchants having caught the infection, is on his way to the sunny south with his darling by his side. In our day this month interfered with the happy plans, and along at the close of dull winter, and when the first faint (hints of spring began to suggest flowers, and clover, why, the question naturally came up. The sluggish approach of the mild, ethereal, constrained the swain to hint of June, but the eyes of the timid bride, more forcibly than words, said April. But to our subject. G. H. Forkner, Esq., actually came here a stranger, opened up in the dry goods business, and the sly, consummate old bach. can now display a piece of calico of which he may well be proud. Who would have thought that the charming Miss Mattie Nichols would have thought of such a thing. They were married yesterday at 10 o'clock, by Rev. Mr. Johnson, at the residence of her sister, Mrs. Swineford. We gladly join a legion of friends in wishing them earth's choicest blessings and that their lines may be cast in pleasant places.

Mr. Editor—Will you please allow me space in the columns of your paper to say that I was the recipient of a beautiful quilt, from the scholars of District No. 6, Union-tp., each block bearing the name of the giver. The presentation was made at the school house May 11th, where we partook of a bountiful repast, prepared by the citizens of the District. Many thanks to the scholars and parents for their token of friendship. Long may they live and be ornaments to the society in which they move. Thank you Mr. Ed. for the insertion of this.

—Uncle John Castell, of Silver Lake, three miles west of Angola, carries off the palm as having raised the first new potatoes of the season. The 14th day of May (yesterday) Uncle John presented the Republican with a mess of early Rose potatoes, of his own production. They are about the size of a hulled walnut, and for fear that some incredulous persons may doubt the story, we have concluded to keep the murphys on exhibition at this office.—Steuben Republican.

Wilmington, May 20th, 1878.

Those two young men living south of Waterloo, who attended the church at No. 4, Wilmington township, and escorted a couple of young ladies home, to the next house south of the church, and tying their horses near the hog pen, where they killed one of my hogs, then dragging it into the weeds to hide it, then going into the house where the ladies were waiting patiently for them, who during the night broke three of my chairs to pieces, and it being rainy stayed until the next day in the afternoon, are requested to come around and settle up for the damage they have done.

OBITUARY.

In the death of Mrs. E. Frances Yesbera, wife of G. H. Yesbera, of this place, our comunity lost a most amiable and accomplished lady. Of a refined delicate mould, almost fragile in her nature full of sensibilities always beaming with the mildest of gentleness, yet no one supposed that her fair life, gleaming so brightly, was to be so sadly brief. On her 20th birthday 1876 she was married to Mr. Yesbera, at West Unity, Ohio, and soon after came to this place to live. Her amiable disposition won for her numerous friends, in her new home, and when the deadly upas of disease made its appearance they gathered round her, with a kindly interest true and faithful to the last. Cold and lifeless is the heart which knew nothing but gentleness and love, and closed the lips that spoke naught but kindness; but from out that dark and silent tomb, in that great day a light shall come, and a voice will murmer "I am not dead but sleepeth," and from her lowly estate, she shall rise to that celestial abode, and there'll be no more parting there.

THE EAST.

GEORGE R. WATERMAN, formerly Assistant Postmaster of the Pacific Mills, Lawrence, Mass., has been arrested, having failed to secure the company against loss by his defalcation of $100,000.

PHILADELPHIA'S Permanent Exhibition was reopened to the public on the 10th inst. Senator Blaine was orator of the day.

BARON BLANC, the Italian Minister to the United States, was married in New York last week to Miss Terry, daughter of a Cuban millionaire. The wedding is described as the most elegant in the social annals of New York. ....Jason Scribner, living near Augusta, Me., killed three of his children the other day, and then attempted to take his own life.

THE Providence (R. I.) Tool Company has started up to complete the original Turkish contract, of which about 100,000 rifles are still to be made....The steamship State of California, just launched at the yard of William Cramp & Sons, Philadelphia, has been sold to the Russian Government.

THE WEST.

A PERFORMER in a traveling variety combination attempted, at Rockport, Ind., the other evening, the feat of shooting an apple from the head of a woman. The aim miscarried, and an 8-year-old boy named Weigel, who was playing outside the canvas, was shot in the forehead, and almost instantly killed.

BOUCICAULT'S sensational story, "After Dark," depicting high and low life in the great cities, is the attraction at McVicker's Theater, Chicago. It is presented with a powerful cast of characters, new and characteristic scenery, and is having a big run.

THE movement of the Government against the Cincinnati whisky ring has culminated in the seizure of several distilleries and rectifying houses and the arrest of the proprietors. The Government authorities have ample evidence of the crookedness of the parties who have been proceeded against. Gen. Weitzel, Internal Revenue Collector for the Cincinnati district, has been asked to resign.

GEN. JAMES SHIELDS, in an interview with a Chicago reporter, pronounces the reports about a Fenian invasion of Canada sensational and without foundation....The late severe frost caused serious injury to the vineyards in many parts of the Northwest.

CINCINNATI'S great musical festival has proved a great success....A Portland (Ore.) dispatch says: "First Lieut. H. DeWitt Moore, of Company F, Twenty-first Infantry, was drowned at Fort Klamath."

LYMAN POTTER, the man who is trundling a wheelbarrow from Albany to San Francisco to earn a purse of $1,000, passed through Fort Wayne, Ind., a few days ago, in good condition. He started from Albany on April 20, and must reach San Francisco by Dec. 10 to get his money, which is already on deposit in Albany. He has thus far averaged about twenty-six miles per day.

THE SOUTH.

FOUR persons have died in Russell county, Va., and others are dangerously ill, from the effects of eating poisoned butter. The butter had been impregnated with the poison by a farmer's wife for the purpose of poisoning a thief who had been depredating upon her dairy, and was unwittingly sold to a dealer, and by him dealt out to his customers.

A STRANGE romance of crime is narrated in St. Louis papers. Six years ago, Julie Leblanc, daughter of a farmer in Jefferson county, Mo., mysteriously disappeared one evening, and was never again seen alive. A negro, while shooting snipe along the bank of the Mississippi river, twenty or thirty miles from the home of Leblanc, saw a stray skiff floating down the stream, and, on overhauling it, found it to contain a female skeleton, which proved to be that of the long-missing girl. The theory is that she was enticed from home by a discarded lover, strangled, and placed in the skiff, which was then securely fastened to the bank of a creek at a place where the underbrush was so thick as to effectually hide it; that there the boat remained until the ravages of time made the ropes decay, and thus the loosened boat floated down the creek and into the Mississippi river.

WASHINGTON.

GEN. ADAM BADEAU has furnished to the War Department evidence that his wound at Port Hudson was of such a nature as to bring him under the operation of an act which allows wounded officers to be placed on the retired list, and to also hold civil offices. His name has consequently been restored to the army list....President Hayes has given directions to have the Ku-Klux cases on the docket at Columbia, S. C., nolle prossed, and it is expected that the Ku-Klux prisoners in the Albany penitentiary will be pardoned.

THE total amount recommended in the bill reported in the House from the Committee on Appropriations for the support of the army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, is $26,929,671, of which the amount recommended for the pay and allowance of officers who may retire under its provisions is $2,897,000. The total regular sum is $24,032,671. The total amount appropriated by the last law was $25,712,500. The total sum of estimates is $31,292,232. The decrease from the estimates is $7,159,561.55.

THE General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States met in Pittsburgh last week. Dr. Francis L. Patton, of Chicago, was elected Moderator on the first ballot.

POLITICAL.

THE Republican State Convention of Pennsylvania met at Harrisburg on the 15th inst., and nominated Henry M. Hoyt, of Luzerne county, for Governor. A platform was adopted, in substance as follows: 1. Adherence to the protective policy and hostility to free trade in all its aspects, and especially to the Wood Tariff bill. 2. That, labor being the source of all wealth, it is the duty of the [illegible] to [illegible] and encourage it, so as to secure profitable employment to both labor and capital. 3. That it is the duty of Congress to aid in developing American commerce, and to promote the prosperity of the manufacturing and agricultural, mining and industrial interests of the country. 4. That public lands belong to the people, and should be reserved to actual settlers, so that the landless may be encouraged and aided in occupying them. 5. That Congress should extend its constitutional power to regulate internal commerce so as to prevent discrimination in freight rates. 6. Denouncing the payment of Southern rebel claims, and holding the Democracy responsible for the presentation of such claims, amounting to $300,000,000. 7. Indorsing Gov. Hartranft's administration.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE steamship Sardinia, of the Allan line, was destroyed by fire in the harbor of Londonderry, Eng., on the 10th inst. The fire was caused by an explosion of generated gas, from the effects of which several persons were killed and many wounded. A number of steerage passengers were cut off from help by the flames, which burst out immediately after the explosion, and lost their lives.

THERE is a great depression in trade throughout England, and the cable reports several heavy failures in London and other cities....The negotiations between the Vatican and Russia have completely failed....It is said that in case of war the Russian Gen. INTENSE excitement was produced in the city of Berlin, the other day, by an unsuccessful attempt to assassinate the Emperor William. While he was out driving a tinsmith named Hoedel, from Leipsig, fired two pistol shots into his carriage. Fortunately neither shot took effect. The would-be assassin and an accomplice, named Krueger, were arrested.

A BERLIN dispatch says the prisoner Hoedel still denies any intention to assassinate the Emperor William, but sufficient evidence has been accumulated to prove conclusively that the prisoner aimed directly at his sovereign....Berlin bankers have, it is said, made Russia a preliminary advance of 50,000,000 rubles.

IT is rumored that England will send a large force to threaten Russia in the Caucasus. ....The Russians have tightened their grip on Roumania by disposing an army corps in such a manner as to entirely cut off the Roumanian army in Little Wallachia from the capital. It was found necessary to call out troops to quell the disturbance.

BY the explosion of an ammunition factory in Paris, twenty employes were killed and many wounded....Advices from Bucharest state that detachments of Russian reserves and recruits continue to pass through Roumania for the regiments in the field. Some of those men are totally ignorant of military drill. Trains of ammunition are also passing to the Danube.

ADVICES from Japan say that Minister of the Interior Okubo was murdered in the street by five assassins, while on his way to a Cabinet council. All the assassins were arrested.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS.

FRIDAY, May 10.—SENATE.—The Senate adopted the House joint resolution assigning $30,000 of the appropriation for the completion of the Washington National Monument to strengthen the foundation of that structure, and then resumed consideration of the bill to modify or repeal the Bankrupt law. Mr. Dawes advocated fixing January 1, 1879, as the time for the repeal going into effect. Mr. McCreery made a short but spirited speech in favor of immediate repeal, and Mr. Hoar spoke in favor of the Bankrupt law and against its repeal. Sept. 1 was finally agreed upon as the date for the repeal, and the bill in that shape passed.

HOUSE.—A bill was passed providing that the notice of contest, under the Pre-emption, Homestead and Timber-Culture laws, must be printed in newspapers in the county where such contest lies....Several committee reports of a private nature were presented....A bill for the relief of Richard Heater, of Virginia, for stores and supplies taken by the United States army during the late war, led to a heated partisan discussion. The claim was finally allowed....Mr. Durham, from the Committee on the Department of Justice, reported a bill regulating the salaries of United States District Attorneys. It fixes the salaries of such officers at from $2,000 to $5,000, except the salary of the District Attorney for the Southern District of New York, which is fixed at $10,000, and provides that the fees and perquisites heretofore received by those officers shall be covered into the treasury.

SATURDAY, May 11.—SENATE.—Not in session.

HOUSE.—The following bills were passed: To restore to the market certain lands in Utah; for the relief of settlers on public lands, providing that any person who shall plant and maintain for eight years ten acres of timber land shall be entitled to a patent for such quarter section; permitting Nebraska to cede certain territory to Missouri; providing for the sale of timber lands in California, Oregon, Washington Territory, Nevada and Colorado, in quantities not exceeding 160 acres to any one citizen, at a minimum price of $2.50 per acre, and making it unlawful to cut any timber on public lands....Mr. Wright, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill providing for the loan of $500 to every person who shall settle on the public lands under the Homestead law, the act to be in operation until $10,000,000 has been expended. The bill was reported without recommendation, and referred to the committee of the whole....The House had a long debate on Mr. Reagan's bill to regulate inter-State transportation by railroads.

MONDAY, May 13.—SENATE.—Mr. Johnston introduced a bill to levy, by the Moffatt bell-punch, a tax on liquors in all places in the District of Columbia where intoxicating liquors are sold by the drink....The Postoffice Appropriation bill was discussed, a few bills of no general interest passed, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE.—The proposed investigation into the alleged Presidential frauds was sprung upon the House by Mr. Potter, of New York. He obtained the floor and announced that he desired to submit certain resolutions, as a question of privilege. The resolutions were then read for the information of the House, all points of order being reserved. The resolutions recite the action of the Maryland Legislature in calling for an investigation; refer to McLin's confession, and allege that the so-called frauds were perpetrated with the knowledge of ex-Gov. Noyes, of Ohio, and Hon. John Sherman. The resolutions then say that these allegations ought to be inquired into, and to this end a select committee of eleven members shall be appointed to take testimony regarding the alleged fraudulent voters in Florida and Louisiana; to send for persons and papers, and to sit in those States during such investigation. Messrs. Conger, Hale and Garfield all made points of order against the resolutions being a question of privilege. The Speaker decided that the resolutions presented a question of the highest privilege, and must be received. Mr. Conger appealed from the decision.... Mr. Potter moved to lay the appeal on the table, and the motion was agreed to—yeas, 126; nays, 118—a party vote, with the exception of Messrs. Fort, Mitchell and Butler, who voted with the Democrats, and Buckner and Mills, who voted with the Republicans. A general debate ensued on the resolution. Among other objections raised, Gen. Garfield insisted that the majority of the House could not authorize a committee to sit during its session, because when the House adjourned it carried its committees with it, and the committee could only be allowed to sit during a recess by the suspension of the rules of the House. Speaker Randall ruled, on the point of allowing the Chairman of the subcommittee to administer oaths, that it belongs with the committee itself, and not with the House. Mr. Potter called for the previous question. The Republican side of the House hereupon resorted to the parliamentary expedient of withholding their votes, so that when the question came to be tested by tellers there were only 116 ayes to 1 no—no quorum voting. So the question went over as unfinished business, the Speaker ruling that it would remain before the House until disposed of.

TUESDAY, May 14.—SENATE.—Mr. Plumb, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the Senate bill authorizing the Secretary of War to have head-stones erected over the graves of soldiers who served in the regular or volunteer army of the United States, during the war for the Union, and who have been buried in private cemeteries....Mr. Christiancy, from the same committee, reported favorably on the Senate bill to amend the Revised Statutes in regard to embezzlement by internal-revenue officers.... Consideration was resumed of the Postoffice Appropriation bill, the pending question being on the point of order raised by Mr. Edmunds that the amendment submitted by Mr. Maxey in regard to a semi-monthly Brazilian mail steamship service, and to pay $30 a mile therefor, could not be received, as it proposed new legislation, and was not germane to the subject. After a brief discussion the question was submitted, "Is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas in order under the twenty-ninth rule?" The question was decided in the negative—yeas, 23; nays, 32. The bill was then passed....Mr. Davis, of Illinois, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported, with amendments, the Senate bill providing the times and places of holding United States Circuit Courts in Iowa, and the appointment of an additional Judge....Mr. Voorhees gave notice that when the bill to repeal the Specie-Resumption act should be taken up again he would insist on its consideration from day to day until a vote is reached.

HOUSE.—The Republicans refusing to vote on the investigation resolution introduced by Mr. Potter, no quorum appeared to be present, and the House adjourned without transacting any business.

DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS.—Immediately after the adjournment the Democratic members met in caucus. The question of adjournment was discussed, and during the debate it was claimed that the present state of public business would not permit a day to be fixed for adjournment. The Potter resolution to investigate the alleged frauds in Florida and Louisiana was taken up. Representative Wilson offered a resolution allowing the Republicans to offer an amendment to the resolution, but this, after debate, was rejected. The caucus resolved, by a large majority, to stand by the Potter resolution, and instructed him not to yield to any amendment from the Republican side. It was unanimously agreed that the resolution should be finally acted upon before any other business was done. On motion of Representative Wood, it was resolved that all Democratic members out of the city be notified to return to Washington, and, after due notice, all existing pairs will be declared at an end.

WEDNESDAY, May 15.—SENATE.—Mr. Ferry, from the Committee on Postoffices and Post-Roads, reported a bill regulating the compensation for the transportation of mails on railroads, providing for the classification of mail matter, and for other purposes....Mr. Eustis introduced a bill to provide for the establishment of mail steamship service between the United States and Brazil....Mr. Voorhees presented a petition of business men of Boston favoring the immediate and unconditional repeal of the Specie-Resumption act. Laid on the table, the bill being before the Senate.... Mr. Kirkwood submitted a resolution to print 20,000 extra copies of the message of the President and accompanying papers relating to the diseases of swine and other domestic animals. Referred.... Mr. Morgan called up his resolution touching the relations between the United States and Mexico, and spoke at length in favor thereof. The resolution was then referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations....The Senate in executive session ratified the treaty between France and the United States, providing for a convention at Paris the present summer with a view to the adoption of the metrical system of weights and measures.... Objection was made by Mr. Saulsbury to the confirmation of ex-Gov. Packard as Consul at Liverpool, and by Mr. Thurman to George A. Sheridan as Recorder of Deeds for the District of Columbia. These nominations consequently went over.... William H. Hunt, of New Orleans, was confirmed as Judge of the Court of Claims.

HOUSE.—A motion to postpone further consideration of the resolution providing for an adjournment of Congress on the 10th of June until the 20th inst. was agreed to by a vote of 130 to 106.... The question then recurred on Mr. Potter's resolution for an investigation into the late Louisiana and Florida elections, and the vote revealed the fact that the entire Democratic strength was only 110, or twenty-nine less than a quorum. The Republicans persevered in their filibustering tactics, and, after a two-and-a-half hours' struggle, the Democrats gave up the fight for the day and yielded to a motion to adjourn.

REPUBLICAN CAUCUS.—After the adjournment of the House the Republican members met in caucus to discuss the situation and determine their future course of action. It was unanimously resolved that the Potter resolution was calculated to reopen the question of the President's title which had been settled by the action of the Forty-fourth Congress, which alone had jurisdiction to settle that question; that the resolution was therefore revolutionary and calculated to seriously affect the general business of the country, and should be resisted by all means which are authorized by the rules of the House.

THURSDAY, May 16.—SENATE.—Mr. Butler, of South Carolina, submitted a concurrent resolution providing for a commission to whom shall be referred the subject of the reform and reorganization of the army....Mr. Thurman offered a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for information as to what discrepancy, if any, exists to the prejudice of Thomas Worthington's claim, mentioned in the reports of the Third Auditor, and the reasons for such discrepancy. Agreed to.... The House joint resolution to print 300,000 copies of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1877, and 5,000 copies of the Colonial charters and constitutions, passed after considerable discussion....The Senate resumed consideration of the bill to repeal the Specie-Resumption act, and Mr. Matthews read an argument upon the general financial policy of the Government, and gave notice that he would hereafter submit to the Senate a proposition of his own as an amendment to the pending bill....Adjourned to Monday.

HOUSE.—The dead-lock in the House continued, the Republicans steadily refusing to vote on the Potter resolution for the investigation of the elections in Florida and Louisiana. An attempt was made by Mr. Stephens, of Georgia, to offer a compromise, in the shape of a proposition to admit the amendments extending the investigation to Mississippi, Alabama and Oregon, but he was unable to obtain a hearing. Mr. Banks proposed a postponement of the question until Saturday. The Democrats offered to accept this on condition that the Republicans would agree not to resume their filibustering, but the condition was rejected. At length an adjournment was moved, and, this being made a test question, 142 Democrats voted, being within five of a quorum.

Dead-Beats and Their Backers.

"The Old Cabinet," of Scribner for May, after sketching the career of a fraud, says:

"Does any one suppose that the miserable man whose career is sketched above could have done the harm he has done if those good persons in the community who knew him to be a charlatan had treated him as such? The sculptors who get up public 'monuments,' for the purchase of their own caricatures of distinguished men, all have on the subscription lists the names of other men scarcely less distinguished. The amateur writers who seem to think they can get intelligent readers only by dint of recommendations, after the manner of patent-soap manufacturers, are never at a loss for celebrated names as signatures to their certificates. The point that we wish to make is that frauds—financial, social, literary, artistic—get their opportunity to do harm by the good-natured acquiescence of the better part of the community. We never knew a dead-beat who did not have some good man—some 'genial reviewer'—for his apologist and 'backer.'"

WASHINGTON NOTES AND NEWS.

THE President has signed the Pacific Railroad Refunding bill, compelling the Union, the Central and the Kansas Pacific roads to contribute 25 per cent. of their net earnings toward paying the interest on the Government second-mortgage bonds.

THE Western Emigration Society (colored) have adopted a memorial to Congress, asking an appropriation to transport emigrants West and furnish an outfit of farming utensils, seeds, etc., for the first year or two, when, it is calculated, they will be able to support themselves.

THE President has issued a pardon for Ferd S. Winslow, of Chicago, for complicity in the treasury robbery in 1877 and sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment in the Albany penitentiary. The pardon does not relieve Winslow of any of the time of imprisonment. It simply relieves him of his subsequent disabilities as a citizen. He was sentenced to eighteen months in February, 1877, and has gained two months' time by good behavior.

A BILL has passed the House providing for cutting timber in the mining regions of the country. It provides that timber may be cut upon the mining lands of Colorado, Nevada, Wyoming, Arizona, Utah, New Mexico, Montana, Idaho, and other mining districts, without cost, for mining, agricultural and domestic purposes, under such restrictions as may be adopted by the Secretary of the Interior, to protect the undergrowth and timber from waste.

THE Public Lands Committee of the House of Representatives recommend the passage of a bill for the payment of 5 per cent. on the minimum price of public lands located upon military land-warrants, to the States in which the lands are situated. The list of States to be benefited by the bill embraces all the Western and Southern States except those of the "original thirteen" and California.

GEN. SHERMAN proposes some very radical changes in the equipment of the regular troops. He is in favor of doing away with the bayonet, the sergeant's sword, the cartridge-box, belt-plates and knapsack, and substituting in their stead a good revolver, a leather pouch for cartridges, a knife, a rubber blanket and provision-sack. He says that the blanket will contain all the clothing necessary for a long march, and should be worn across the body from shoulder to waist.

THE Attorney General decides that a Postmaster cannot withhold from the mails letters suspected to contain advertisements of lotteries, for the reason that, under the Revised Statutes, except in case of letters on which the postage has not been prepaid, there is no power conferred on a Postmaster to withhold letters from the mails. He further states, if the Postmaster General is satisfied by the evidence that any person is conducting any fraudulent lottery through the mails, he may instruct the Postmaster at any office at which the registered letters arrive directed to any such person to return the letters to the postoffice at which they were mailed.

A RECENT Washington telegram says the Philadelphia contractors for the South American railroad are unsuccessful in endeavoring to secure colored laborers about the capital, from the fear of the colored men that they will be sold into slavery, the Brazilian Minister having been called upon by the colored men, and stated that, although slavery has not been fully abolished in Brazil, it is in process of abolition by gradual emancipation, which will make the country free in twenty-one years. There is a law in Brazil prohibiting colored men from settling in that country, and they can only be taken in by contract under a special act.

THE House was honored, the other day, by the presence of the venerable Peter Cooper. The old gentleman visited the Capitol, says a correspondent, and occupied the Clerk's office in state until a resolution was adopted according him the privileges of the floor. He did not have to wait long, and the aged Greenbacker was escorted to a seat in the area in front of the Speaker just as Mr. Kelley arose to make his tariff speech. Peter turned in his chair, faced Kelley, and kept this position throughout the long speech which followed. Peter Cooper in general appearance very much resembles the patriarchs of old. He was treated very reverentially by members of the House.

THE Senate and House Committees on the Electoral Count held a conference meeting one day last week. The Senate Committee, telegraphs a Washington correspondent, does not seem disposed to favor a constitutional amendment that will favor a law regulating the subject. A statutory rule governing Congress in ascertaining and declaring the electoral vote will probably be agreed upon by both committees. The House Committee will, however, report an amendment to the constitution, making a radical change in the whole system of electing the President and Vice President. They will at the same time favor a statutory rule designating the method of declaring the result of the election, this law to be enforced pending the ratification of the amendment by the States.

Iron Trade.

The future of the iron interest in the great industrial nations is very cloudy. Nearly all civilized states have built as much railroad as they could borrow money to do, and have substituted steel rails for iron, so that there is not the constant call to replenish the tracks. The decline of iron-making has affected the coal interest. In England the miners only make $1.25 a week, or 21 cents a day, counting the idle days. The poorhouses are besieged there, and thousands would come to America if they could pay passage. The richest mining district in Wales gives only two days' work a week, and there is an average loss of 15 cents on every ton of coal they sell, while the railroads are blocked up with coal trains which cannot sell their contents. In the county of York, celebrated for its iron, $40,000,000 are invested in iron-works, whose shares used to be above par; they are now down to 60 or 70. English steel has come down in five years to one-third of its old value. The Germans, who labor cheap, take the English and Scotch raw metal and make the difference by manufacturing it. The English ironworks derived much business from iron ship-building, particularly after the Suez canal was opened, but there are few more iron ships to build. Meantime Australia has gone into the iron business on a great scale, and will ultimately supply India, China and the surrounding countries with the iron which has heretofore come from England.—Gath's letter to Cincinnati Enquirer.

CAMERON-SHERMAN.

Cleveland's Gorgeous Wedding—The Bride, the Groom, the Toilets, and the Presents.

[Condensed from the Cleveland papers.]

The Bride.—Miss Elizabeth Bancroft Sherman, the bride, is the youngest of the four daughters of Judge Charles T. Sherman, and the niece of Gen. W. T. Sherman, and the Hon. John Sherman, Secretary of the Treasury. She is remarkable for her personal charms and beauty. Born in 1858, she is just now verging upon the threshold of 20. All the sisters are remarkable for their graces of person and manners. The eldest daughter is Mrs. Gen. Miles, and is with that brave Indian fighter upon the frontier. Miss Sherman is a lady who would be selected as one among a thousand by a painter or poet. She is of a delicate blonde complexion, with blue eyes, tall, graceful figure, small though well-shaped head, crowned with a beautiful growth of brown hair. Her features are all regular, and the expression upon her whole face is peculiarly refined and pleasing.

The Groom.—Senator Don Cameron, the groom, is quite well known to the public, but a personal description may not be out of place. He is the son of the Hon. Simon Cameron, and was born in 1833. This would make him twenty-five years the senior of the bride. Until comparatively recently he was solely occupied with great business and railroad enterprises in his own State. He was appointed Secretary of War by Gen. Grant, just after the disgraceful Belknap disclosures, and his executive abilities were displayed to the best advantage. He came to the office of United States Senator to fill out his father's term of office, which expires in 1879. In personal appearance Senator Cameron is of middle height, has a fine head covered with an abundant growth of dark hair, wears a light mustache, and does not appear a day over 35 years of age. He is said to be naturally of a retiring disposition, but is ever courteous and attractive in manners. He is said to be very warmly liked by those who know him intimately, and, like his father, never forgets a friend.

The Toilets.—The bride was attired in a robe of rich, white silk, cut with low waist and short sleeves. The train, which was long, fell plainly in elegant folds from her waist. On the front and sides the dress was finished at the bottom with a box-pleating of silk, and covered with elegant point lace. Following the diagonal lines of the lace, a garland of white lilacs and orange blossoms fell gracefully across the front, while another extended around the bottom above the pleating. Her hair was simply dressed, and the coiffure was outlined by the closely-drawn folds of a white tulle veil held in position by orange blossoms and falling to the bottom of the train. In front, however, the veil was quite short to allow free movements of the hand when necessary during the service. The bridesmaids wore similar dresses of white organdy, with the exception that their trains were not so long, nor their sleeves so short as the dress of the bride. The drapery and corsage which they wore was very different in style from those of the bride. The only color discernable about the dresses of all were the beautiful bouquets of pink and crimson which they held in their hands. Many other ladies were very tastily and elegantly dressed. The groom wore the regulation black. The General of the Army, and various subordinate officers who were present, were dressed in full uniform, and presented a showy appearance.

The Presents.—The total value of the presents is estimated at $100,000. Among the more valuable were: Necklace and bracelets, worth $5,000, from the happy groom; diamond ear-rings and breastpin, from Gen. Sherman and wife; a check for $3,000 from Secretary Sherman; a silver tea-set, from Hon. Simon Cameron; a gold horseshoe, set with diamonds, "from one of the Senator's warm friends;" silverware of considerable value, from the Hon. Wayne McVeagh; card-cases, silverware, silk table-cover of fine Japanese texture, etc., from the bridesmaids; a costly writing-desk, from Henry Sherman.

Curious Inventions.

Some of the monasteries of Italy and France will send curious inventions to the Paris Exhibition. A Florentine friar has constructed a watch only a quarter of an inch in diameter. It has not only a third hand to mark the second, but a microscopic dial which indicates the days of the week and month and the proper dates. It also contains an alarm, and on its front cover an ingeniously-cut figure of St. Francis of Assisi. On the back cover two verses of the "Te Deum" are distinctly cut. A monastery in Brittany, France, will contribute a plain-looking mahogany table, with an inlaid draughts or chess board on the surface. The inventor sets the pieces for a game of chess, and sits alone at one side of the board. He plays cautiously, and the opposite pieces move automatically and sometimes checkmate him. There is no mechanism apparent beneath the table top, which seems to be a solid mahogany board.

BOSTON law says that a full loaf of bread shall weigh two pounds, and smaller loaves shall be either three-quarters, half, or a quarter of the full loaves in weight, each size to be marked for precisely what it is. Bakers are being prosecuted for disregarding these regulations.

SECRETARY EVARTS has at last found a place for Bret Harte, the author. It is a commercial agency at Crefeldt, Prussia, at a salary of $3,000. This is considered as considerable of a come-down for Harte, who, a year or more ago, aspired to the Chinese mission.

EXPLOSIONS IN FLOUR MILLS.

The Minneapolis Calamity—A Warning to Millers.

The Chicago Tribune, commenting upon the explosion in the Washburn mill at Minneapolis, which entailed such a distressing loss of life and property, says:

"It is evident at the outset that steam was not the cause, not only because there were only twenty pounds of steam on at the time and the boiler-house was some little distance from the mill, but also because steam could not have worked such terrible ruin. The same very good reason conclusively proves it was not an explosion of the gas used to illuminate the mill. Gunpowder even would have failed to work such a wide-spread disaster. It may be doubted whether any other known explosive force than the gas which actually caused it, except nitro-glycerine, could have accomplished this ruin. The dispatches vaguely intimate that the explosion was caused by gases generated in the patent middlings-purifier process, but investigations of similar catastrophes in Europe show very clearly the cause in this case. Explosions of this kind have happened in Germany, but the attention of scientific men and chemists was not immediately directed to the subject until the fearful explosions occurred at the Tradeston Mills, Glasgow, Scotland, in 1872, and at the City Mills, Port Dundas, Scotland, four years ago. It had been hitherto deemed impossible that explosions could ever occur in such a peaceful establishment as a flour mill, but the two explosions above noticed enlisted the attention of both the English and the German chemists, and they set about investigating them. The substance of these opinions is to the effect that the constituents of flour are combustible, and when diffused through the air burn with great rapidity and with explosive force. Dr. Smith, an English chemist, has shown that flour in a fine state of division gives off a gas, which, when mixed with nine volumes of air, forms an explosive mixture which is liable at any time to be fired by a spark or flame; and Weibe, a German chemist, states that flour in the form of impalpable powder quickly ignites and gives off a highly-explosive hydrocarbon gas, which, when mixed with air, explodes with terrific force. The experiments tried upon a small scale with flour-powder satisfactorily account for the Minneapolis explosion. The huge mill must have been filled with this impalpable dust, which, taking fire from the gas jets, or it may have been from the electricity which is rapidly generated and held by the mill-stones, exploded with the terrible results that have already been chronicled. With such possibilities of explosion existing in every flouring-mill, it certainly behooves mill-owners to be on their constant guard. The recent fearful disaster to the confectionery establishment in New York, which arose from an analogous cause, and the catastrophe at Minneapolis, are terrible warnings to flouring-mill owners. So long as these conditions exist no mill is safe, and it ought to be their first duty to ascertain from scientific men the precautions that will lessen, if not altogether obviate, the danger to which they are exposed."

Erzeroum a Vast Charnel House.

Erzeroum, in the recent war, seems to have been a vast charnel house. During the past three months 9,500 Turkish soldiers have died in the various hospitals there, and probably as many civilians, making a total mortality of nearly 20,000 in Erzeroum alone in about twelve weeks. In January, the weather being then very severe, a detachment of 800 troops was sent over the mountains to Erzingham. Only 300 reached their destination. They were overtaken by a fearful snow-storm. The Colonel had his wife and three children with him in a covered araba; he and they all perished. The hospitals at Erzeroum are full of cases of frost-bite, some of them as severe as any cases on record. Twenty-seven soldiers without feet are under the charge of one surgeon alone; they had all been frost-bitten, and their feet had to be amputated.—London letter.

THE Supreme Court of Alabama has decided that a physician may be called on to give a medical opinion in a trial without a compensating fee.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

The Husbandman.

Give fools their gold, knaves their power;
Let fortune's bubbles rise and fall;
Who sows a field or trains a flower,
Or plants a tree, is more than all.

For he who blesses most is blest;
And God and man shall own his worth
Who toils to leave as his bequest
An added beauty to the earth.

And, soon or late, to all that sow
The time of harvest shall be given;
The flower shall bloom, the fruit shall grow,
If not on earth, at last in heaven!
—John G. Whittier.

Around the Farm.

See that the coops of young chickens are kept decently clean and comfortable.

The hatchway is now open, and thousands of chickens are entering the world through it.

The gape-way is open, too, and thousands of chickens go out of the world by that way.

English breeders use blankets made of silk for horses and cattle, for the prevention and cure of colds, chills, and rheumatism. Moths will not touch them, and their warmth, comfort and lightness render them invaluable.

Hot-beds and cold-frames, in which seeds have been sown, will need increased care as the sun gets warmer. Let them have abundant ventilation during the day, early closing of the frames, and covering in cool nights.

The English feed for fattening sheep consists of cotton-seed and turnips. They claim that it will put on the most fat, is the safest feed, makes the best mutton at a less cost, and produces the best and strongest manure.

Where it is suspected that cut-worms exist in a cornfield, more grains should be dropped to the hill than usual; then if the worms appear and go to work it is an easy matter to go over the field and kill them one by one. A field can soon be gone over. This idea appears in the Country Gentleman, and seems like a sensible one. Throwing salt or lime on its tail won't destroy the cut-worm.

As to rods to protect buildings from lightning, use round iron an inch in diameter, which your blacksmith will put together for you; tip it with gold or platinum; let the lower end run deep into the ground, say four or five feet. Have no sharp bends in it. When a lightning man comes around give him a $5 bill for getting away as quick as he can; if he then don't go, boot him.

Dairymen—the wide-awake ones—will not fail to plant a patch of corn now, to cut for fodder during July and August, when the pastures are short. Drill in rows and cultivate; don't sow broadcast. Field corn will do; certain kinds of free succoring sweet is better. Holsteins and Ayrshires are the best breeds to cross with native stock for milk producers; butter producers should have a big streak of Jersey blood in their veins.

After a wet piece of land has been underdrained it may be best seeded by plowing and sowing with oats rather thinly. Oats succeed well upon cold, moist ground and upon a sod, and if there are no more than two bushels of seed per acre used the grass seed will take very well with this crop. A mixture of four quarts of timothy, a bushel of red top and a bushel of blue grass per acre would be preferable.—American Agriculturist.

Toward the last of May and during June the codling moth will lay its eggs on the young fruit of the apple and pear. Each female lays between 200 and 300 eggs, distributing them over the tree, one to an apple or pear. Wherever an egg is laid the fruit will be destroyed almost certainly. Hogs should run in every orchard; (1) to root up the ground; (2) to fertilize the soil; (3) to eat the fruit that falls in consequence of being injured by the larvæ of the codling moth. If all wormy fruit is eaten as soon as it falls to the ground there will soon be no moths to trouble the orchard. It is the second crop of the insect that does the most mischief, which hatches out in August and burrows in the full-grown fruit; but destroy the first crop and there will not be a second.

Agricultural writers are inclined to recommend small farms. As well advocate doing business of any kind on a small scale. Better have a small farm paid for and well managed than to owe for a large one, without the means to work it well. But, if a farmer is able to own a large farm, and has the ability to manage it, no one need to waste any sympathy on him. Large farms are often poorly farmed, so are small ones. The difficulty is not so much with the size of the farm as wit the capacity of the farmer. Good farming can be done just as well and more economically on a large farm than on a small one. Teams, implements and farm-hands can be used to better advantage on the large farms, for the farmer can afford to have a variety suited to his needs. It is foolish to seek to get a large farm just for the sake of room, but if the large area is fully utilized then we see no objection to it.—Husbandman.

About the House.

Good biscuit is made with one quart of flour, one table-spoonful of baking powder, butter the size of a walnut; use water, don't mix stiff, bake quick.

A lady writes: "To wash quilts, comfortables, tickings, sackings, etc., soak in pure cold water twenty-four hours or more, then rub through warm water with a little soap and rinse well." It is worth trying.

Lemon Jumbles.—One egg, one cup of sugar, one-half cup of butter, three teaspoonfuls of milk, one-half teaspoonful of soda, and one of cream of tartar, juice of two small lemons, and the grated rind of one; mix stiff.

A thick flour bag, that will hold twenty-five pounds of flour, is excellent to put hams away in for the summer. Wrap the hams first in brown paper, several thicknesses; tie the bag tightly and hang up. No flies will disturb the hams.

Rhubarb ought not to be stewed for pies, but cut the sticks in small pieces; fill your dishes, already lined with the lower crust, and cover thick with sugar. After placing on a thin lid, bake in a moderate oven.

Batter Pudding.—One pint of milk, four well-beaten eggs, two cups of flour, one teaspoonful of salt, and a pinch of soda. Bake three-quarters of an hour or boil in a buttered mold or floured bag two hours; serve with sauce, and eat at once.

German Puffs.—Three beaten eggs, three cups of milk, three teaspoonfuls of melted butter, three cups of flour, a small spoonful of salt; pour into nine well-buttered cups, same size as used in measuring; bake to a fine brown, and eat as soon as done with sauce.

Mrs. A. had some marking done with indelible ink, which in washing became partly transferred to the fabric, causing ugly stains which it was feared could not be removed. However, 5 cents worth of cyanide of potassium, obtained at the nearest drug store, dissolved in three table-spoonfuls of water, with a little rubbing, entirely took out the blotches without injuring the fabric. Our readers can try this with certainty of success.

Pickled Fish.—Clean the fish thoroughly and cut into pieces about five inches long; rub each piece on the cut side with salt. Take a stone jar which will about hold the fish, put a layer of fish on the bottom, then a few whole peppers and allspice and a blade of mace, then another layer of fish, spice, etc., till the jar is nearly full; then pour good cider vinegar over it until the fish is quite covered. Tie a paper over the top of the jar, and cover this with flour paste; this keeps in all steam. Put the jar in the oven and bake for three hours. The fish is fit for use as soon as cold, and will keep, in the pickle, for six months. Shad is excellent pickled, as all the bones disappear.

THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Robeson's Monstrous Corruptions.

The Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department made their report to Congress. They say that extravagance and disregard of legal restraints have been recognized at almost every step of their inquiry previous to the beginning of the present administration of the department. At the outset they were staggered by the immense sums apparently owing by the several bureaus, reaching a sum of more than $7,000,000, and this, too, notwithstanding the enormous appropriations made annually from 1869 to 1876, both inclusive, aggregating in amount $149,000,000. There is nothing to compensate this vast outlay save a navy, contemptible even in comparison with those of third and fourth-rate powers. Notwithstanding the plain terms of the law, open purchases have been the chief mode by which the Navy Department has been supplied with materials, not in obedience to expediency, but vastly in excess of its means. This violation of law, without warrant in precedence or authority, has depleted the treasury to the extent of millions of dollars, and has been the food on which pampered favorites have fattened, while it has prevented the payment of moneys due a meritorious class of creditors to such an extent that many have been involved in bankruptcy and all of them subjected to irreparable loss. The amount of open purchases and bureau orders within the last few years aggregates more than $20,000,000. All advantages of an open market have been ignored, fair competition avoided, and both the letter and spirit of the law disregarded. A large share of the indebtedness of the department is due on account of contracts for repair, more properly for rebuilding the Puritan, Amphitrite, Terror, Monadnock, and Miantonomah, intended to be double-turreted monitors. The contracts contain clauses providing for the exchange of new for old material. This involves a violation of law on the part of the Secretary of the Navy. The sum which has been paid or remains due on the contracts for the construction of said vessels is $1,316,250. One of the largest contingent liabilities of the Government grows out of orders for timber and iron-clads and boilers suspended by the present Secretary of the Navy. The majority of the committee report that the indebtedness which they have mentioned is owing to certain parties in amounts set opposite their respective names: In the Bureau of Engineering, aggregating $1,423,876; in the Bureau of Construction and Repair, $929,534; amounts due for timber in Bureau of Construction and Repair, $416,392; Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, $447,935; making the total $3,217,738. In conclusion, the committee recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

"That the Committee on Appropriations be, and is hereby, instructed to report an appropriation in the sum of $3,217,738, or so much thereof as may be necessary to enable the Secretary of the Navy to pay the claims mentioned to the respective persons; that the Secretary of the Navy be and he is hereby instructed to cancel the contracts dated March 3, 1877, with Phineas Burgess for the completion of the Monadnock, $95,000; with Wm. Cramp & Sons, for the completion of the Terror, $578,000; with Harlin & Hollinsworth, for the completion of the Amphitrite, $578,000; with John Roach, for the completion of the Puritan, $1,417,642; also contracts with the South Boston Iron Company, dated respectively March 7 and 10, 1877, for the construction of boilers, together amounting to $3,600,263."

A Republican Organ Rebuked.

The Springfield (Mass.) Republican, the leading Republican journal of New England, says: "The Augusta (Me.) Journal, Senator Blaine's home organ, fairly dances for joy through a leading editorial of nearly a column, over Jeff Davis' letter to the Confederate-monument dedication, at Macon, Ga., last week. 'The real voice of the solid South,' this organ has the supreme impudence to term a document which has met absolutely no popular response. With still more outrageous disregard for facts, this stirrer-up of strife declares that 'his sentiments meet with the warmest approval by the Southern papers.' A Southern journal might, with equal truth, attempt to incite its section against the other by declaring that the wild cries for vengeance to which Wendell Phillips occasionally gives utterance meet with the warmest approval by the Northern papers. There are, of course, Bourbon papers in the South as well as the North, but the representative organs of Southern opinion—such papers as the Richmond (Va.) State, the Raleigh (N. C.) News, the Charleston (S. C.) News and Courier, the Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution, the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle and Constitutionalist, the Memphis (Tenn.) Avalanche, the New Orleans (La.) Picayune and Times—so far from "warmly approving" what Jeff Davis said, have passed it by with utter silence. Jeff Davis' letter only appeared in Saturday morning's papers, and the Augusta Journal, though nominally issued on Wednesday, must go to press Tuesday, as it reaches this office Wednesday forenoon. The newspapers of Saturday in only the nearer Southern States could by any possibility reach Augusta before the editorial in question must have been written. The Journal must therefore have been almost entirely ignorant of the tone of the Southern press when it made this statement, while whatever the mails could have brought it absolutely disproved the charge. In other words, it deliberately lied to its readers, and lied purely for partisan purposes, in the hope of stirring up the smoldering ashes of sectional fires for benefit of the Republican party in the approaching campaign. One feels a sort of contemptuous pity for the soured old man who wrote that letter, but no right-minded person can entertain any other feeling than that of utter loathing for the Maine editor who thus lends his pen to the devilish work of sowing falsehoods, in the hope of reaping further bitter fruits of sectional hatred."

Genuine and Spurious Economists.

Now that the nominations for Congress are near at hand, to be followed by elections this fall, members of both parties in the House of Representatives profess extraordinary zeal for economy and remarkable affection for the interests of the dear people. The effrontery with which the Republican leaders have come to the front to claim that they favored retrenchment while holding the purse-strings would be astounding if any credit attached to their declarations.

While De Golyer Garfield was Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations the scandalous plunder of the treasury exceeded all former experience, and it was proven incontestably before two committees of investigation that he was a personal beneficiary of the money voted to the Washington ring, as he was shown to be one of the purchased creatures of the Credit Mobilier villainy by Oakes Ames' diary and accounts.

During the sharp debate on the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial bill, in which the Speaker took a prominent part to defend his work in the last Congress, Garfield said:

> I point with satisfaction to the fact that in 1872, and from that time forward, the expenditures of this Government have been on a descending scale, and that, too, by the action of Congress, not only before the present party came into power, but since.

The official reports of the treasury, all from Republican hands, give a flat and explicit contradiction to this daring statement, as will be seen from the following figures, which, in a condensed form, present the estimates and the expenditures, exclusive of the interest on the public debt and pensions. We take the year 1872 as the starting point named by Garfield, and follow it down to the advent of the Democratic majority in the House, to include their legislation on the expenditures so far as is returned.

	Estimates.		Expenditures.
1872....	$125,748,077.13	Republican..	$124,668,453.43
1873....	166,594,921.69	Republican..	161,129,210.04
1874....	172,165,026.40	Republican..	165,060,570.34
1875....	186,648,976.03	Republican..	142,073,682.05
1876....	181,530,103.00	Republican..	136,600,417.67
1877....	159,524,044.63	Democrat....	118,246,211.01

It is thus seen that the "descending scale of expenditures" claimed by Garfield from 1872 forward was an increase of $36,500,000 in 1873, and of $40,500,000 in 1874, as compared with that point of departure. The passage of the Salary-grab bill, and the large appropriations to rings, roused the public indignation in 1874, and then Garfield and his associates, in fear of worse to come, reduced their expenditures for 1875, but still kept them above the figures for 1872 to the extent of $18,000,000. And when they found their majority of nearly a hundred swept away by the tidal wave they made a further reduction of $6,000,000, but this was still $12,000,000 beyond the expenditures of 1872. These are the naked facts, and they utterly demolish the false figures given by the Credit Mobilier statesman.

When the Democrats took possession of the House in the last Congress, the appropriations were already made for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876. They set to work with remarkable vigor, under the lead of Mr. Randall, then Chairman of that committee, who is fairly entitled to most of the credit for the first great blow at extravagant expenditures. At a single dash the retrenchment exceeded $20,000,000, and, as compared with 1872, there was a reduction of $8,000,000. The administration of Grant put every possible obstacle in the way of this measure, and the Senate succeeded, after a long struggle, in striking out $10,500,000 of Mr. Randall's budget, which experience has demonstrated could have been saved without the least derangement of the public service.

One of the most valuable reforms introduced by Mr. Randall was the rule requiring that all amendments to appropriation bills proposing to change existing laws should be in the interest of retrenchment. Previously, under the Republican dispensation, the rule allowed offices to be created, and salaries to be raised, and new legislation involving large grants to be enacted, but forbade any changes on the side of economy! No wonder De Golyer Garfield complained bitterly of the rule which closed the gate against extravagance and shut out amendments for jobs. We quote:

> Mr. Garfield—I believe it was a fatal mistake to put into the hands of that committee the power to change all the laws, any of the laws, anywhere as they pleased. I have always believed that.
>
> Mr. Randall (the Speaker)—In the direction of economy?
>
> Mr. Garfield—In the direction of economy.

CONTRACTION.

How Much Has There Been?—Inquiry Fully Answered—The Lying Statements of a Pap-Fed Press Refuted—The People Robbed of Their Money to Enrich the Bondlords—Facts Taken from the Official Records.

[Compiled from Toledo National and Indianapolis Sun.]

In again making a correct statement of the volume of circulation in 1864, we are enabled to strengthen the view of the character of the 7-30 notes, compound-interest notes, treasury notes and certificates, which we have heretofore presented, with testimony of a very forcible kind. The amount of money in circulation Sept. 1, 1865, as taken from the official records (not from dictionaries or encyclopædias), was as follows:

United States notes..................	$ 433,160,569
National-bank notes..................	187,000,000
State-bank notes..................	78,867,575
Fractional currency..................	26,344,742
Compound-interest legal-tender notes....	217,024,160
Temporary loan certificates..............	107,148,713
Certificates of indebtedness............	85,093,000
Treasury 5 per cent. legal tenders......	32,536,901
7-30 Treasury notes..................	830,000,000
Past-due legal tenders..................	1,503,020
Total Sept. 1, 1865..................	$1,996,678,770

Now for the proof that the different items of the above statement constituted a part of the currency at the time named. About the first four items there can be no dispute.

That the 7-30 notes constituted a part of the currency at that time we submit the following testimony:

1. Hon. F. E. Spinner, then Treasurer of the United States, says: "The 7-30 treasury notes were intended, prepared, issued and used as currency."

2. President Grant, in his message of December, 1873, said:

"During the last four years (from '69 to '73) the currency has been contracted by the withdrawal of the 3 per cent. certificates, compound-interest notes and 7-30 bonds outstanding on the 4th of March, 1869, all of which took the place of legal tender in the bank reserves to the extent of $630,000,000."

3. Hon. W. P. Fessenden, Secretary of the Treasury in 1864, in an official communication, says: "This statement also shows the currency items operating to inflate prices as follows." (And here follows a list of all the disputed items in our statement, including the 7-30 notes.) And Secretary Fessenden concludes with these words and figures: "Up to June 30, 1864, total inflation paper issued, $1,155,877,034." (See Spaulding's History of Legal-Tender, p. 198.)

4. Hon. E. G. Spaulding, author of the "History of Legal Tender," and Member of Congress in 1862-3 and for years afterward, in the above-named work says: "All of the channels of circulation were well-filled up with greenback notes. Compound-interest notes, certificates of indebtedness, etc., before the National-Bank act got fairly into operation."

5. The following is the testimony of one of the members of a prominent New York firm, in response to a specific inquiry from the editor of the Inter Ocean, Chicago:

> Office of Traphagen, Hunter & Co.,
> Nos. 398, 400 and 402 Bowery,
> New York, Aug. 9.
>
> Referring to your note of the 8th inst., asking if in my experience the "so-called 7-30 treasury notes, did or did not circulate as money in the ordinary transactions of commerce," I have to say that they did so circulate, and were received and paid with the same freedom as the greenbacks were, and to all intents and purposes formed a part of the circulating medium of the country. Chas. E. Hunter.

6. The following is the testimony of a gentleman of large experience as merchant, manufacturer, banker and Member of Congress, elicited in the same manner as above:

> First National Bank,
> Elizabeth, N. J., Aug. 12.
>
> In compliance with your request of the 8th inst., that I should define the relative position of the 7-30 treasury notes to the general volume of currency in 1865, I have to say that I was then daily in the habit of receiving and paying out the same in the conduct of my ordinary business, the same as greenbacks, and I esteemed their peculiar characteristics (being conducive to elasticity) as not only forming a currency but a currency of especial merit.
>
> Amos Clark.

We think this array of testimony with regard to the character and use made of the 7-30 notes as sufficient to convince any one less stupid than an ass, that they constituted a part of the currency. These 7-30 notes have all been converted into coin-bearing bonds, and most of them now lie in the vaults of the foreign Shylocks.

With regard to the compound-interest notes, in addition to what is above adduced, we have only to say:

1. They were made a legal tender for the express purpose of qualifying them to pay debts and circulate as money. That is what legal tender means.

2. They did circulate among the people. There is scarcely a merchant who, if in business in 1865-6, did not handle them, receive them, and pay them out as money.

The 5 per cent. certificates were also legal tender for the same purpose, were used in the same manner by the people and were so considered by officials of the Treasury Department, in their official communications.

The latest official figures we have at hand in regard to the circulation are those given below:

AMOUNT OF CIRCULATING MEDIUM SEPT. 1, 1877.
Greenbacks outstanding..................	$ 358,040,897
National-bank notes..................	315,620,247
Fractional currency, including silver..	39,172,114
Total Sept. 1, 1877..................	$ 712,833,258
Contraction from Sept. 1, 1865, to Sept. 1, 1877, (12 years)..................	$1,283,845,412

In the face of the figures and testimony we have presented it seems impossible that any one should declare that there has been no contraction of the currency—but such declarations are made and we are required to meet them.

And here is the other side of the picture which will show for whose benefit this systematic robbery of the people is being made:

The bonded indebtedness of the United States on the 31st of October, 1865, was:

Six per cent. bonds..................	$ 945,562,512
Five per cent. bonds..................	218,207,100
Total bonds..................	$1,163,769,612

On which the yearly interest, the greater part of which was payable in legal-tender notes, and not in gold, was as follows:

On 6 per cent. bonds..................	$56,733,750.72
On 5 per cent. bonds..................	10,910,355.00
Annual interest on bonds..................	$67,644,105.72

According to the public-debt statement for Aug. 31, 1877, the total bonded indebtedness of the country was as follows:

Six per cent. bonds..................	$814,341,050.00
Five per cent. bonds..................	703,266,650.00
Four-and-a-half per cent. bonds..........	185,000,000.00
Total..................	$1,702,607,700.00

On which the yearly interest is:

On 6 per cent. bonds..................	$48,860,463.00
On 5 per cent. bonds..................	35,163,332.00
On 4½ per cent. bonds..................	8,325,000.00
Total..................	$92,348,496.00

RECAPITULATION.
Bonded indebtedness May 31, 1877....	$1,692,964,750.00
Bonded indebtedness Oct. 31, 1865....	1,163,760,612.00
Increase in bonds since Oct. 31, 1865..................	$529,196,088.00
Annual interest May 31, 1877..........	$93,120,212.50
Annual interest Oct. 31, 1865..........	67,644,105.72
Increase in annual interest..........	$25,476,106.78
Total increase in bonded indebtedness from Oct. 31, 1865, to Aug. 31, 1877..................	538,838,088.00
Total increase of annual interest from Oct. 31, 1865, to Aug. 31, 1877..................	25,704,690.28

How any intelligent man, after reading the above, can fail in seeing and denouncing the infamous policy of contraction is what we cannot comprehend.

LETTER FROM PETER COOPER.

The Specie Basis a Delusion and a Snare.

We print below the letter of Peter Cooper, of New York, in reply to an invitation to appear before the Committee of the House of Representatives on Banking and Currency:

To the Hon. A. H. Buckner, Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Dear Sir—I thank you for the honor you have extended to me in the invitation to appear before you, as the Committee of Banking and Currency appointed by the House of Representatives, to recommend the best financial measures for the consideration of Congress and the people.

I cannot hope, however, to throw any new light on these questions of finance into the minds of men trained as you have been, and having such wide sources of information as are open to you from all sides on this momentous question.

But I can express to you my convictions, which I believe to be those of the majority of the voters of this country.

The events of the last few years, the quick revulsion from a state of unparalleled prosperity in this country to one of suffering and industrial and financial ruin, has opened the eyes of this people to the causes; and they are convinced that these causes are neither natural nor uncontrollable, but the direct effect of bad legislation on the part of Congress, and the vicious principles that have hitherto governed legislation on the subject of finance.

The people are determined that they will no longer allow their representatives and their executive officers of the highest grade to make laws and administer them in such a way—whether ignorantly or with intent—as to promote the interest of a certain class, at the expense of the prosperity and happiness of the large majority. This is a simple question of fact, and it is a cruel aggravation of the fact to be told by our political doctors that "it cannot be helped, and must be borne as a natural evil"—such as extravagance, over-trading, overproduction, etc.

The American people are determined to take their financial interests into their own hands, by using their own accredited agencies, and not leave their management in the hands of those who are not directly responsible to the people.

The entire control of the volume of currency, or what shall be legal tender in this country, the exclusive issue and coinage of such money, the chief source of the capital and of credit necessary to keep the whole population usefully and profitably employed, can no longer be left to private corporations, and those general and uncontrollable causes that will operate in the absence of a wise, provident and paternal legislation in behalf of the people.

As far as I can learn from the most careful attention to the signs of public sentiment, I must give it as my conviction that the people of this country are determined on two things as respects the future financial policy of this Government.

1. As the present Congress has already partially remonetized the silver, they intend to complete that work by making silver a full legal tender for all debts, public and private, except those now under a special contract, and have a free and unlimited coinage, with the silver coin and bullion certificates made into a legal tender and a common currency.

2. The people intend to remonetize all their paper. All that passed current as money at the end of the war, and was issued by the Government for material, labor and service, and "full value received," and hence became the "people's money;" but which was unrighteously absorbed in bonds, or destroyed by taxing it out of existence.

All this money must be restored to the people, as full legal tender, and thereafter not made redeemable by gold alone, or a specie basis exclusively, but ever redeemable in taxes, gold, silver, or bonds, at the option of the Government.

The people are willing to take every means to make their paper as available as gold or silver, in every market of the world, and on a "par with them," but will not subject it to the dishonor of either limiting its legal tender, or compelling by law its conversion to coin before it is accepted as money.

They look, now, with complacency upon the fact that the national money is regarded in the market, as "good as gold;" but they look with dread upon a compulsive legislation that, in the shape of the "Resumption act," puts the whole credit of our national paper into the hands of those who can, at any time it may suit them, bring discredit upon it by removing the few millions of specie upon which its whole credit is based.

This specie basis is a "delusion and a snare." The people have found it so in the past, and they are determined no longer to trust to it in the future. Alabama has lately proved that the credit even of a single State is better than "a specie basis."

In saying this much to the committee, I am only asserting what I believe to be the simple truth; for I know the large and constantly increasing conviction of the intelligent people of this country—those who will rule public sentiment, and make and unmake the administration and laws of the country.

I will do myself the honor to appear before your committee at the earliest day possible, before the expiration of the present month.

I herewith send you, and recommend to your notice, some carefully prepared documents that may assist you in your deliberations, which I pray God may be directed to the restoration of the condition of prosperity to our beloved country, which the unwise legislation of the past has taken away.

With great respect, I remain your obedient servant, Peter Cooper.

Bond Farming.

That is the kind of farming that pays! The crop comes twice a year, and comes without an effort. No labor, no toil, no anxiety, and no taxes. And the weather does not affect it. Rain or shine, the crop comes right along, and it comes in money, too. No loading up and hauling to market, no higgling over price, no trading and dicker, but the clean, bright gold.

While the ordinary farmer is working and wearing himself out, using up his teams, and plows, and wagons, the bond farmer sits in his easy chair and waits for his crop which is sure to come every six months.

While the common farmer is paying out his last dollar for taxes this bond farmer looks coolly on, and jingles the money in his pocket. He has nothing to do with tax-paying.

The kind of farming that brings two crops a year in gold, and pays no taxes, is the kind of farming that pays. Farming that only uses a pair of scissors in cutting coupons is the kind of farming to work at.

Farming without land, or teams, or labor, and harvesting without work or barns, and living without paying taxes is the kind of farming that would suit you much better than the toil, and sweat, and drought, and frosts and storms that you now have to contend with.

You cannot sell your farm for half it cost you, but the bond farmer can sell out at any time for two or three times in gold what he originally paid.

Farmers, tillers of the soil, you feed all the world except yourselves, how do you like it?

The hard-money men erected the bond farmer and they are trying to extend his lease forever. The Greenback party propose to stop his lease, pay him in money, and thus make him use it and pay his own taxes.

Farmers, join this Greenback party and have a little legislation for yourselves.—Portland (Me.) New Era.

Puppets.

Great Britain is triumphantly pointed at as an example of a nation maintaining for half a century a specie-based currency, thereby securing a steadiness in values which could not otherwise have existed, which premise and conclusion are not corroborated by facts.

So far from Great Britain having a specie-based currency, she has floated for the last 180 years *£14,000,000 ($70,000,000) bank notes based solely upon a Bank-of-England ledger debit against the Government, and by the Peel act the following issues, regardless of specie basis, were authorized:

†English country banks.....	£ 8,000,000	($40,000,000)
Bank of Ireland..........	3,706,000	(18,530,000)
Irish country banks........	2,565,000	(12,825,000)
Scotch banks..............	3,041,000	(15,205,000)
Total currency without specie basis..............	£17,312,000	($86,560,000)

Notwithstanding this enormous amount of irredeemable currency, the Government has from time to time bridged over its emergencies by the issue of exchequer notes, running as high, in 1856, '57 and '58, as an average of ‡£21,000,000 ($105,000,000), which, added to the other figures, gives a total, during those three years, of £52,312,000 ($261,560,000), without pretense of specie basis.

So much for the premises; now for the conclusion. It can be further shown, from official records, that so far from Peel's Bank act meeting the claims of its authors that the putative gold basis would steady production and commerce by preventing momentary spasms, the Bank of England, in thirteen years and five months from its passage, changed its rate of interest fifty-six times, her rental for the use of money being sometimes 2 per cent. and sometimes five times that rate; in fact, during one period of five weeks, she changed the rate five times.

And yet our trusted agents at Washington insist that this nation—idle, poor and in debt to the foreigner—shall attempt full specie liquidation, with the demonstrated fact before them that Great Britain—active, rich and the creditor of the planet—miserably failed to accomplish only one-half the task!!!

About Dogs.

Few persons are aware of the value, variety and weight of dogs, varying as they do from 180 pounds to less than one pound, and valued at from $500 to less than nothing. A description of different kinds of dogs may be interesting.

The Siberian blood-hound weighs about 160 pounds, measures 40 inches in girt, and is worth nearly $500.

The St. Bernard dog, which is a buff or light lead color, is very large and valuable.

The Newfoundland dog, when pure, is entirely black, and its pups are worth from $10 to $20.

The shepherd dog, or Scotch cooly, is wonderful for its patience, fidelity and bravery. It is worth from $50 to $100.

The English mastiff, a good watch dog, is worth from $15 to $25.

Of terriers, the black-and-tan is most admired. It varies in weight from 1 pound to 25 pounds, and increases in value as it decreases in weight. Terriers are often crossed with the Italian greyhound, producing a very delicate but extremely useless dog. The Scotch terrier is the hardiest of dogs, is very courageous, and is worth from $10 to $30.

Scotch deer-hounds are the rarest and most valuable of hunting dogs. They are owned principally by the nobility of England, and are worth $100 each.

The beagle is the smallest of the hound kind, has superior scent and endurance, and, in short, is the best sort of rabbit hunter.

English greyhounds, the fleetest of dogs, are worth from $25 to $100 each.

The Italian greyhound is merely a parlor dog. The pure breed is rare and valuable, a fine one being worth $150.

There is a great variety of pointers, setters and spaniels. The Prince-Charles variety is the most valuable of spaniels. He is supposed to have originated in Japan, where a similar breed exists. He has a large, full eye, black-and-tan color, and never weighs over ten pounds. They have been sold at auction in England at $2,000 each.

The coach dog is from Denmark, and is not of much value.

China and Japan.

By the arrival of the steamer Gaelic at San Francisco, we get the following news from China and Japan:

The city of Canton had been visited by a great tornado. Thousands of houses were destroyed or seriously injured by the wind and an enormous waterspout from the river which broke over the city. Many lives were lost. The foreign settlement suffered severely. In the midst of the confusion four fires broke out, supposed to be incendiary, as many robberies followed. The latest advices report 500 Chinese killed. No foreigners were seriously hurt.

The Western Chinese army, under Gen. Tso, is overrunning Kashgaria, and annihilating all the inhabitants, including women and children. Multitudes of fugitives are flying for protection to the Russian outposts, more than can be provided for. Famine and distress continue, and enormous tracts are desolated by the long drought, the ground not having been watered for years past.

The Assembly of Provincial Officials of Japan was opened the 10th of April by the Mikado, who has since attended several sessions. The annual meetings of this body were intended to gradually prepare the way for popular representation on a larger scale. This year it will provide for small local parliaments to be elected by general vote. A National Legislature is not expected for a considerable time to come.

The extraordinary decision of the British court admitting opium into Japan still excites discussion. Foreign envoys generally regard it as a violation of the treaty on the part of the British authorities.

How the French Workman Lives.

The French laborer probably gets more for his wages than any other. His food is cheaper and more nourishing. His bouillon is the liquid essence of beef at a penny per bowl. His bread at the restaurants is thrown in without any charge, and is the best bread in the world. His hot coffee and milk is peddled about the streets in the morning at a sou per cup. It is coffee, not slops. His half bottle of claret is thrown in at a meal costing twelve cents. For a few cents he may enjoy an evening's amusement at one of the many minor theaters with his coffee free. Sixpence pays for a nicely cushioned seat at the theater. No gallery gods, no peanuts, pipe, smoke, drunkenness, yelling or howling. The Jardin des Plantes, the vast galleries and the museums of the Louvre, Hotel Cluny, palace of the Lumembourg and Versailles are free for him to enter. Art and science hold out to him their choices treasures at small cost, or no cost at all. French economy and frugality do not mean that constant retrenchment and self-denial which would deprive life of every thing which would make it worth living for. Economy in France, more than in any country, means a utilization of what America throws away, but it does not mean a pinching process of reducing life to a barren existance of work and bread and water.

An Old Puzzle Rewritten.

"If you please, sir, I'm a poor boy, but I'm awfully smart and I want to work.'

The storekeeper looked at his customers in astonishment. The boy was a little bit of a fellow, and his chin came just over the top of the counter.

"Well,' said the storekeeper, "you seem to have a pretty good idea of yourself.'

"That's so,' said the boy, 'I lost my last place 'cause I was smart.'

"All right, then I'll show you where you make a great mistake when you say you're smart. Do you see that jug over there?"

"No, sir,' said the boy, looking hard at a box marked "Six gross safety pins.'

"Not there; 'way back in the store.'

"Oh, yes,' said the boy.

"Now that jug is full of vinegar; it holds eight quarts. I've an order for four quarts, but haven't any empty measure excepting one holding five quarts, and one holding three quarts. Now, if you're as smart as you say you are, perhaps you can measure the four quarts from the eight quarts by using the three and five?"

"I can do it,' said the boy, "just as easy as fishing.'

"If you do, I'll give you $2 a week and your clothes. No guessing, now; you must measure exactly.'

"All right,' said the boy, "have your taylor here in fifteen minutes to measure me, please.'

The tailor might have come even earlier as the boy had the four quarts of vinegar measured out in less than five minutes.

How did he do it?

Advice to Those about to Marry.

A Religious Editor.

I married my wife about 35 years ago. The ceremony was performed about 7 o'clock in the morning. Before retiring that evening we had a good talk with each other, and the result has sweetened our entire lives. We agreed that each should always be watchful and careful never by word or act to hurt the feelings of the other. We were both young, hot tempered, both positive in our likes and dislikes, and both somewhat exacting and inflexible—just the material for a life of conjugal warfare. Well, for a few years we found it hard to always live by our agreements. Occasionally (not often) a word or look would slip off the tongue or face before it could be caught or suppressed; but we never allowed the sun to go down on our wrath. Before retiring at night on such occasions there was always confession and forgiveness, and the culprit would be more careful in future. Our temper and dispositions became gradually more congenial, so that after a few years we came to be one in reality, as the martial ceremony had pronounced us nominally. In thinking back we find that for more than 20 years our little agreement has been unbroken and there has been no occasion for confession and forgiveness. In business we have had adversity and prosperity, failure and success. We raised a family of children, and now have our grandchildren about us, and we are enough to believe that we have better children and better grandchildren because of our little agreement. Under such a contract religiously kept, no illnatured children will be reared, and no boys will find the streets and bar rooms more pleasant than home. To make a good wife or a good husband requires the co-operation of both.

A Great Man's Beginning.

A Mr Patrick, who was one of Representative James A. Garfield's earliest friends, in giving a sketch of his career to some school children several years ago, said: "I want to tell you about a young man who came to my farm house from the canal. He had been a canal-boat driver, and as the canal had just frozen up, he wanted to do chores for his board during the winter. James, for that was his name, was a stalwart, honest-looking fellow, and, so I took him in. My own children soon began attending school, and I asked James if he did not want to go to school with them, but he declined. I soon noticed that he seemed to be quite despondent, and asked him if he was troubled about anything, and he then confessed to me that, although he was 19 years of age, he could neither read nor write, and he was in such mental distress because, as he thought, it was too late for him to begin. I assured him that it was not too late, and urged him to begin at once which he did, with so much energy that within a year from that time he was teaching school himself.

The Earth Not a True Globe.

[Good Words.]

Our planet is not a true globe, because of its former plastic condition before the formation and cooling off of the surface. When the globe was soft it was more or less yielding; and then the rotation of the earth to which I have referred tended to drive off, as it were, the matter in the equatorial regions; so that the distance through the center of the earth between the two surfaces as far as possible, removed from the poles of rotation, or those parts of the earth which the imaginary axis comes through is rather greater than the distance between the two points where the axis comes to the surface. The reason of that fact, and that it must have been so, has been beautifully established by several experiments. That the earth was once hotter than it is now is therefore proved, both by the irregularities of its surface, and by its shape as a whole. We must not imagine, however, that there has been but one change. The minor irregularities are all gradually changing by inner energies and the action of air and water, and it may be that even the largest ones are young compared with the age of the planet's surface. Nor does the change end here; the equatorial proturberance itself may but after all make a point in a great cycle of change, which has compelled the earth to rotate now about one axis and now about another. Mathematicians consider it highly probable that the axis of the earth may have been in ancient times differently situated to what it is at present, and, indeed that "it might have gradually shifted through 10, 20, 30, 40, or more degrees, without at any time any preceptible disturbance of either land or water." Thus it appears that nature prevents catastrophes by the very hugeness of the scale on which she works.

A Tramps Yarn.

"Quad Box" writes in the American Newspaper Reporter:

There are but few printers throughout the country but what have seen or heard of George Washington Matchett, probably the oldest tramp printer on the road. He says he has tramped across the continent seven times, and has visited almost every printing office in the union. The following is a story related by him on his last trip through this place:

He was on one of his long walks, and had got as far west as Kansas, and had found little work during his journey; but one day he struck a small town with one printing office in it. He went up to the office, and found the editor scratching away with his pen, and the "devil" seated upon a stool. He asked the editor how work was, and what was the chance for a "sit," and upon being told that he might have a job for a few days, and that he could go to work at once, he asked where he could find the type and cases, and was told that the type was up stairs in a sack, and that he would have to chalk his case out on the floor. He went to work and marked out his case and laid the type. He worked all that week, and when Saturday night came he went to the boss for his money, whereupon the latter went up stairs, brought down two coon skins and explained to G. W. that they were currency in that country. George had to make the best of it; so he threw the coon skins over his shoulder and started down town to a store. He got some tobacco, a paper of pins, and some thread, and threw down a coon skin to pay for it. The storekeeper took the coon skin and handed him back two squirrel skins and one opoisum skin in change.

Matchett told the story with a relish, and after taking up a collection, departed on his weary way.

Fickle Spring, Moving Day, Communism, Anniversaries, Coaching, &c., &c.

NEW YORK, May 15th, '78.

Surely this is May only in name. The out door elements are struggling desperately, and we are having more March winds and April showers, than May warmth and flowers. We actually had frost last night, and give a shiver of sympathy as we think of cherry, apple, and peach buds, finally wrap ourself in a shawl and hope for the best. We need not consult the Almanac, either to know that May is here in the city. We have only to know that moving day, house cleaning and the first of May all happen at the same time, and is considered by the moving portion of the population of New York, as the anniversary of annoyance and tribulation. Nor is this estimate of the flowery month to be wondered at, considering the expense, anxiety and trouble it brings on a large proportion of that class who are compelled to rent houses or apartments periodically. The shrewd housekeeper, however, manages generally to move before that day, not caring to run the risk of securing transportation for their goods without paying exorbitant prices to the cartmen. In addition to goods moved on trucks and wagons of all sorts and sizes, the sidewalks on some of the side avenues were at times almost monopolized by females young and old, hurrying along with burdens of household effects and domestic trumpery. In one instance a panting matron would be seen bending under a load of framed pictures, and another tenderly bearing three or four bird cages. A little further on would be seen a stalwart virage elbowing her way through the crowd with a stove-pipe under each arm, or a weak little woman having a broom in one hand and with the other dragging along her little four years old hopeful, in her anxiety to reach the new domicile by the time the cart carying the furniture arrived there. Then there are others who ought to move and wont, so the property owners think, and proceed at once to the District Court and obtain writs of ejectment against refractory tenants, and after giving two hours notice, they are at liberty to put the furniture into the street. Consequently in some cases the people thus situated have to ensconce themselves on their furniture, lying on the sidewalk, or go skirmishing among their friends for a place to put themselves and their children to sleep for the night. Five thousand requests were received 2nd of May at the New York post office from persons changing their residences. Mr. Talmage in his regular Friday evening lecture, said that there were three classes to be congratulated on the 1st of May—those that did not have to move, those that moved to larger houses, and those that moved to smaller houses. Those that were not obliged to move were happy in the continued possession of their homes where their children had perhaps been born. The preacher counselled all young married couples to have a home of their own, even if obliged to have a good sound mortgage on it. The paying off the mortgage would necessitate, perhaps, a little economy in the matter of expensive cigars and wines, but the husband would be all the better for that. He congratulated those who were to move into larger houses, because they would have more room to receive their friends and enjoy themselves. There would be more room, too, for the children to romp. Those that moved into smaller houses were to be congratulated also, for the cares of a small house are much less wearing than those of a large one, and although there would be fewer closets, and less room, there would still be contentment. We were also much interested hearing Talmage talk on Communism. He began by saying that a great grizzly monster, born on the other side of the water, had within the past few days, waded the seas to America. It was Communism, a theory which was, what you cannot get lawfully you can take any how! If you do not receive sufficient wages you can knock down your employer and take every thing. It was bread or blood. Dr. Talmage wished to know how long places of worship would be allowed to exist, bonfires would be built of Bibles and crosses split up. But it was claimed by some persons that no such thing could occur here. This was a mistake. There was no greater desperadoes in the world than along the shores of the East and North rivers. The only thing to stop it was the police and military forces. Should everything be divided equally as was proposed, the drunkard would pour his share down his burning throat, and the gambler would throw his away on dice. After a while some would have more than others, and finally the devil would get all. Whenever there was a differance in brain there would be a difference in all estate. Violence would tear down but would never build up. A man ought to have what he earned, and there was no better country for him to do so than this. In relation to strikes, some were good and some were communistic. When they prevented other men than the strikers from working, as in the railroad strikes of last summer, they were communistic, and all such should receive the condemnation of the American public. The President and Governors did well when they planted loaded cannon in the streets that were blocked up with that commune mass. There was only one kind of social system which could be happy and enduring, and that was the one which had for its corner stone the Rock of Ages. This seems to be the time for aniversaries, in general and in particular. The New York Herald accounts for the freaks of weather, because the Quakers are about holding their anniversaries. It is not very clear why broad brims and drab bonnets should be conjoined in the public mind with wet weather, but it seems to be so. Perhaps continued observation of the phenomenon for a series of years has led to the conclusion, but whether friends coming together effects the atmosphere, or it effects their coming is not stated, nor is it known why a distinction should be made toward them by "Old Prob." and not toward Presbyterians, Reformed Episcopalians and others who have been airing themselves here and yonder for the past week. It ought to be a matter of congratulatian, however, that the Friends are prepared for any weather that may come. Not only is this a time for church anniversaries, but of mission societies, both home and foreign, and of Sabbath schools, in many places.

Coaching seems to be growing in favor, and much interest has been taken in the trip from this city to Philadelphia. The trip of the "Tally Ho," carrying the members of the Coaching Club, was in every way a success. Thousands of persons turned out at every point to cheer the merry travelers on their way. Going and coming it was one magnificent ovation, more interesting than forty years ago, when the old stage coach rumbled along these Jersey and and Pennsylvania roads, and it is very certain, that, except in the way of amusement, the conveyance of the olden time will never be restored there or any where else. We must try and be contented with steam until some one more successful than Darius Green, invents a flying machine.

TULIDIC.

Maxims.

The following maxims and proverbs should have a place in the memory of all:

A bad workman will quarrel with his tools.

A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush.

A burden which one chooses is not felt.

A clear conscience fears no accusation.

A contented mind is a continual feast.

A fault confessed is half redressed.

A fool and his money are soon parted.

A place for everything and everything in its place.

A friend in need is a friend indeed.

A good word is as soon said as an ill one.

A drowning man will catch at a straw.

A guilty conscience needs no accuser.

A little leak will sink a great ship.

An honest man's word is as good as his bond.

A penny saved is a penny earned.

A stitch in time saves nine.

As you sow, so shall you reap.

A tree is known by its fruits.

A willing mind makes a light foot.

Better to suffer without cause than to have cause for suffering.

Never Known to Fail.

Dr. Morris' Syrup of Tar, Wild Cherry and Horehound has never been known to fail in permantly curing obstinate coughs, colds, croupe, whooping cough, nor any diseases of the respiratory organs, and it does it, too, at once. It is not necessary to take it for a long time before you can discover its beneficial effects. Its sale in this community is immense, and its popularity universal. It should not be classed with compounds put up by inexperienced hands. Do not fail to give this great and potent remedy a trial. It will not and cannot disappoint you. Try it once. Trial size 10 cents. Regular size 50 cents and one dollar. For sale by F. E. Davenport. Also agents for Prof. Parker's Pleasant Worm Syrup, which never fails. Pleasant to take and requires no physic. Price 25c.

A Gentle hint.

Now Being Published.

The supplementary series of Ancient Classics for English readers, edited by the Rev. W. Lucas Collins, M. A., 16mo fine cloth, $1 each.

The volumes of the new series now ready are: I, LIVY, by the editor. II, OVID, by the Rev. A. Church, M. A. III, CATULLUS, TIBULLUS and PROPERTIUS, by the Rev. James Davies, M. A. IV, DEMOSTHENES, by the Rev. J. W. Broadribb. V, ARISTOTLE by Sir Alexander Grant, Bart., LL. D.

The volumes yet to appear will consist of Lucretius, Anacreon, Thucydides and Pindar. The series will not exceed ten volumes.

We welcome the appearance of a supplementary series of 'Ancient Classics for English readers,' which was certainly very much required, if the publication was to answer the purpose for which it was originally designed. . . . Mr. Collin's 'Livy' is almost, if not quite, equal to the best of the preceding series. . . . . Mr. Church's Essey is a very complete and scholarly performance.—London Times.

We have spoken in praise of this series so often, we need add nothing now. It is a great thing to have the marvelous treasur-house of classic literature opened to English readers.—Chicago Advance.

It ought to find a great deman, and should be in every school and coledge library as well as the private libraries of gentlemen of culture.—Boston Traveler.

JUST READY.

A charming new novel, by the author of "Dolores," "Mignon," "Diana Carew" etc.

VIVA.

By Mrs. Forrester, 12mo. extra cloth, $1.50.

A work of unusual power and interest. The plot is deeply attractive, the characters are striking, and the management of the story throughout is very skillful. Intensity seems to be Mrs. Forrester's forte, and it is as fully exemplified in this book as in her uncommonly brilliant "Dolores." In "Viva" the reader will find unflagging entertainment.—Boston Saturday Evening Gazette.

THE DAUGHTER OF AN EGYPTIAN KING.

A romance. From the German of George Ebers, author of "Narda," etc., by Henry Reed. New edition. 16mo. Fine cloth, $1.25.

It is a wonderful production.—New York World.

The plot is a most interesting one, and in its development we are given an accurate insight into the social and political life of the Egyptians of that time. —Boston Evening Traveler.

SEED-TIME AND HARVEST:

Or, During My Apprenticeship. A romance. From the Platt Deutsch of Fritz Reuter. New edition. 8vo. extra cloth, $1.25. Paper cover, 75 cents.

Fritz Reuter is one of the most popular writers in Germany. . . . The charm of his stories lies in their simplicity and exquisite truth to nature. This is one of the best of Reuter's stories, exhibiting his turn for the pathetic as well as for the humorous.—New York Evening Post.

For sale by all booksellers, or will be sent, postpaid, upon receipt of the price by J. B. LIPPINCOTT & Co., Publishers, 715 and 717 Market St., Philadelphia.

Enjoy Life.

What a truly beautiful world we live in! Nature gives us grandeur of mountains, gleas and oceans, and thousands of means for enjoyment. We can desire no better when in perfect health, but how often do the majority of people feel like giving it up disheartened, discouraged and worried out with disease, when there is no occasion for this feeling, as every sufferer can easily obtain satisfactory proof that Green's August Flower will make them as free from disease as when born. Dyspepsia and Liver complaint is the direct causes of seventy-five per cent. of such maladies as billiousness, indigestion, sick headach, costiveness, nervous prostration, dizziness of the head, palpitation of the heart, and other distressing symptoms. Three doses of August Flower will prove its wonderful effect. Sample bottles, 10 cents. Try it. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

The Syndicate of New York bankers has decided to take the remaining $15,000,000 of the $50,000,000 of 4½ per cent. bonds covered by its contract with the Secretary of the Treasury. The options for October, November and December are thus anticipated. A large part of the $15,000,000 will be sold abroad.

The Treasury Department has discontinued the payment of standard silver dollars for treasury notes at the sub-treasury in New York. The object of paying out silver for greenbacks was to get the former into circulation, but nearly all issued in this manner returned to it in the payment of custom duties, the persons concerned thereby saving the premium on gold.

A Mexican named Peralto has accomplished at Fleetwood Park, New York, the task of riding 305 miles in 14 hours and 31 minutes, having 20 minutes to spare. The quickest mile was 2 minutes and 10 seconds; the quickest ten miles, 22 minutes and 12 seconds.

THE WEST.

The great musical festival at Cincinnati cleared upward of $30,000.

Gov. Smith, of Wisconsin, has issued his proclamation convening the Legislature in extra session on the 4th of June next for the purpose of perfecting the revision of the General Statutes.

Rice's Extravaganza Combination is now playing a two-weeks' engagement at Haverly's Chicago Theater, opening with "Evangeline," followed the second week with "Conrad the Corsair." One of the features of the entertainment is the appearance of Mr. Sol Smith Russell in his inimitable specialties. The music is good and the scenery new and appropriate.

The Coroner's jury which has been holding an inquest on the victims of the mill explosion at Minneapolis, Minn., has returned a verdict that the disaster was the result of an explosion of mill-dust floating in the air, kindled by fire in the woodwork of the Washburn A mill, originating in a spark from the stones running empty. No evidence is found to show negligence on the part of the mill-operatives, but the open purifiers in use in mills are condemned as generating an unusual amount of dust.

WASHINGTON.

Capt. Eads has had a large model made and placed in the basement of the Capitol showing the mouth of the jetties, and the channel washed out by their aid. He denies that he has abandoned his contract to create a channel thirty feet deep and 300 feet wide.... President Hayes has sent to Congress a message, covering the award of the Halifax Fishery Commission, and a report on the subject from the Secretary of State. The report raised the question of the competence of the Commission to make an award without the unanimous concurrence of its members, but suggests that Congress should appropriate the money, to be paid at the discretion of the Executive. Some expression by Congress upon the unreasonable and unfair character of the award is also suggested, which, with the protest of the President, may be communicated to the British Government.

The receipts of the Patent Office from Jan. 1 to May 1, 1878, were $263,963. The expenditures for the same time, exclusive of $45,000 for repairing the models injured by the fire, were $188,377—an excess of receipts over expenditures of $75,586. At this rate the surplus for the year would be $226,758, a much larger amount than has ever been derived in a single year.

A Washington dispatch says "the sale of the 4-per-cent. bonds has already reached such an amount as will shortly justify the issue of a call for five million 6 per cents., which will be replaced by 4 per cents. Sherman denies that the Syndicate has made an offer for six hundred millions of 4 per cents. at par, provided it was given a monopoly of the sale. He says that under no circumstances will he give any bankers a monopoly of the fours. They are, he considers, the people's bonds, and he intends they shall remain so."

The House Committee on Expenditures in the State Department has agreed to report articles of impeachment against Consul General Bradford, at Shanghai.

The Secretary of the Treasury has called in the following bonds: Coupon bonds dated July 1, 1865, namely: $50, No. 56,001 to No. 59,000, both inclusive; $100, No. 9,001 to No. 10,100, both inclusive; $500, No. 66,001 to No. 69,000, both inclusive; $1,000, No. 20,901 to No. 25,000, both inclusive. Total coupon, $2,500,000. Registered bonds, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after the 1st of July, 1870; $50, No. 1,951 to No. 2,050, both inclusive; $100, No. 15,701 to No. 16,000, both inclusive; $500, No. 8,351 to No. 9,700, both inclusive; $1,000, No. 30,901 to No. 32,200, both inclusive; $5,000, No. 8,451 to No. 8,700, both inclusive; $10,000, No. 15,781 to No. 16,250 both inclusive. Total registered, $2,500,000. Aggregate, $5,000,000. The principal and interest will be paid at the treasury on and after the 22d of August next, and interest will cease on that day.

THE SOUTH.

Collector Woodcock telegraphs the Commissioner of Internal Revenue from Nashville, Tenn., that Special Deputy Collector Davis, with one companion, attempted to seize an illicit distillery on Saturday in Grundy county. They were attacked by seven men. Davis killed one, wounded one and captured one of his assailants, but had to leave the distillery without completing its destruction.

A fire at Clarksville, Texas, last week, burned nineteen business houses, involving a loss of $150,000, with scarcely any insurance.

Gov. Colquitt, of Georgia, has commuted the death sentence of Mrs. Kate Southern, of Pickens county, to imprisonment in the penitentiary for ten years.... Dr. J. C. Cook, of Columbia, S. C., was shot dead in his house the other day during a quarrel with his brother-in-law, Charles Martin, aged 20.

GENERAL.

St. John, N. B., is to be put in a state of defense from attacks by sea, in anticipation of a war with Russia.

The Mexican Minister in Washington has advices to the effect that recent revolutionary attempts have failed, and that there is now no armed resistance to the Diaz Government.

An Ottawa (Canada) dispatch says: "The Government received a dispatch from the Imperial Government this afternoon announcing that war between England and Russia is inevitable."

A melancholy catastrophe occurred at the Syndney coal-mines near Halifax, N. S., a few days ago, by which a number of lives were lost and much valuable property destroyed. The accident was caused by the explosion of gas.

A telegram from North Troy, Vt., says: "A correspondent of the Associated Press visited several of the principal towns on the Canadian border, and finds everywhere the most intense excitement prevailing. The Dominion militia are supplied with arms and ammunition, and are ready at an hour's notice to concentrate their forces to repel invasion on the Canada border. The soldiers say no doubt exists in their minds that an invasion is imminent, and that the Irish Nationalists are now in large numbers, with the greatest secrecy possible, making their way into the interior of Canada, with orders to concentrate at different points for an onslaught on Montreal, Quebec, Ottawa and other prominent Canadian towns."

A distressing catastrophe happened at Galt, Ontario, a few nights since. A small pleasure-steamer, with a party of eighteen people on board, capsized on Grand river, and eight of them were lost.... James Gordon Bennett's North-pole expedition will soon sail from France for San Francisco, and will proceed thence, by way of Behring's straits, to the North pole. It may not start from San Francisco, if a cable dispatch is to be trusted, until the summer of 1879. The Behring's straits route naturally offers attractions to polar explorers, as the ocean current in that quarter sets toward the pole instead of from it, as is the case in Smith sound.... The Lerdo revolutionists have captured a Mexican town on the Rio Grande, and levied a forced loan of $8,000 on the inhabitants.

POLITICAL.

The Ohio Democratic Convention will be held at Columbus on the 26th of June.

The committee appointed by Speaker Randall to conduct the investigation of the Louisiana and Florida elections, provided for by the Potter resolution, is constituted as follows: Clarkson N. Potter, of New York; William R. Morrison, of Illinois; Eppa Hunton, of Virginia; John A. McMahon, of Ohio; J. C. S. Blackburn, of Kentucky; W. S. Stenger, of Pennsylvania; Thomas R. Cobb, of Indiana—Democrats. B. F. Butler, of Massachusetts; Frank Hiscock, of New York; J. D. Cox, of Ohio, and Thomas B. Reed, of Maine—Republicans.

The Nationals of Indiana met in State Convention at Indianapolis on May 22, and nominated the following ticket: Secretary of State, Henry James; Auditor, Jacob F. Bird; Treasurer, R. P. Main; Attorney General, David Moss; Superintendent of Public Instruction, Prof. John Young.

The Democrats of Pennsylvania held their State Convention at Pittsburgh last week. Andrew H. Dill was nominated for Governor, H. P. Ross for Supreme Judge, and J. Simpson Africa for Secretary of Internal Affairs. The platform adopted declares that the Republican party, its measures and its men, are responsible for the financial distress, and misery, and want that now exist; that its present hold upon the Federal power was secured by fraud, perjury, and forgery; that further contraction of the volume of United States legal-tender notes is unwise and unnecessary; that treasury notes issued in exchange for bonds bearing a low rate of interest is the best form in which the credit of the Government can be given in paper currency; that the public lands are the common property of the people, and they should not be sold to speculators, nor granted to railroads or other corporations, but should be reserved as homesteads for actual settlers; that "thorough investigation into the electoral frauds of 1876 should be made; fraud should be exposed, truth vindicated, and criminals punished, but we oppose any attack upon the President's title as dangerous to our institutions and fruitless in its results."

The Republican Convention of Vermont met at Burlington on May 23. Col. Redfield Proctor was nominated for Governor, E. P. Colton for Lieutenant Governor, and John A. Page, present incumbent, for State Treasurer. The resolutions declare that "the motives and general course of the administration of President Hayes have our hearty approbation," and condemn as "unfair and revolutionary the measure of the Democratic House of Representatives to investigate a part only of the facts pertaining to the Presidential election, and consider that all efforts to reopen a question of such magnitude, after it has once been lawfully, and as we believe justly, closed, are detrimental to the prosperity and perilous to the peace of the country, deserving the reprehension of all good citizens."

FOREIGN NEWS.

A St. Petersburg dispatch says it is believed Count Schouvaloff has succeeded in convincing the Emperor that it is to Russia's interest to concede to Europe most of the demands formulated by England.... There has been severe fighting between the Christians and Turks in Crete.

A dispatch from St. Petersburg, referring to Count Schouvaloff's departure, says "there can scarcely be a doubt that he goes back to London empowered to make concessions in accordance with the British point of view—nay, more, as is believed in St. Petersburg, to offer great concessions."

The Albanian revolt in Old Servia has has been suppressed.... There are 30,000 Thessalian refugees in Greece. They refuse to return to their homes. Many of them are joining the Greek army.... The Times says the war has already cost Russia about £100,000,000

United States Minister Seward writes of the famine in China that the actual famine is pressing upon 15,000,000 people, while 60,000,000 are suffering more or less distress. The crops, he says, have been good immediately around the stricken districts, but, as the food can be transported only on wagons or pack animals, it cannot be taken thither in sufficient quantities to save the lives of the people.

There has been a serious emeute in Constantinople. A body of refugees entered the garden of the palace inhabited by ex-Sultan Murad and raised shouts of "Long live the Sultan." The sentinels opposed the entry of these men into the palace, who were fired upon and driven back.... A number of them were killed and wounded.... A Vienna dispatch says the possibility of a congress seems to be generally admitted, although few have confidence in its result. Count Andrassy no longer has implicit faith in that mode of settlement.

Count Schouvaloff, the Russian Minister to London, whose recent movements have been the subject of much speculation, has returned to that city from St. Petersburg and Berlin. It is reported that the result of his conferences with the heads of the Russian and German Governments is an agreement upon a peaceful basis, and it is believed that an early congress of the powers, to meet at Baden-Baden, is now assured.... News from Samoa states that a British gunboat has seized a vessel representing the Samoan navy, in satisfaction of an indemnity claimed for losses sustained by British subjects at the time of the Steinberger troubles. ....News comes from China that there has been a rain-fall in the famine-inflicted districts, that sowing has been general, and that the prospect for a harvest is encouraging.... A conflict between Montenegro and the Porte is threatening.

The Austrian Ministry, according to a Vienna correspondent, have come around completely to England's way of thinking on the Eastern question, and are no longer heeding Bismarck's advice.... Odessa is crowded with troops and munitions which are being rapidly moved toward Constantinople. Todleben is pushing his lines relentlessly and blustering about the fortresses, and the fitting out of the fleet of cruisers is expeditiously proceeding. The Turks evidently are of the opinion that their enemies are in earnest, and show signs that they themselves are thoroughly aroused. Osman Pasha has written a letter to the Turkish newspapers declaring his ability to defend Constantinople successfully against an enemy "weakened by illness and fatigue." Osman has concentrated 130 battalions along the northern line of defense—the line which, if broken, would give the Russians command of the Bosphorus—and strengthened the position with siege guns.... The Servian army is on a complete war footing. All the available troops have been sent to the Bosnian frontier and Old Servia.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS.

Friday, May 17.—Senate.—Not in session.

House.—After a stormy session and repeated calls of the House the Democrats succeeded in getting a quorum, and sustained the previous question on the Potter investigation resolution. Mr. Goode, of Virginia, who was paired with a sick member, had given notice that he would no longer be bound by the pair. When he cast his vote, Mr. Conger, of Michigan, questioned the honor of the proceeding, and the Virginia gentleman asserted his intention of holding the gentleman from Michigan personally responsible for any assault upon his honor. A scene of excitement and confusion ensued, hot words were exchanged, and the language of the irate members was "taken down." Speaker Randall ruled that it was all unparliamentary, if not used "in a Pickwickian sense." On the final vote ordering the previous question the Republicans adhered to their policy of silence, and Mr. Harrison (Democrat), of Illinois, was the only one in the negative. When the roll was called on the adoption of the resolutions, Mr. Harrison voted in the affirmative. Messrs. Mills, of Texas, and Morse voted in the negative. The Republicans did not vote, and the resolutions were adopted without them, yeas [illegible], nays 2.

Saturday, May 18.—Senate.—Not in session.

House.—Mr. Ellis, from the Committee on Elections, reported a resolution declaring that there had been no fair, free and peaceable election in the First Congressional District of South Carolina, and that neither Rainey (the sitting member) nor Richardson (contestant) was entitled to the seat. ..The House devoted nearly the entire day to the consideration of the Army Appropriation bill.

Monday, May 20.—Senate.—Mr. Thurman, from the Judiciary Committee, to which was recommitted the House bill to provide for the admission to the bar of the Supreme Court of the United States of any woman who has been a member of the bar of the highest court of any State or Territory for the period of three years, reported it back with the amendment of Mr. Sargent, providing that no person shall be refused admission to the bar of the United States courts on account of sex. There was no law prohibiting a court from admitting women to the bar, and, therefore, there was no necessity for this legislation.... Mr. Christiancy introduced, by request, a bill to reorganize the Court of Claims.... The Senate indulged in a long and animated debate upon the House bill to place the name of Gen. Shields on the retired list of the army, with the rank of Brigadier General. Mr. Sargent moved to amend the bill by adding the name of Gen. Grant. This was agreed to—yeas, 30, all Republicans with the exception of one (Lamar); nays, 28, all Democrats except Oglesby. ....Mr. Morrill addressed the Senate in opposition to the bill to repeal the Resumption act.

House.—The following bills were introduced: By Mr. Harris, repealing the law imposing a tax of 1 per cent. on State banks; by Mr. Shelley, of Alabama, giving the guarantee of the Government to the payment of 5 per cent. interest on the bonds to be issued by the following-named companies to the following amounts: The James River and Kanawha Canal Company, $60,000,000; Atlantic and Great Western Canal Company, $50,000,000; the Florida Coast Canal Company, $12,000,000; the Fort St. Philip Canal Company, $10,000,000; the Rock Island and Hennepin Canal Company, $13,000,000; the Oswego Canal Company, $25,000,000; the Lexington and Big Sandy Railroad Company, $5,000,000; the Niagara Ship Canal Company, $14,000,000; by Mr. Garfield, for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses; by Mr. Atkins, requiring all appointments in the civil service to be distributed equally among the Congressional Districts; by Mr. Crittenden, providing that the claims of militia-men or non-enlisted persons on account of disabilities received in battle with rebels or Indians shall be valid if filed previous to July, 1882.... The Army Appropriation bill was discussed.

Tuesday, May 21.—Senate.—Mr. Conkling, from the Committee on Commerce, reported adversely on the Senate bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi river at Memphis, and it was indefinitely postponed.... The Senate resumed consideration of the bill to place the name of Gen. Shields on the retired list of the army. The question was on concurring in the amendment of the committee of the whole placing the name of Gen. Grant on the retired list, and it was defeated—32 to 26—a strict party vote, the Republicans voting in the affirmative and the Democrats in the negative. After debate, Mr. Thurman moved to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill as an amendment, and insert in lieu thereof a provision authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Gen. Shields on the pension list, at the rate of $100 a month. A lengthy debate ensued, which was participated in by Messrs. Thurman, Blaine and Hill. The amendment of Mr. Thurman was rejected—yeas, 31; nays, 33. The question being on the passage of the bill, a vote was taken without further discussion, and it was rejected—yeas, 30; nays, 34. Mr. Teller entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected.

House.—The House devoted the entire day, in committee of the whole, to the consideration of the Army Appropriation bill.

Wednesday, May 22.—Senate.—The Senate discussed the resolution of Mr. Davis authorizing an investigation of the books and accounts of the Treasury Department.... Mr. Paddock's bill for the relief of settlers on the public lands was passed. It allows pre-emption settlers who have changed their title to homestead entry the benefit of the time the land was occupied under the pre-emption entry.... The remainder of the day was occupied by a speech by Mr. Lamar on the Texas Pacific Railroad bill.... The Senate, in executive session, confirmed the nomination of S. B. Packard as Consul at Liverpool, by a strict party vote. Lucius Fairchild was also confirmed as Consul General at Paris.

House.—Mr. Harrison, of Illinois, offered a resolution extending the Potter investigation to Oregon and South Carolina. On a vote as to whether it was a question of privilege no quorum responded, and Mr. Harrison withdrew his resolution. Mr. Wilson then offered a resolution extending the power of the investigating committee to any State where there may be any well-grounded allegation of fraud, which was adopted.... Articles of impeachment were reported against O. B. Bradford, late Vice Consul General at Shanghai, China, and referred to the Judiciary Committee.... Mr. Butler's bill for the publication of the Official Advertiser of the United States was passed after a good deal of discussion.. .The House indulged in another lively debate over the Army Appropriation bill.

Thursday, May 23.—Senate.—Bills were passed to provide for service of process in cases of inter-pleader in courts of the United States, and authorizing the erection of headstones over the graves of Union soldiers interred in private cemeteries.... The resolution of Mr. Davis authorizing the select committee to investigate the books of the Treasury Department to continue the investigation during the recess was adopted.... The bill providing for a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia occupied a large share of the day's session.... The Senate, in executive session, confirmed a large number of appointments. The nomination of John B. Frothingham to be Assistant Appraiser of Merchandise at New York was rejected.

House.—Mr. Robertson, rising to a question of personal privilege, stated that charges had been made against citizens of the parishes of East and West Feliciana, which, if true, would compel him to retire in shame from his seat. He sent to the Clerk's desk and had read that portion of Secretary Sherman's letter to Clarkson N. Potter, in which he refers to the election in those parishes. Mr. Robertson then proceeded to make a general statement as to the election in East and West Feliciana, but was interrupted by the Speaker pro tem., who reminded him that all that was remote from a question of personal privilege. Mr. Burchard—Unless the gentleman connects himself with the frauds he speaks of.... Mr. Robertson—I do connect myself with those frauds by denouncing them and by branding the charge in that letter as a vile calumny. There was a conspiracy in those parishes, and I believe that John Sherman was connected with it.... The House devoted the balance of the day and the entire evening session to the consideration of the Army Appropriation bill.

We have always said that if man ever planted his brogans on the solid rock of perfect content, science would be the sapper and miner to build the corduroy over the intervening bog. The stringers are already down, and here comes the first load of timber: "A lost umbrella was recovered in Philadelphia, the other day, by the aid of the telephone."—Breakfast Table.

The delinquent tax-list of Philadelphia is only twelve pages long, and yet the city pays annually $45,500 for it. It is printed as a supplement to six of the city papers, each of which receives $7,582.20. The papers combine in doing the type-work and press-work, and the supplements are identical. The job is a very profitable one for the papers.

COINING THE SILVER DOLLARS.

A Visit to the United States Mint at Philadelphia.

[From Appletons' Journal for June.]

It was founded very nearly 100 years ago, and in it was coined the first money used in the United States. Until 1816, all the work was done by hand or horse-power; the building was guarded by watch-dogs, and the artisans were supplied with plentiful quantities of liquor as a fatigue-ration—the ancient and simple-minded citizens looking upon them with especial favor. The earliest Director was appointed by Washington. The original copper cents were made in 1793, the silver dollars in 1794, and the gold eagles in 1795. Both the metal and machinery were imported; but in coining, as in many other things, the American has made such progress within the century that the implements of his own construction are now superior to the models after which they are patterned.

The casual visitor is welcomed from 9 a. m. until noon, and is taken in hand by polite and garrulous ushers, who, in common with all the other employes, bear themselves with the dignity that befits persons living in such close contact with enormous wealth. "I've seen $550,000,000 go in and out of this place," said one of the employes, as he led us into a dimly-lighted vault, where the pale bricks of silver were piled from roof to ceiling—"$550,000,000 in twenty-eight years," he repeated, with particular gusto; and at the statement our fancy immediately took a wild flight among the enchanting possibilities of such treasure, for when Mammon mounts Pegasus no adolescent muse can career through realms so luminous and varicolored as this metallic deity, who is worshiped and despised, courted and reviled, by the best and worst of men. The very contemplation of so immense a sum was dazzling to the imagination. It was the aggregate fortune of 500 millionaires, the income of scores of thrones and the value of a state! What a protean influence it must have exercised!—corrupting and sustaining how many lives; paying the scant wages of the ten-hour laborer, and sufficing for the extravagance of a princely spendthrift; carrying happiness with it now, and then capriciously destroying the beneficiary; seducing the virtuous and breeding sedition among the honest—forever doing good and harm by fickle strokes; forever indispensable and forever alluring. In one of his clever essays, Junius Henri Browne says with Emersonian sententiousness: "Cash is the cause and consequence of civilization, the measure of its breadth, and the plummet of its profundity. Every true ideal must rest on the real, and the real to-day is the coinage of the mint." The contents of the little vault had probably left deeper marks on the world than all the books written and the sermons preached during the twenty-eight years of the custodian's service.

In passing through the deposit-room all the metal is carefully weighed. The largest scale, with a ponderous beam and huge trays, combines extreme delicacy with its strength, and balances from 6,000 ounces to the 1-100th part of an ounce; another scale tells 3,000 ounces at a time, and a third tells 300 ounces. They are adjusted several times a week, erected on solid masonry, and are true to a grain. Having been weighed, the silver is carried to the melting-room, where it is mixed with copper, in order to give it sufficient hardness to endure the friction of constant handling, and melted in stone crucibles, heated to 1,800 deg. by charcoal fires. This heat is so intense that the workmen must protect their hands and arms by gloves and gauntlets. The stone crucibles are placed within others of plumbago, in order to insure them against breaking. Reduced to a molten fluid, the metal is now poured into iron molds, whence it emerges in the form of ingots, which are transferred to rolling-mills which shape them by a rapid process of attenuation into long, narrow slips.

The coining-press is a massive engine of mirror-like steel and brass. It is fed with the blanks through a vertical brass tube in the same way that the milling-machine is fed, and a very charming young lady satisfies its appetite, which demands eighty blanks a minute. Its power is that of the toggle-joint, and it moves with the soniferous rock of a baby-giant's cradle. As the blanks reach the bottom of the tube they are seized singly by a pair of steel feeders similar in motion to human fingers and thumbs, and "carried forward and lodged in the collar between the upper and lower dies. At the same moment the lever is descending, and, by the time the planchet is in position, the toggle-joint, brought into a vertical position, imparts to the piece a pressure which, within the narrow limits of its motion, is almost incalculable. The immediate relaxation of the joint causes the upper die to be lifted, when the feeders, coming up with a second planchet, push away the one already coined. The planchet, before being struck, is slightly less in diameter than the steel ring or collar into which it drops; but the pressure upon the dies causes the piece to expand into the collar, and takes from it the reeding or fluting of its edge."

Why John Randolph Did Not Marry.

Regarding the allegation of woman-hater, he may be forgiven, if such he was, or his malevolent feeling at least excused, when we consider the following incident in his early manhood: He had paid his addresses to a young lady of equal social position with himself, asked her hand in marriage and was accepted. The day of their nuptials was announced, the invited guests assembled, the hour for the ceremony arrived, and the priest stood ready to perform the functions of his holy office. The bride-elect sent a message to her affianced husband that she wished to meet him privately for consultation before proceeding to the hymenial altar. He obeyed the summons, and was confronted by her parents and other relatives, and asked to sign a contract for a marriage settlement as a condition precedent to the performance of the ceremony—a document prepared without his knowledge, and of the existence of which he was now first made acquainted. Not deigning to notice any one present but she who had plighted him her love and faith, he inquired of her if their demand had been prompted by others or was it her own voluntary action. Receiving a reply that it was an act of her own free will, he bade her adieu and retired from the assembly.

This circumstance is supposed to have had a life-long influence on Randolph, to have blunted the finer feelings of his nature, and to have given that cast to his character which enemies have construed into misanthropy.

The Illusions of Distance.

It seems that the Asiatics think that Turkey has conquered and has granted peace to the Russians! The Berlin Post publishes the following curious article:

A very learned linguist—a subscriber to our paper—has just favored us with what he says is a literal translation of an article which recently appeared in a Smyrna paper published in Arabic and called the Akhbar. The article reads thus:

"There is no god but Allah, and Mohammed is his prophet! The shadow on earth of the holy prophet has been pleased to grant to the Russians peace. The faithful sons of Islam are well aware how the accursed Giaours had just refused to pay their contribution to Turkey, how they rebelled, and, taking up arms, had dared to go fighting against the ruler of the faithful, bearing upon him with all their might, and helped by all the devilish inventions and craft of modern times. But, glory to Allah, the cause of truth and righteousness, and the religion of the prophet have conquered. Our gracious sovereign and victorious master has had the best of the unclean dogs, and this time without any allies at all; in this struggle he did not even call upon his faithful vassals, the red-haired Britishers, the French and the Italians. He vanquished the rebels alone, at the head of his mighty and countless host, his ever victorious and innumerable armies of the faithful.

"And now, in his untold mercy and kindness, he, the great Sultan, grants to the unholy dogs of Giaours that peace for which they had so humbly supplicated him of late.

"Hearken to this, ye people of the faithful! Soon Stamboul will once more resume its sway over all nations and rule again the whole world. But listen to this also, ye unclean Jews, Christian Giaours and Gentiles, and hear of the exemplary punishment it has pleased our gracious Padishah to inflict upon the penitent rebels! The chief of the Moscow army, accompanied by his numerous suite, consisting of his bravest Generals, is now forced by the will of his sovereign to appear in Stamboul, and, having prostrated himself in humility in the dust before the face of the ruler, to publicly confess his transgressions in sackcloth and with his beard shaved. The contribution which the rebels owe to the Sultan will then be paid in full, after which the earthly shadow of the prophet, in his everlasting patience and mercy, will restore the King of the Moscovites to his throne in official capacity of vassal and viceroy of the Sultan. Thus it is that Allah humbles the pride of all who dare rebel against the ruler of all the faithful. Listen to this, ye sons of the true faith, and return thanks to the prophet, who never forsakes his sons."

An Iowa Paper on Slanderers.

Whisky under ordinary circumstances can, and does, do a great deal of mischief. But, when you desire to see the devil do his best work at torturing poor humanity, just call and see him when he has turned a lot of long and limber tongues loose in a community. There is a class of creatures—hes and shes—things that are neither men nor women—they are hyenas in human form, and they gorge themselves to the full on the foul and fetid falsehoods that continually ooze from the slimy and stinking sewers of each other's mouths. Their daily food is falsehood and filth; and the more nauseating and nasty, the more nourishing and nutritious to these gloating ghouls. Their daintiest dish is served up in its most savory manner when two or three of them meet to bandy bawdy lies about some good and virtuous girl or woman. These he-harlots of hades are always happiest when spreading the spawn of their lecherous lies over the sainted name of wife or mother, for by so doing the devilish ichor dripping from their ulcerous lips will eat through and poison the whole family. The she-scorpions are the samples which Satan's drummers have located in each village to show to mankind the meanest thing on earth or in hell—a tell-tale termagant. Shut your ears and doors against them. Let these filthy fiends feel that you loathe them as you do the sow that is fresh from her wallow. If the long-eared and long-tongued hound comes into your presence, bid him begone and return to his vomit. Kick these skunks of society from your path. Make them feel that they are no more welcome to your homes or in your presence than is the bedbug or the pole-cat. Show these vermin that there is no place for them in decent society, any more than there is for the buzzard, or the bawd, or the house-infesting bat. Sooner would we welcome to our humble home a slimy snake than one of these babbling, tattling, scandal-serving cesspools that befoul society.—Ottumwa (Iowa) Onward.

Texas Cattle Plague.

The United States Supreme Court recently decided, virtually, that the State laws to prevent the introduction of Texas, Mexican or Indian cattle within their borders are unconstitutional. Representative Morgan, of Missouri, to obviate any difficulty that the decision of the Supreme Court might create in certain sections of the country, has introduced in the lower house of Congress a bill declaring the introduction of Texas, Mexican or Indian cattle into Missouri, Kansas or Illinois, from March to Nov. 1 of each year, an offense punishable with fine or imprisonment. The design of the bill is to protect domestic cattle from what is known as the Texas fever.

The Inventor of the Phonograph.

Edison, the inventor of the phonograph, is a beardless young man, of a pale, studious face, clear blue eyes, dreamy aspect, and chestnut locks. He is very deaf, and, it is said, has never heard clearly the voice of his invention. The phonograph is his 158th patent, and from his inventions he is said to draw a large income.

On December 1, 1877, the population of Berlin numbered 1,018,818. In 1860 it was only 500,000.

A SWORD SWALLOWER.

His Startling Feats in the Westminster Aquarium, London.

A servant brings a table on to the stage, and upon it he places a box containing the various swords to be swallowed. He then retires and brings from behind the scenes a musket. Upon its summit is placed a formidable-looking bayonet. All being ready, Mr. Benedetti appears with a very bright sword in his hand. Arriving at the front of the stage, he drives the point of the sword into the floor, and the force of the impaction of the sword into the wood causes it to sway backward and forward. Mr. Benedetti then goes to his box and produces a sword made of a non-lustrous metal. Holding it in the air, between his two hands, he opens his mouth and simply thrusts it down his throat in the same manner as a cavalry soldier would replace his sword in the sheath. This is feat No. 1.

Mr. Benedetti next takes up six or eight of these swords, and, having put them one behind the other, he opens his mouth again, and, presto, down goes the lot into what is called by children the "red lane." These swords being well down into his throat, he then plucks them out one by one, and throws them on to the stage, where they fall with a crash that indicates to the commonest observer that they really are metal. This done, he rests a minute, and then comes the musket and bayonet. He lifts up the musket and holds it with bayonet downward above his head, and then slightly steadying the weapon, he allows the bayonet to gently glide down his throat. Just at the moment when it seems doubtful whether he is not going to swallow musket and all, it suddenly stops, and then the bayonet is hidden all but the part near where it joins on to the musket itself. But this is not enough; he leans forward, and holding the bayonet horizontally between his teeth, turns round and round, swinging the musket. He concludes the performance by a very marvelous feat. He goes directly to the sword that is still vibrating in the boards of the stage and pulls it out with a jerk. One cannot imagine what he is going to do with it, as it appears to the eye that the sword, from hilt to point, is longer than the man's body. He then proceeds to the middle of the stage; back goes his head, and down his throat goes the sword. Several eminent medical men, among whom is Mr. Frank Buckland, vouch to the fact that the sword swallowed measures thirty inches in length and one and a half across. Mr. Benedetti has been swallowing swords for fourteen years; the stomach is consequently accustomed to the reception. He is a singularly prepossessing man, and his manners are polished.

Perpetual Motion.

A magnetic clock, invented by Daniel Drawbaugh, of Milltown, Cumberland county, Pa., is sufficiently remarkable to be worth description. The magnetism of the earth, an inexhaustible source of power, is made to oscillate the pendulum, and the simplicity of all the works gives an assurance of the least possible friction. At a certain point the movements of the pendulum itself shut off magnetic connection with the earth, and at another point restore the connection, thus securing the conditions necessary to produce its oscillations. The works are so ingenious and simple that it is no wild assertion to make that, were it not for the unavoidable wearing out caused by even the small amount of friction, the clock would run as long as the solid earth endures. This clock is hung against a board partition, with all the works exposed, subject to the jarrings of machinery and obstructions from dust settling on it, yet since March 1, 1877, it has been running continuously and uniformly, with only slight reported variations, as tested by transit observations at noon.—Harrisburg (Pa.) Telegraph.

It is doubtful how Morrissey's estate will turn out. His confidential agent says he will feel more than satisfied if it pays the dead man's debts and the legacies to his sisters, the property being valuable to a man while alive, but difficult to capitalize so as to yield a profit to heirs. Mrs. Morrissey possesses $25,000 made over to her years ago, with which she will remain content, unless there is a clear surplus after paying the debts and legacies.

AUBURN COURIER.

T. C. MAYS, PUBLISHER.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

The Poor Farmer.

Too poor to take a paper,
Too poor to join the Grange!
So when the price was raising,
He did not know the change,
And sold his wheat for a dollar—
'Twas worth a quarter more,
And now the man is poorer
Than he had been before.

His neighbor Lookout told him,
This side the market town,
He should have come in sooner,
[illegible]
"But then perhaps 'tis even,
Since corn is on the rise,
And what you gain by waiting
Will pay for your supplies."

"Corn rising? why, I sold it!
The chap who bought my wheat
Said, this year corn was plenty,
But mine was hard to beat,
And so he paid three shillings—
What! everywhere 'tis four!
The difference would give me
A hundred dollars more."

He drew the reins and started,
With spirits sadly down,
And did a heap of thinking
Before he reached the town.
The upshot of the matter
You easily might guess;
This year he takes two papers,
And could not do with less.

Around the Farm.

THE coming industry, the production of beet sugar.

FRESH clover is good for little chicks that are confined.

DO NOT put a mortgage on the farm unless you are sure the soil is strong enough to raise it.

INTERROGATE your soil experimentally, and thus learn what is needed in the form of fertilizers to produce thereon remunerative crops.

THE composition of cheese, as found in our markets, is stated thus: Good kinds contain from 30 to 35, and inferior kinds 38 to 45 per cent. of water; rich sorts include from 25 to 30 per cent. of fats, and about the same proportion of albuminates. Poor cheese often contains only 6 per cent. of fats, and 40 to 50 per cent. of water. The amount of ash varies from 3 to 10 per cent.

MR. CHARLES DOWNING says in the New York Tribune that, as a rule, no variety of apple can bear large crops annually, except on rich, deep soils, or where made so by enriching materials annually, and even then, he thinks, at the expense of the life or age of the tree; that is, trees bearing large crops annually will not live as long as trees bearing moderate crops annually, or full crops alternate years.

GOD ALMIGHTY first planted a garden, and indeed it is the purest of all human pleasures. It is the greatest refreshment to the spirits of man, without which buildings and palaces are but gross handiworks, and a man shall ever see that when ages grow to civility and elegance, men come to build stately sooner than to garden finely, as if gardening were the greater perfection.—Lord Bacon.

MARKING sheep, Moore's Rural says, is best done with Venetian red, a pound of which, costing only a few cents, is sufficient for 1,000 head. "Take a pinch of the dry powder and draw the inclosing thumb and fingers through the wool at the spot you wish to mark, loosening the powder as you do so, and it will combine with the oil in the wool and make a bright red stain that the rains will never wash out, and which, without injuring the wool, will endure from one shearing to another, while it can be readily cleansed by the manufacturer."

I HAVE been very much interested in what has been published in your columns about applying plaster or gypsum to clover fields. There is no doubt whatever of the profit and advantage of the process, and by applications like this, with proper rotations of crops and pasturage of stock, the fields of the Northwest may be constantly enriched and made better every year. By the simple rotation with clover alone, and drain tile combined, that eminent farmer of Geneva, N. Y., John Johnson, constantly made his land richer and more valuable, instead of the reverse, as is too often the case in the West.—Cor. Prairie Farmer.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Detroit Post remarks that one who notices the horses for sale through the country will be surprised at the number of young animals offered at prices evidently less than the cost of raising them. They are generally fair-sized animals with some good blood, but of no particular shape, and fit for no particular work, and so bring no particular price. The great sums realized for a few trotters has fired the imagination of many farmers, and led them a jack-o'-lantern dance through the "lottery" of breeding. They sometimes stumble into a prize, but more often pay dearly for a blank.

About the House.

BATTER PUDDING.—One cup molasses, one cup sour milk, three small cups flour, three eggs, one-fourth teaspoonful soda, spice and fruit to taste. Steam three hours.

BUTTERSCOTCH.—Take one pound of sugar, three-quarters of a pint of water, and set over a slow fire; when done add one and a half table-spoonfuls of butter, and lemon juice to flavor.

TO MEND THE KETTLE.—Take a piece of copper, heat red-hot, shape it to fit the hole, and rivet it with a hammer on both sides; if it gets cold before you get it tight, heat again and pound till closed.

RICH JUMBLES.—Rub to a cream a pound of butter and a pound of sugar; mix with it a pound and a half of flour, four eggs, and a very little brandy; roll the cakes in powdered sugar; lay them on flat, buttered tins, and bake in a quick oven.

TO COLOR WITH CATECHU.—One pound catechu, four ounces of bichromate of potash, two ounces of alum, in with the catechu. I put the catechu in sufficient water to color the goods. When all dissolved and hot, dip the goods in, and then in the potash, dissolved in cold, soft water, dip till you get the required shade.

YELLOW, ORANGE, GREEN, AND BLUE.—For five pounds of cotton goods, dissolve ten ounces of sugar of lead in cold water enough to cover the goods; let them soak for half an hour. Dissolve in cold water seven ounces of bichromate of potash (I pound the bichromate to a fine powder to save work); take out your goods and put in the potash; repeat this several times, and you will have a nice yellow.

SUET PUDDING.—One cup of suet, chopped, one cup molasses, one cup sweet milk, three cups flour, one teaspoon of soda, two teaspoons cinnamon, one-half teaspoon cloves, one-half teaspoon ginger, one cup currants or raisins, after taking out the seeds. Sauce to be eaten on the above—Two cups sugar, one cup butter, one-half large nutmeg, one pint water; put it in a basin and let it boil; then thicken with flour or corn starch. Tried and pronounced splendid. Steam the above pudding three hours.

Edison's Theory of Eating.

"You see, Jerome," said Edison to me, after ordering his pastry triplets, "I have a theory of eating. Variety—that is the secret of wise eating. The nations that eat the most kinds of food are the greatest nations. They always have been, too, and always will be."

The waiter brought the strawberry shortcake, the strawberries and cream and the apple dumpling, and arranged them in a semi-circle around his plate, and received his negative to the laughing question if there was anything more.

As we proceeded with our lunch, Edison proceeded: "The rice-eating nations never progress; they never think or act anything but rice, rice forever. Look at the potato and black-bread eaters of Ireland; though naturally bright, the Irish in Ireland are enervated by the uniformity of their food. Look at the semi-savages who inhabit the Black Forest. On the other hand, what is, take it all in all, the most highly enlightened nation, the most thrifty, graceful, cultured and accomplished? Why, France, of course, where the cuisine has infinite variety. When the Roman empire was at its height the table was a marvel of diversity—they fed on nightingales' tongues, and all sorts of dainty dishes. So when Carthage was in her glory."

"You think, then, do you, as the Phœnicians are said to have taught, that the stomach is the seat of wisdom?"

"Yes. Some say I get the cart before the horse, and that the diversified food is the result of a high civilization rather than its cause; but I think I am right about it. A nation begins to decay, philosophically and morally, as soon as cooking is degraded from an art into an occupation."

"You try not to repeat the same dishes?"

"Oh, I don't live up to my theory, but I would like to live so that I could change my diet a thousand times a year."—New York letter to the Cincinnati Commercial.

The Casting of a Great Gold Brick.

At 4 o'clock the furnace lid was raised and the circular tongs lowered by Stephen Molitor to grasp the crucible. It was the critical moment, and all eyes eagerly watch the workmen. The tongs slip a little; Molitor grips more firmly, crushes them down among the living coals, and the iron bands close like a vise around the pot. The iron hook is lowered, grasped by the hooks below, and steadily rose the fiery treasure. "Steady!" cried Molitor, and the crucible, with its precious, bubbling fluid, was raised up and landed on the iron platform. The mold was ready, and the seething vessel was gradually worked to it, tipped over, and the molten mass poured in. When half full, the mold cracked like a rifle shot, but the pouring was continued until the last drop was drained from the crucible. In a few moments the brick was tossed on the floor, grasped by tongs, and tumbled into a tank of water, which bubbled, hissed, and foamed over and around the mammoth brick. Bucket after bucket was poured in and soon the monster was cooled. Thus was cast the largest gold brick that we are aware of in the world, all from a mine as yet unsurpassed in richness. The brick weighed 3,389.96 ounces, valued at $54,262.62. It is 19x6 inches on top, and 3¼ inches deep, representing 385.9375 cubic inches of solid metal.—Helena (Mont.) Independent.

Got What He Called For.

Len Smith's tavern at Waltham used to be, in days gone by, a favorite stopping-place for the farmers who, from further up the road, were accustomed to bring their truck to Boston for a market. Some of the knowing ones who were a "little near" would manage to get around just about time breakfast or dinner was nearly over, and, calling for a "cold bite," would be seated at the table, and for half the price of a dinner would get as "square" a meal as those who came early and paid full price. One old chap who had got his dinners in this manner for several months, and who was never known to spend an unnecessary cent in the house, was marked by the jolly landlord for a victim. On a certain day in winter, when he was known to be coming, a boiled dinner was prepared and set out the night before to cool. Punctually the next day "Barkis" put in an appearance and called for a "cold bite." A goodly plate full of frozen beef, potatoes, etc., was set before him. The first dab at a potato with his fork sent that article flying across the table, and a turnip shied from under his knife quite as rapidly. Feeling that he had been caught, he worried through, thoughtfully and silently. Having finished his meal, he walked up to the bar (behind which was the smiling landlord) to settle, and thus unbosomed himself: "Look a-here, Len, I've been stopping at your tavern to fodder for the last three months, and I'll be hanged if to-day ain't the first time I've ever got what I called for."—Boston Transcript.

ONE of the most simple and convenient of life-saving apparatus is a French invention. It is a mattress formed of two rows of blocks of cork cuttings, tightly compressed by machinery within a water-proof case, and covered with canvas. Placed on the berth or cot, it makes an easy and elastic bed. Its weight is about six pounds, and it is so constructed that it can be quickly put about the person, forming a double belt, so attached that it cannot be displaced by the winds or waves.

SABBATH READING.

Not Mine, But Thine.

Thy way, not mine, O Lord,
However dark it be;
E'er lead me by Thine own right hand,
Choose out the path for me.

Smooth let it be or rough,
It will be still the best;
Winding or straight, it matters not,
It leads me to Thy rest.

I dare not choose my lot,
I would not if I might;
But choose Thou for me, O my God,
So I shall walk aright.

The kingdom that I seek
Is Thine; so let the way
That leads to it, O Lord, be Thine,
Else I must surely stray.

Take Thou my cup, and it
With joy or sorrow fill;
As ever best to Thee may seem,
Choose Thou my good and ill.

Choose Thou for me my friends,
My sickness or my health;
Choose Thou my joys and cares for me,
My poverty or wealth.

Not mine, not mine the choice,
In things or great or small;
Be Thou my guide, my guard, my strength,
My wisdom and my all.

Plentiful Blossoms.

[Extract from a Sermon by Rev. Robert Collyer, of Chicago.]

Not many lovers, I suppose, have found that their wedded life answered quite to the dreams of their courtship, but in all the world you will not find a wise man and woman who are not ready to thank God for the good gift of that bloom so divine and good while it lasted, or who will enter a complaint against Heaven because May does not match quite with October. That fine glamour, if I may use my figure again, is like these rains. If they treasure it in their hearts as a real and true experience, it will bear them over many a dry and dusty day, and hold such terms with them that a fair fruitage shall not be wanting when they come to their harvest. But God help those, and save me from wedding them, who cannot let the bloom go for what it was worth, but fret their life out over the banished glory, or poison each other's existence with mutual reproach, or rush into the courts and then try again. It is the lesson we have to learn again through our sad and painful bereavements. Nothing can be more natural or beautiful than the longing we feel that the sweet blossoming of our children about us should and will come to a perfect fruition. But, for the most of us, it cannot be so. The bloom fades and falls on which we have set our hearts—that one peerless blossom, it may be, of our special love and care, because it was so beautiful—and the trouble shakes our soul to the center, and so we sorrow more for those that have gone than we rejoice for those that abide and open to the promise of the summer and the harvest; and it is a long day sometimes before we can thank God for their blooming, and say He did indeed give me these matchless blessings. They could not stay, but they did come, made May for us in their coming, and left the fragrance of May forevermore in our life. Let the tree be my teacher if I will be taught in no diviner way, and nature tell me of Providence if I will not hear the still, small voice.

I stood one June morning at Niagara falls watching the play of the great emerald on his breast as the sun smote it, and the fan bent over the white cloud above. It was a still morning on the earth, and it seemed as if the voice of the Lord was in the water-floods, as when the Psalmist sang in the old days. And then I was aware of the sweet fragrance stealing across the cataracts I had never noticed before in my visits there, and then I saw over in Canada the trees all in bloom—apple-trees in the orchards, and clinging to the cliffs, and bushes of white and crimson gleaming through the green—and it was these that were sending their perfume on the soft winds across the gulf. And so I have thought how these blossoms which just bloom and fall float their fragrance forever across the chasm and through the turmoil of our life and over the bow of our hope, just a bloom and no more, but still a bloom which abides with us while we stay on this side the river, and a fragrance in the life we bear with us when we go. So shall we not thank God when we come to our better mind for the blossoms which fall to so divine a purpose, or shall this human sorrow prevent the vision of the divine glory and my desire blind me to the divine love? I would fain grow great enough before I die to bless Him even for this overplus of blossom, and think of it as the outpouring of His love. I want to grasp a faith which will assure me that He could not find it in His heart to give me only children. He had to slip an angel into my life in this sweet guise. Those I have with me might well anchor me too strongly to the earth; those I have had will draw me toward heaven.

And if I say, finally, what is my hope of a better life to come, when my life here is little better than a broken promise in these things of the soul; also, ten resolutions broken to one kept; the wrecks of undone or half-done duties strewing all the way; the anticipations and hopes of the higher life not what they were at all; my whole spiritual manhood poor and scant in comparison with what I once imagined it might be—if this is my trouble, I will not be overtroubled. The splendid hopes and anticipations of the soul are also beautiful and good as these spring blossoms, though there be but scant fruit from them, after all, in our own estimate. And God knows better than we do what we can bear, and what harsh winds have blown on the blossom, and what things from old years have hidden in the setting fruit and struck it with death, and what striving has gone into the fruit we have at last to our name. I will rest me in the parable of the overplus of blossom, say I am more than many trees; still, I stand within the law of their life, and they within the law of mine. "No pebble at my foot but proves a sphere. No chaffinch but implies a cherubim. Earth is full of heaven, and every common bush afire with God." I will not be troubled. If the acacia on fire with the spring splendor in Midian could so storm one man that it seemed as if God spake, and the fruit of that blossom was the deliverance of a nation, my fair hopes and fine cheer, which may have come to scant fruit as I look at them, were fruit in their own time to men that needed just such an inspiration. So I will not take on trouble as I grow older about the lapse between the blossom and the fruit in the life of my soul, but leave it all to God, and say:

Full well I know I have more tares than wheat,
Brambles and flowers, dry stalks and withered leaves;
Wherefore I weep and blush, as at Thy feet
I kneel down reverently and repeat—
Master, behold my sheaves.

I know these blossoms clustering heavily,
With evening dew upon their folded leaves,
Can claim no value nor utility;
Therefore, let fragrancy and beauty be
The glory of my sheaves.

So shall I gather strength and hope anew,
When once I know Thy patient love perceives,
Not what I did, but what I tried to do;
And though the full, ripe ears be sadly few,
Thou wilt accept my sheaves.

POPULAR SCIENCE.

MR. GESNER, of San Francisco, claims to have discovered a chemical which, with any existing machinery, freezes water with one-fifteenth the pressure necessary when ether or ammonia is used.

A CHICAGO mechanic has invented a simple device for cutting the wire bands of sheaves, which at the same time holds one end so that the wire may be pulled away, thus preventing it from going through the machine, being torn to bits, and taken into the stomachs of stock feeding on the straw.

A WRITER in the London Lancet states that it is a mistake to suppose that there is no danger in the bite or scratch of a cat. There have been abundant and melancholy proofs of the peril of contracting the hydrophobia from cats; and the danger is scarcely less than that which attends an injury inflicted by a dog.

MR. C. O. LUNDBERG, of Chicago, has discovered and perfected a process by which durable colors can be applied to marble in such a way as to be ineffaceable. The discovery renders it practicable to have portraits of friends imbeded in the marble of our center-tables, on the slabs that mark their resting-places in the cemetery, and indeed anywhere and everywhere that taste and affection may suggest or dictate. The discovery is considered a very important one, and a number of artists in that city are arranging to utilize it in their studios.

THERE is a marked similarity between the whitefish of our Western lakes and the ordinary herring. One of each was recently procured of a fish dealer at Detroit, and brought before a meeting of the Fish Commissioners of Michigan. The most of the gentlemen present declined to give an opinion on the matter, but two of them finally made an investigation with a microscope and pronounced their decision. They picked out the herring and declared it was the whitefish. The chief distinction is said to be in the shape of the jaws, the fishes having different methods of feeding.

A COLORED man at Rosedale, Miss., has lately secured a patent for a steam engine which he has invented, and which, if the judgment of many experienced and scientific men to whom he has shown his model is correct, is calculated to revolutionize the present application of steam. The engine is rotary, having the steam applied at the circumference of a wheel, giving this treble the force of ordinary engines, with no diminishing of power at the various stages of the revolution of the wheel. This invention dispenses with all the machinery except the one wheel, which answers at once the purpose of cylinder and driving-wheel, and two steam boxes through which the steam is applied.

THE Chicago Inter Ocean tells how to make a telephone: On the pole or poles of any form of electro-magnet, of which the core consists of a bar, or U-shaped permanent magnet, lay a small disk or sheet of very thin iron or common tin. Inclose the whole in a cardboard cone, the small end of which is open, and is placed in the ear so as to act as a speaking trumpet, to convey the vibrations of the thin sheet of iron or tin, which faces it, to the drum of the ear. This completes one telephone, for one end of the the line, and the other telephone, for the other end of the line, should be made just like it; and the wire which forms the electro-magnet should be of the same diameter and length in one instrument as it is in the other. 2. It is better to have supports of glass.

IT is now generally believed by astronomers that shooting stars or meteorites are fragmentary masses, revolving, like planets, around the sun as a center, which, in their course, approach the earth, and, drawn by its attraction into our atmosphere, are ignited by the heat generated through the resistance offered by the atmosphere. About the 10th of August and the 14th of November in each year the earth plunges into a stream of these bodies, causing the showers of shooting stars which have for many years been noticed. The August meteorites seem to radiate from the constellation Perseus, and those of the November group from Leo. This is owing to the fact that our earth at these times of the year is moving exactly toward the regions of the sky from which the shooting stars seem to dart from every direction.

Morrissey's Occupation.

When Ben: Perley Poore, the compiler of the Congressional Directory, called on John Morrissey for a short sketch of his life, and asked what his profession was, the newly-elected Congressman said, with some bitterness, "Well, I suppose you had better put me down as a faro-dealer." "Oh, you don't mean it," said Maj. Poore. "Can't you give me some other occupation?" "Yes, of course I can," replied Morrissey. "Give me credit for my old trade if you will; call me an iron-molder, for that's what I am if I'm anything." And he appears in the Directory as an iron-molder.

The Curse of Australia.

The terrible drought which has for some time past afflicted almost the whole of Australia is at length breaking up. Sheep and cattle have suffered severely, and, in many instances, owners have lost one-half of their flocks and herds. The want of water is really the curse of Australia; and it seems doubtful whether this can ever be effectually remedied, although large expenditure has been incurred in arrangements for the storage of water in threatened localities. The small land-owners—"free selectors" and "cockatoo farmers," as they are called—have a very hard time of it, unless they chance to be in a singularly-favored district.

THE STOLEN PRESIDENCY.

Specific Charges Made Against Two Prominent Officials—Why Republican Congressmen Oppose an Investigation.

(Washington Cor. New York Sun.)

The situation in the House of Representatives upon the question of ordering an investigation into the frauds by which Hayes was made de facto President is as follows: The Democrats have presented definite and grave charges against two prominent officials, one of them the Secretary of the Treasury, the other Minister to France, both of whom were confessedly the personal representatives of Hayes, and visited Louisiana and Florida in this capacity. The specific allegation against Noyes, Minister to France, is that he represented himself as authorized to speak for Mr. Hayes; that he exhibited letters of introduction from Mr. Hayes, accrediting him as his authorized agent, and that in this capacity he did promise McLin, President of the Florida Returning Board, that he should be rewarded if Hayes became President of the United States, as he could not if the vote of that State was counted for Mr. Tilden. The definite charge against John Sherman is that he conspired with various parties in Louisiana to fraudulently secure the vote of that State to be counted for Hayes, notwithstanding the well-known fact that by the votes in the boxes Tilden had carried it by several thousand majority; that he represented himself as authorized to pledge Mr. Hayes, and actually did guarantee certain persons that they should be rewarded if they stood firm in their engagement to swear falsely to a state of things in several parishes, and thereby give the Returning Board a pretext for rejecting the whole or part of the votes of these parishes. These grave crimes are formally and directly charged in the preamble to the resolution offered by Mr. Potter yesterday. The fourth charge is made by implication that both Sherman and Noyes, as well as the persons in Louisiana and Florida, have been rewarded by Hayes since he became de facto President, thus leaving only one link to be supplied to make Hayes an accessory after the fact, if not before.

It is no secret, and the Republican managers in the House—Garfield, Hale and Foster—are not ignorant of the fact, that there is other and still more startling evidence in the possession of the Democrats. Garfield and Hale were visiting statesmen to Louisiana, and are personally interested in preventing an investigation. They know very well than an inquiry that reaches bottom facts will, perhaps, more than smirch their reputations.

Of course, Garfield and Hale, for personal reasons, do not want an investigation. Of course, the few devoted friends of the fraudulent administration, like Foster, do not want an investigation, because, if it does not drive Hayes out of the White House, it will make him the object of hissing scorn, his name a byword and reproach through all time to come. Hence every parliamentary device was tried, every point of order made, to prevent the question coming before the House as a privileged one. Defeated in this, they next sought to break the force of the damning exposure, which they knew was sure to be made, by offering an amendment to extend the inquiry to Oregon and Mississippi. They would not meet the issue squarely made by the Democrats on their own offer.

The resolution offered by the Democrats was based on new evidence, startling in its nature, and implicating directly, if not Hayes, one of his Cabinet officers and a Minister to the republic of France. The frauds alleged to have been committed with the connivance and assistance of these two distinguished Republicans were potential in placing Hayes in the White House. Moreover, the resolution offered by Mr. Potter was called for by the memorial of the State of Maryland, which prayed for the redress of a grave wrong, done through the conspiracy by which the electoral votes of Florida and Louisiana were counted for Hayes, when in truth and fact they belonged to Tilden. The Democrats could very properly refuse to complicate a plain and specific inquiry with extraneous and non-essential subjects. They, however, plainly declared to the Republican managers that it was not in their purpose to stifle investigation into any other cases of fraud if they would allege new evidence, and show probable cause. They would not ask them to make a prima-facie case by ex-parte affidavits as they had done in relation to Florida, and as they were prepared to do in regard to Louisiana—would not even ask them to state on their honor that they had new evidence, or expected to procure any. If they would allow the resolution in regard to Florida and Louisiana to go through without factious opposition, they could have a committee, select or otherwise, to inquire into any fact that they thought pertinent to the late Presidential election. This offer was rejected, although it was made in good faith. Again, when it became evident that the business of the House must be brought to a stand-still by the filibustering of the Republicans, their managers were asked whether, if Hale was allowed to offer his amendment and have a vote on it, they would then allow a vote on the original proposition, Mr. Potter's resolution. Garfield, Hale, and others on their side refused to make any such agreement, thus showing that their real purpose was to prevent an investigation if they could.

Hale's amendment, or at least the gist of it, has been published. He does not allege a solitary new fact in regard to Oregon or Mississippi. The Oregon matter was twice investigated by the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections. A sub-committee of the Senate went to Oregon and pursued the inquiry until the witnesses on which the Republicans relied to prove corrupt or wrong motives on the part of Grover were proved to be perjurers. So complete was the breakdown of this investigation that the committee never dared to report the evidence it took to the Senate. The telegrams relating to the purchase of a Republican elector in Oregon, and all the others relating to that State or Mississippi, are old, having been brought out in the investigations of 1877. They are merely set out anew by Hale for the purpose of reviving what everybody admits was an ugly piece of scandal. If Mr. Hale or Mr. Garfield will produce one scintilla of new evidence which goes to show that the purpose of the agents of Mr. Tilden was to buy a Republican elector in Oregon to act with Cronin, they will get plenty of votes from the Democratic side to pass their amendment. If there is one thing that a great many Democratic politicians would like to see proven it is the connection of Tilden with some disreputable transaction which would take him out of the list of possible candidates for 1880. If the Republicans will even intimate privately on their honor that they can get such evidence, the caucus decree cannot hold enough Democrats to prevent the adoption of the Hale amendment.

J. R. LANNING, CHAIRMAN
DeKalb Co. Dem Cen. Com.

The Vermont Republicans met in Convention last week and indorsed President Hayes.

The name of Gen. Milo S. Hascall, of Goshen, will be presented to the Republican State Convention as a candidate for Auditor. The fate of the General seems to be to lead a forlorn hope.

The Florida frauds committee has been announced as follows: Messrs. Potter, Morrison, Hunton, Stinger, McMahon, Cobb of Indiana, Blackburn, Cox of Ohio, Reed of Maine and Hiscock.

The New Era at Albion, in speaking of the Potter Committee to investigate the electoral frauds, says, "we tremble for our country." We rather think the trembling is more for the Republican party.

Gov. Williams has very properly commuted the sentence of Wm. Q. Greenly, who was sentenced to be hung at Indianapolis, to imprisonment for life Give Blue Jeans credit for having done one just and noble act.—Kendallville Standard.

And yet the Indianapolis Journal howled because he done so.

The rads, strange to say, fear General Butler more than any other man on the investigating committee, and the reason why is easily understood. Butler evidently knows who the radical scoundrels are that committed the frauds as well as those who aided them, and is not afraid to speak out in meetin'.

Friday is Hayes' and hangman's day On Friday the former was nominated at Cincinnatti; on Friday the electoral bill was passed in Congress; on Friday the Commission got through with the last disputed State; on Friday Hayes was counted in and declared elected, and now on Friday Potter's resolution to inquire into the Florida frauds is adopted.

The beauties of gerrymandering have been illustrated by the Democratic Legislature of Ohio, in re-districting that State. Districts in which the Democrats have majorities aggregating 25,785 will send thirteen representatives to Congress, while Republicans majorities footing up 33,060 will send seven Congressmen.—Warsaw Republican.

Look at home first. The Democrats have 213,562 voters in Indiana, and have four Congressmen, while the Republicans have 208,011 voters, and have nine Congressmen. Clean your own foul nasty nest, before you begin to insinuate about others.

In the last campaign the democracy headed their ticket with a pair of Blue Jeans breeches, and the faithful accepted this as an evidence that there was no "kid glove aristocracy" in the party. This year the head of the party wears lavender breeches, and belongs to the aristocratic circles. Now there is trouble.—Waterloo Press.

Just where the Press gets its information we dont know, doubtless from the Indianapolis Journal. We know that the last time the editor of the Press saw Governor Williams and that was this year he had on the customary blue Jeans, and has worn them at all times since he has been Governor. Just how a lie will do any good in this matter, we can't imagine.

Wanted—By every one who has an intelligent conception of its value Health. Health depends upon the possession of pure blood, and pure blood is the sure possession of those who use Dr. Hull's Blood Mixture, acknowledged as a superior blood purifier. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

Garrett Items.

—Mr. I. Bonnell, formerly freight agent and yard master at this place, has been visiting here for a few days.

—A man who was in the employment of the B. & O. Railroad Co., running the stationery engine at Chicago Junction, committed suicide by hanging himself at that place last Saturday.

—The ladies of the Episcopal church gave a grand strawberry festival last Friday and Saturday evenings at the Chicago House Hall, for the benefit of their highly esteemed pastor, Mr. Trimble. It was well attended each evening and all appeared to enjoy themselves and expressed satisfaction of having a good social time. The proceeds amounted to the nice little sum of $80 clear of all expenses, which speaks well of the respect the people of our town have for a true gentleman.

Mr. Morse has induced a number of good citizens to come to Garrett to live; but Dr. Parker, Washington Cowan, Allen, W. J. Frederick, Geo. P. Van Evern, John Robbins, H. J. Donehoe, and Mr. West (who bought the cattle) and James Skilling, were all earlier settlers than Mr. M. and for whom he is not entitled to the credit?—Garrett Herald.

Thanks. The name of John West is remembered,—he who stole the cattle, instead of going through ceremony of buying them, as the Herald has it above. It reminds us, too, of another fact that this same West was made the standard bearer of the Hayes and Wheeler Club, last campaign, and always went in advance of such leading citizens as Abe Reinoehl, H. S. Morse, and Jack Thompson.

—A terrible accident occurred here last Thursday about twenty minutes before twelve o'clock. Three small boys, Joseph Loth, Chas. Bechler and Wm. Bush, were playing with a torpedo which is used by the railroad men as a signal of danger, when placed on the track. When Chas., a boy of five years old struck the torpedo with the hatchet causing it to explode, which soon called a crowd to the terrible scene. Chas. B. was found lying face downward in a pool of blood, a hole in the center of his forehead about the size of a silver half dollar, out of which the brains protruded in a bulk as large as an egg. Joseph L., eight years old, was struck across the lower part of the nose with a piece of the tin which cut an ugly gash to the bone, about three inches long. Drs Thompson and Sherman were soon in attendance, and on Saturday Dr. Thompson extracted three large pieces of tin from the wound and dressed his face up very neatly, and it is thought Joseph will soon recover. About a a table spoonful of brains was taken from Chas. B., and he now lays in a very low condition, yet there are hopes of his recovery. Wm. Bush, about three years of age, escaped being injured. How the children got the torpedos remains unknown.

—The following disgraceful article appeared in the Garrett Herald last week, which is considered an insult by the best citizens of the town. Will you please give it space that your readers may see what an intelligent editor we have here for the interest of our town: "The person who wrote that tirade of abuse concerning our public school and its management, has no respect for himself or the town he lives in. A true citizen of a town will take pride in its public institutions, and speak a good word for them instead of evil. If the "Courier" correspondent's children came home from school dirty and filthy it was because they went there in that condition. He must learn to know that the Garrett school "don't take in washing." As to the bleeding, etc., that is without foundation. Scholars are not punished unless they deserve it, and any sensible person knows that it is impossible to govern a school without using the rod. Some children will make no attempt to learn, unless whipped into the traces, and then they are about as hard to manage as a mule, and they always show the propensities of that stubborn brute. It is evident from the tone of "Justice's" article, that he was that kind of a student, and was not walloped enough to benefit him, and now he makes an ass of himself to carry the filth, made by himself, for the Auburn "Courier."

Now I wish to state, and can prove that we never interfered with the editor of the Herald in all our correspondence to the COURIER till he commenced it himself He made the first charge against us in the Herald of February 28th, and we can prove this statement. We claim to be a true citizen of the town, and we paid all the debts we ever contracted before we came to Garrett, and can go back with a clean face to any place we have ever lived. We take pride in our town and having honest people come here, but we can not and will not give our voice and support to a public institution which has received the utter condemnation of nine tenths of our best citizens. The children who came home from school dirty and filthy, did not go there in that condition, and the Garrett editor is a liar if he says they did, which can be proven. The children who came home in that condition have respectable parents, who take pride in their children and take proper care of them at home, and O. J. Powell is throwing a direct insult in their face to publish such an article, and should and will be condemned by every respectable citizen who takes a pride in our town. We are aware that the Garrett school don't take in washing, and the Garrett editor must learn that the teachers have no legal right to compell the children to make a privy of the school room. No one can help coming to the conclusion that he was educated in that kind of a stable, among mules, as he appears to be so familiar with their nature. We are a law abiding citizen and have always went in for law and order, but if the Garrett editor thinks we were not walloped enough, he can have the job of finishing up our education, which he thinks was omitted. On the 7th of May a child eight years of age was sent home with her mouth cut and bleeding, marks of violence on her shoulder, inflicted, not with the "rod," but the rule On the 17th of May another child came home with the mark of the same rule over her eye, and has been kept at home since rather than to take chances of having her eye knocked out; her father still paying for this same school. We do not wish to tax your patience, but as the COURIER is the only paper in the county through which we can express our grievance, we must depend on it. Next week we shall give a full and truthful statement of how the school has been managed in Garrett, and be accountable for the same. JUSTICE.

F. H. STEWART, Chairman Com.

Mr. Houser has withdrawn from the Republican, and G. W. Weamer will run it alone. George is an awful nice little fellow, too nice for this wicked world, but he'll get over that now that he is going it alone. He will now advocate strongly an attack on venders who have been licensed by the town to sell on our streets.

The Editorial Association of Northern Indiana will meet at Rome City, on June 13th and 14th. It is hoped that all members will endeavor to get there at least by Thursday evening, so that a full attendance will be realized on Friday. The beauty of the surroundings can be enjoyed by those who arrive earlier, no mean feature in the coming session of editors.

As Ben Baily was driving a spirited team out of town last Tuesday evening, they got the better of him going down the bank near the cemetery, and straddled a board fence below, where they were stopped. Mr. Wm. Beatty, who was in the wagon at the time, with several others were considerably bruised about the head and shoulders, while one or two of the others were slightly injured.

There will be present at the educational re-union of Troy township, Whitley county, June 15th, 1878, (health permitting) one of the oldest teachers (if not the oldest) now living in the State. She was born October 7th, 1780, at Simsburg, Hartford county, Conn. Her life as a teacher began in 1801; she taught in her native State, Massachusetts and New York. With her husbany she emigrated to Indiana in 1839, and located in Troy townsip this county. —Col City Post.

Young man! did you ever stop and reflect how utterly absurd the use of profanity was. It never did nor never can, do any one the least good. No man is richer, or happier, or wiser for it. It commends no one to society; it is disgusting to the refined, and abominable to the good. Why then persist in such an ungentlemanly habit, can you tell?

A few days ago we had the pleasure of meeting Howard Coe, formerly editor of a paper at this place, now connected with the North Manchester Journal. His usual genteel appearance, is greatly enhanced by his entire freedom from dissipation, having been a member of the Red Ribbon Club for nearly two years. Many of his friends here will be glad to hear of his prosperity. His daughter Flora Belle, was married this month to a Mr. Bresler of Michigan.

A Genuine Opera.

The Strakosch Opera Company, will appear at the Rink at Fort Wayne, to-morrow evening. Miss Clara Louise Kellogg the greatest American prima donna, Miss Roze, Tom Karl the great tenor, and Conly the Basso, are among the singers, and we can truly say that this is a grand musical treat that all should enjoy. Train will return at 11 o'clock at half fare rates. Admission to opera, $1.

There is nothing that strikes the eye of the stranger more favorably in passing through a town than the cleanliness of its streets and alleys, and it is not less attractive to the residents of the town. Good housekeepers generally extend their spring cleaning into the streets and everything about the place has a neat and tidy appearance. We notice that some of our alleys are very badly neglected, and are very offensive to sight and smell. A little care and attention given to this matter by each householder would add greatly to the general appearance of the city and wouldn't be detrimental to the health of the inhabitance thereof.

There was some very pretty babies at Pleasant Lake, at the opening, contesting for the prize offered by Major Simmons for the handsomest one present. Four or five of them ought to have had the prize, but as only one was offered, it was a difficult matter to determin which should have it, and the committee had to cast lots to determine. The mother of the winner was offered a thousand dollars for the little darling, but she laughed a laugh of scorn at the offer. Steuben may be proud of her babies, if there are a specimen, though we confess that they are not particularly indebted to their fathers for any of their beauty. That's what you get for giving us an ugly man's cane.

See announcement of the new reaper and binder in another column. While farmers have a right to avail themselves of any new machinery out, we cannot help but deprecate the fact that we are using too much machinery now. This reaper will dispense with the services of five hands, and if generally brought into use, will deprive a great number of laborers of employment, at a time when there has always been a demand for their services. They will be compelled to seek work elsewhere, and thus the great army of tramps is augmented, and want and misery is increased. If the old mode of cutting with cradles was still in existence among small farmers, we believe times would be better, and it would be fully as cheap if repairs, wear and tear, and interest on investment are counted. Machinery can be used to advantage on large farms, where these great improvements can be utilized, by a much more extensive employment. But it has now become fashionable to have machinery about a farm of 100 acres, as would do the work of 500 acres, and four-fifths of its benefits are lost.

Cedar Creek and Butler Center.

—Wheat and oats look good.

—Mr. J. B. Ross has been making extensive improvements in his store by adding new goods and cleaning up generally.

—Our text school at Cedar Creek Hall is becoming quite interesting. We listened to a fine discourse from Thomas Merica last Sabbath, and still there is room for others.

—Mr. Jones is running his saw mill in full blast, with a goodly number of logs on the yard. He is a very shrewd business man and is buying timber of all kinds.

—We visited our friend John Kitchen last Sabbath where we joined in marriage Joseph Persel and Laura Carper, with the usual ceremony, after which we partook of a splendid dinner. We wish them a happy and prosperous journey through life.

—We were glad see our old and esteemed friend, Henry Probst, yesterday who has just returned from the state of Texas where he has been the past six months. We had quite a long conversation with him, and he tells some very interesting stories. He likes some portions of Texas very well.

Corunna Items.

—The Corunna schools are flourishing under the genial management of Miss Imus and Mr. Urie.

The Richland Township Teachers' Institute will be held at Center school house on Friday, May 31, and Saturday, June 1.

—The Band boys are making preparations to assist in the ceremonies of decorating the soldiers' graves at Kendallville, Thursday.

—On last Saturday L. J. Miller treated the juveniles of the town to a ride behind that two forty nag of his, and it was hard telling who most enjoyed the drive, L. J. or juveniles.

—It will pain the many friends of Mrs. Libbie Alling, to learn of her continued illness. Mrs. Alling has been quite ill for the last six months, and at the present time her health is in a precarious situation.

—W. B. Adams, our enterprising hardware and livery man, is enlarging his barn and preparing to do a general livery business, and also give his many friends and customers great bargains in hardware.

—On last Friday evening there was a lively mill over in the south-east part of town between the man of the house and his better half. Although she struck square from the shoulder, she only came out second best.

—By putting this, that and the other together, and making their deductions, the knowing ones have come to the conclusion that some of our young people are about to embark upon the troublesome sea of matrimony, and suppose if things are any ways near right in their conclusions, we will be called upon to offer our congratulations to the new friends.

—Last Saturday was an unusual busy day in Corunna, and our merchants, after the mud blockade and general depression in trade, caused by the stringency of the times, feel like appreciating a good trade. Our grain buyers are paying for wheat, $105; white oats, 26c.; Michigan oats, 25c.; Corn, 30c.; shelled corn, 36c.; wool from 28 to 32c. eggs, 9c.; butter, 8c.; lard, 8c.

FRANCIS.

Doctors are to guard human life and bring relief to the sick. So does Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup. It contains nothing injurious and is always reliable. To be had at F. E. Davenport's Drug store. Price 25 cents.

St. Joe Items.

—N. Cron, of Piqua, Ohio, is visiting friends in this vicinity.

—Brother John has a pair of boarders and is as happy as a big sun flower.

—Oh! for a row of some kind so we could have something to write about.

—Mr. Lewis and lady, of Auburn, paid O. H. Widney a visit Sunday last.

—Geo. W. Wilmot, who formerly resided at this place, has moved farther south expecting to find warmer weather.

—Viola Yarnell, who has been absent at school for some time, is expected home this week. Charley is waiting and watching.

—Jim, our pump man, skipped out of town Thursday morning and leaves Chris to mourn his loss. Dry your tears Chris for James has gone where the woodbine twineth.

—O. H. says, "be it known by all machine agents that he has purchased, and will not be at home when the next one calls." Please take notice.

—Capt. Ed. White leads the "None Such" base ball club of St. Joe on to victory. If business permits the club expects to tour over the county and play any of the school boys who come in their way.

—The "Clod Hoppers," of Coburn Town, scooped the Newvillians in a game of base ball at Newville Saturday the tune of 15 to 9, winning a ball and bat.

—Charles N. Thomas, of Newville, passed through this place Monday on his way to Indianapolis to attend the Grand Lodge of F. & A. M., represent ing Wm. Hacker Lodge No. 326.

DUNOC.

Pyle's School House, No. 6.

—Corn planting all done and we are preparing to go a fishing.

—Squire Willson has friends visiting him from eastern and central Ohio.

—Mrs. John Pyle is quite sick, and has been under the doctors care for some time.

—We intend at some future time to give a brief sketch of our Sabbath School, its officers, &c.

—Rev. Tedrow delivered quite an able sermon here last Sabbath at his usual hour, to an appreciative audience.

—We are gratified to learn that Miss Sue Hornberger is again able to proceed with her school. She has had a very severe attack of sore throat.

—Mrs. Belinda Metcalf had the misfortune to loose one of her cows, and her friends went manfully to work and raised money to buy her another. The widow has one consolation, she knows where her friends are.

—We are informed that James Pyle and John Brown contemplate purchasing a new steam threshing machine. They will be the right boys in the right place, and we wish them every success in the enterprise.

S. S. S.

A splendid new side-walk has just been put down on seventh street in front of the business houses on the old Fluke property.

Spencerville Items.

—Fishing in the St. Joe has been good this spring.

—Mrs. J. A. Provines has been quite sick for about ten days.

—Mr. Jack Kagey will remove to Ashland, Ohio, in a few weeks.

—The whooping cough has been prevailing extensively in this community for several weeks past.

—Rev. Errick has been absent the past week in attendance at the Sabbath School Convention at Fish Lake.

—M. T. Bishop returned Friday last from the late session of the Grand Lodge I. O. O. F., and reports a very pleasant time.

—A new saloon (drug store) has been opened up in our town. The principal medicine so far has been beer and seven year old whisky.

—A gentleman from Butler has opened a barber shop in Dr. Emanuel's building. As he seems to understand his business, we hope our citizens will bestow a liberal patronage.

—The Victory Churn, an invention of Mr. Samuel Bear, is creating quite a sensation in this community, and extensive arrangements are being made for its manufacture, at this place.

TELEMACHUS VS. MENTOR.

BY BRET HARTE.

Don't mind me, I beg you, old fellow, I'll do very well here alone;
You must not be kept from your "German" because I've dropped in like a stone;
Leave all ceremony behind you, leave all thought of aught but yourself,
And leave, if you like, the Madeira, and a dozen cigars on the shelf.

As for me, you will say to our hostess— Well, I scarcely need give you a cue.
Chant my praise! All will list to Apollo, though Mercury pipe to a few;
Say just what you please, my dear boy; there's more eloquence lies in youth's rash
Outspoken heart-impulse than ever growled under this grizzling mustache.

Go, don the dress-coat of our tyrant—youth's panoplied armor for fight—
And tie the white neckcloth that rumples, like pleasure, and lasts but a night,
And pray the Nine Gods to avert you what time the Three Sisters shall frown,
And you'll lose your high-comedy figure, and sit more at ease in your gown.

He's off! There's his foot on the staircase. By Jove, what a bound! Really now
Did I ever leap like this springald, with Love's chaplet green on my brow?
Was I such an ass? No, I fancy. Indeed, I remember quite plain;
A gravity mixed with my transports, a cheerfulness softened my pain.

He's gone! There's the slam of his cab door, there's the clatter of hoofs and the wheels,
And while he the light toe is tripping, in this armchair I'll tilt up my heels.
He's gone, and for what? For a tremor from a waist like a teetotum spun;
For a rose-bud that's crumpled by many before it is gathered by one.

Is there naught in the halo of youth but the glow of a passionate race—
'Midst the cheers and applause of a crowd—to the goal of a beautiful face?
A race that is not to the swift, a prize that no merits enforce,
But is won by some fainéant youth who shall simply walk over the course?

Poor boy! shall I shock his conceit? When he talks of her cheek's loveliness,
Shall I say 'twas the air of the room, and was due to carbonic excess?
That, when waltzing she drooped on his breast, and the veins of her eyelids grew dim,
'Twas oxygen's absence she felt, but never the presence of him?

Shall I tell him First Love is a fraud, a weakling that's strangled in birth,
Recalled with perfunctory tears, but lost in unsanctified mirth?
Or shall I go bid him believe in all womankind's charms, and forget
In the light ringing laugh of the world the rattlesnake's gay castanet?

Shall I tear out a leaf from my heart, from the book that forever is shut
On the past? Shall I speak of my first love—Augusta—my Lalage? But I forget. Was it really Augusta? No. 'Twas Lucy! No, Mary! No, Di!
Never mind, they were all first, and faithless, and yet—I've forgotten just why.

No, no. Let him dream on and ever. Alas! he will waken too soon;
And it doesn't look well for October to always be preaching at June.
Poor boy! All his fond foolish trophies pinned yonder—a bow, from her hair,
A few billets-doux, invitations, and—what's this? My name! I declare.

Humph! "You'll come, for I've got you a prize, with beauty and money no end:
You know her, I think; 'twas on dit she once was engaged to your friend;
But she says that's all over." Ah, is it? Sweet Ethel! Incomparable maid!
Or—what if the thing were a trick?—this letter so freely displayed—

My opportune presence! No! nonsense! Will nobody answer the bell?
Call a cab! Half past ten! Not too late yet. Oh, Ethel! Why don't you go? Well?
"Master said you would wait—" Hang your master! "Have I ever a message to send?"
Yes, tell him I've gone to the German to dance with the friend of his friend.

ROBERT BRAMLEIGH'S WILL.

It had been a busy day with me. I had been working hard getting up evidence in a railway-accident case, and was putting up my papers with a sigh of relief. Another forty minutes and I should be at home. I could almost smell the boiled capon and oyster sauce which I knew were being prepared for me. "There's many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip," says the proverb; and in my case it proved only too true; for, just as I was tying up the last bundle of papers, the office boy put his head in at the door and dispelled the tempting vision.

"A woman to see you, if you please, sir. She won't give no name. Says she's a stranger."

"A stranger!" I repeated. "What is she like? Is she a common person?"

"Not exactly, sir," replied the lad.

"A lady?" I asked.

"Oh, no, sir."

"What is she, then?"

Arthur was a droll lad. I had brought him to London from the country, to oblige an old college friend. I am afraid that he was not of much use in the office, but he used to keep the other clerks in a good temper by his amusing ways and dry remarks.

Arthur paused, as if considering, and then, with a look of intelligence, as much as to say that he had hit the nail on the head this time, he answered: "Well, sir, she's a sort of betwixt and between."

"Not a bad definition, Arthur. Ask the 'betwixt and between' up-stairs."

A tall, middle-aged woman entered and took the seat I placed for her.

My visitor removed her gloves, and, carefully smoothing them, placed them on the table beside her. She then produced from her pocket a large foolscap envelope, from which she drew a piece of paper folded longways. This she handed to me, explaining, in a hard, monotonous voice, that she had been sent to me by her master, Mr. Robert Bramleigh, of Coleman street, who was dangerously ill—in fact, was not expected to live many hours. The paper, she said, had been written by his direction, and signed by him for his will that afternoon. Fearing lest it should not be in a proper form, he had desired her to take it to the nearest lawyer and have one prepared according to the law.

I unfolded the paper and read as follows:

> In the name of God, Amen. I leave my body to the ground and my soul to Almighty God who gave it. Now this is the will of me, Robert Bramleigh, of 559 Coleman street. I give and leave all my houses, lands, money, and everything that I have, to Hannah Churton, my housekeeper, as a reward for her long and faithful services. Signed by me on Tuesday, Dec. 12, 1868. ROBERT BRAMLEIGH.
>
> Witnesses—James Burn, Margaret Sims.

I examined the writing carefully. The signature, "Robert Bramleigh," was weak and shaky. The will itself was written in a masculine-looking hand of singular decision and boldness. The characters were large and well formed.

The will had evidently been prepared by some one who had but an imperfect knowledge of the form to be used for such a purpose. The solemn appeal to the Deity and the bequest of the testator's body and soul was an old form, much in vogue with our grandfathers, who generally headed a will with one or two pious phrases.

The document shown to me was, however, sufficient to give Hannah Churton all of Mr. Bramleigh's property. There were the requisite number of witnesses, and the Principal Registry of Her Majesty's Court of Probate would have granted letters of administration with the will annexed (the appointment of an executor having been omitted, the ordinary probate could not have been obtained), on one of the attesting witnesses making affidavit that the will had been executed by the testator in the presence of himself and the other attesting witness, and that they had at the same time and in the presence of each other subscribed their names thereto as witnesses.

Now, I am always very particular about wills; I think they are too serious to be settled in a hurry. I never will allow a client to execute one until I am convinced that its purport is perfectly understood.

"You are Mrs. Churton, I presume?" I asked.

"I am," she replied, looking me unflinchingly in the face. Somehow I felt suspicious that things were not so fair as they should be. I questioned her rather closely, but the only admission I obtained from her was that she had written the will, but that it was at her master's dictation. I offered to prepare a more formal document; but before doing so I declared that it was necessary I should see Mr. Bramleigh. I named the omission of the appointment of an executor. This seemed rather to nonplus her. She asked whether she could not be named as executrix. The more aversion she showed to my seeing her master the more convinced I felt that something was wrong; and, seeing that I was not to be moved from my purpose, she at last gave in; proposing, however, that I should accompany her back, as she greatly feared it would be too late if left till the morning.

A cab soon took us to No. 559 Coleman street. It was a large, gloomy, old-fashioned house, with a spacious entrance hall. I was taken into the dining-room, and asked to wait while Mr. Bramleigh was being prepared for my visit. The furniture in the room was old and very massive. Some handsome oil paintings graced the walls. I am very fond of pictures, so, raising the lamp, I walked round the room slowly inspecting them. On the right of the fireplace I came upon a picture with its face turned toward the wall. I turned the picture. It was the portrait in oils of a young and very beautiful girl in a dark riding-habit. Hearing footsteps outside the door, I restored the picture to the position in which I found it, and, as I did so, I saw written at the bottom of the frame, "Magdalen Bramleigh."

The footsteps I heard were those of the housemaid, who had come to announce that Mr. Bramleigh was ready to see me. I followed her up-stairs, and was ushered into a large, comfortable-looking bedroom. A cheerful fire burned in the grate. Facing it was a large four-post bedstead, hung with white curtains, and at the head of the bed Mrs. Churton was sitting, with a small table in front of her, on which were placed an inkstand and some paper. She pulled back the curtain, and I saw an old man propped up by pillows, his face drawn, and the eyes very much sunk. I almost feared that he was too far gone to make a will; but after speaking with him for a little time I felt satisfied that the intellect was quite clear.

Turning to Mrs. Churton I told her that she need not wait; I would ring if I wanted anything.

"Yes, go—go, Hannah!" cried the sick man, and I fancied that I could detect an eagerness in his voice, as if he desired her absence rather than her presence. As Mrs. Churton left the room I caught sight of the reflection of her face in the glass over the chimney-piece, and I do not think she would have scowled quite as much had she known that I was looking. I began by asking Mr. Bramleigh what were his wishes with regard to his will. In low tones he told me that he desired to leave everything to Hannah Churton, his housekeeper, as a reward for her long and faithful services.

I spoke gravely to the old man, although without much hopes of success, but at last I got him to confess that he had had no intention of making his housekeeper his sole heiress until she had herself broached the subject to him. She certainly must have had great power over the old man to induce him to agree to such a scheme. I proposed to Mr. Bramleigh that he should leave his property to some one on whom he could rely, in trust for his daughter. I also volunteered, although I have an aversion to the trouble and responsibility of a trusteeship, my services as trustee for this purpose. My arguments prevailed. He assented, and I prepared a will accordingly, the old man requesting that his medical man, Dr. Ramsey, should be nominated as my co-trustee, and that an annuity of £50 should be paid to Hannah Churton for life.

I read the will to him very carefully, explaining as I did so its full effect. When I had finished he muttered, "Quite right—quite right; but I am afraid Hannah will not be pleased." I counseled him not to mention it to her; and my advice seemed to satisfy him.

Ringing the bell, I requested Mrs. Churton to summon James Burn and Margaret Sims, the two servants who had witnessed the first will. As soon as they were in the room, I gave Mr. Bramleigh a pen, and, placing the document before him, I said distinctly, so all might hear: "This which I have just read to you is your final will, and you request James Burn and Margaret Sims to witness your execution of it?" "It is—I do," he solemnly said, as with feeble fingers he wrote his name. The two awe-stricken domestics then added theirs, and I think their hands shook more than the testator's. Hannah Churton was a silent spectator of the whole of this; but I could not see her face, as she stood in the background, out of the light of the lamp.

Before allowing any one to leave the room, I placed the will in a large envelope. Fastening it with wax, I impressed it with Mr. Bramleigh's monogram and crest by means of a seal that was on the tray of the inkstand. The old man watched me closely, and, when I had finished, he said: "Keep it—till it is wanted;" thus relieving me of a great embarrassment, for I did not like leaving it in the power of Hannah Churton, lest she should tamper with it.

On our way down stairs Dr. Ramsey told me that his patient was rapidly sinking, and that he doubted whether he would live another twenty-four hours.

Taking him into the dining-room and shutting the door, I told him of my suspicions of the housekeeper, and that I felt afraid of leaving Mr. Bramleigh alone with her all night. He agreed with me, and promised to send his assistant to watch till the morning, when, if Mr. Bramleigh should still be living, he would on his own responsibility place a trustworthy nurse in charge. The house keeper opened the door to let us out.

"It is all right, Mrs. Churton," I maliciously said, as the doctor wished her good-night. "I am quite satisfied now. The will will be in my keeping. By-the-by," I added, looking her sharply in the face, "had you not better let your master's friends know of the danger he is in? Dr. Ramsey says he does not think he will last much longer."

She mumbled something in reply, but I could not catch what it was. I stayed talking upon indifferent subjects, to while away the time until the arrival of Dr. Ramsey's assistant. Mrs. Churton, however, was, unlike her sex, remarkably reticent; I could only get the shortest replies from her. She seemed very much astonished and rather displeased when Dr. Ramsey returned with his assistant. He explained to her that, although there was no chance of saving her patient's life, yet his last moments might be alleviated by skilled attendance, and, therefore, as he himself could not stay all night, he had brought his assistant for that purpose.

In one's experience of mankind we find that it is possible to be sometimes too clever. Mrs. Hannah Churton was very clever, but she committed two very great mistakes. The first was in consulting a lawyer. The will drawn by her—for so it really had been—might have been upset on the ground of undue influence. I say "might have been," for there is nothing so hard to prove as undue influence. The great point against her was the ousting of a child in favor of a stranger.

Mistake No. 2 was as follows: The doctor had gone up-stairs to install his assistant, leaving me standing in the hall with the housekeeper. Fumbling in her pocket she pulled out a roll of bank-notes; thrusting these into my hands, she told me that it was her master's wish that I should take them for my trouble. I unrolled them, and found two for £10 and one for £5. Twenty-five pounds!

A long legal experience has taught me that in all dealings with doubtful people one's safety lies in having a good witness. I waited till the doctor came down stairs, occupying myself by entering the numbers of the notes in my pocket-book.

"Look, doctor," I cried, as he appeared, showing him the notes. "Mr. Bramleigh is a liberal paymaster." Turning to Mrs. Churton, I said: "This will amply repay me."

Retaining the note for £5, I returned her the other two. She took them from me without saying a word, but a black look came over her face. I think she began to suspect me. I got home very late that night. The capon was more than done, and so was the oyster sauce!

Mr. Bramleigh died the next morning at 10 o'clock. Soon after I had left he became unconscious, in which state he remained till shortly before his death, when there was a rally. Opening his eyes with an eager look, as if he missed something, he threw one arm outside the coverlet, and crying "Magdalen, Magdalen!" he obeyed the summons which bade him thole his assize—yea, in that dread court where "not proven" is unknown. Guilty or not guilty? Who shall say?

The funeral took place on the Saturday, but an engagement prevented me from following. Mrs. Churton had written, requesting that I would attend with the will, which still remained in my possession, with the one drawn by her.

I arrived at the house a little after 1 o'clock, and was at once taken into the dining-room, where I found Dr. Ramsey, Mr. Robson (a brother practitioner), and a handsome young fellow, who was introduced to me as Lieut. Maitland, the late Mr. Bramleigh's son-in-law.

The door opened and a young lady entered. It did not require any introduction to tell me that she was the original of the portrait, still with its front turned toward the wall. Her face was very beautiful, notwithstanding its extreme paleness and the tear-swollen eyelids. She seated herself by the fire, her husband standing behind her, leaning his arms on the back of the chair.

Mrs. Churton had closely followed Magdalen Maitland into the room. She was dressed in deep mourning and wore a black crape cap, thus offering a marked contrast to Mrs. Maitland, who was wearing a gray dress rather travel-soiled. Apparently she had no time to prepare her mourning.

Dr. Ramsey politely pulled forward a chair for the housekeeper. Taking it from him with a cold "Thank you," she placed it at the end of the table, directly facing me. Very stern and forbidding she looked in her black garments—her features immovable, her hands resting on her knees.

I was about to unseal the envelope containing the will when Lieut. Maitland interrupted me.

"One moment, if you please," he said, placing his hand on my arm. "Before this will is read I wish to say a few words. Mrs. Churton tells me that Mr. Bramleigh has left her everything unconditionally. I simply wish to express my firm belief that Mr. Bramleigh could only have been induced to make such a will by unfair and foul means. Although I have been the cause of an estrangement between father and daughter, I cannot think that he could so far forget his love for her as to strip her of everything. It is my intention, for her sake, to contest this will; and it is with this view that I have requested my old friend, Mr. Robson, to be present to-day as my legal adviser."

His frank, manly face was flushed with honest excitement as, leaning over the back of his wife's chair, he took her face between his hands and kissed it. "For your sake—not mine, dearest," I heard him whisper.

I read the will slowly and distinctly. It was very short. Save one annuity of £50 to Hannah Churton for life, everything was left to Dr. Ramsey and myself, in trust for Magdalen Maitland, to be settled on her as we in our discretion should think fit.

Astonishment is a mild word to express the feelings of those present, nor will I attempt to do so. My tale lies with Hannah Churton. Starting to her feet, she pushed the chair from her, and, stretching out one arm, gave utterance to a fierce torrent of invective. The veil was lifted, and the native coarseness of the woman's nature stood revealed. It was as I had feared. Unmindful of the bounty of but too generous a master, she heaped obloquy on his memory, and fearlessly asserted that she had wasted the best years of her life in his service.

Magdalen Maitland covered her ears with her hands, to shut out the hard words. Her husband led her toward the door, but Hannah Churton intercepted them. Tearing her cap from her head, she threw it on the ground before the frightened girl.

"Trample on it!" she cried, in a frenzied voice. "Your father's victim has no right to wear it!" I must admit that she looked grandly tragic as she declaimed these fiery words. I felt half sorry for the poor, defeated creature.

Nine years have passed since then, and Mrs. Maitland declares that there are "silver threads among the gold." The cares of a young family have somewhat marred her good looks, but they will live again in my little god-daughter Magdalen, who promises to rival her mother in beauty.

A Prussian Duel.

A Captain in the Sixty-fourth Prussian regiment had been paying attention to the young wife of the Adjutant of the regiment, and had allowed himself to speak publicly in a cynical manner of his intimacy with her. The remarks having been repeated by his brother officers to the husband, the latter laid the matter before the Court of Honor of his regiment, and, with the sanction of this tribunal, a duel between the officers was arranged. The Lieutenant, being the challenger, demanded that the duel should be fought with pistols; the first shots to be fired at fifteen paces' distance, the opponents then being at liberty to advance to within five paces of one another and the firing to be continued until one or other of the opponents should be so severely wounded as to be unable to fire any longer. The meeting took place in an open space in a wood near the town. At the first exchange of shots the bullet of the Lieutenant grazed but did not seriously injure the Captain; and, at the fourth round, the latter shot his adversary through the right lung and heart. The corpse of the Lieutenant was taken to Angermunde, where the usual inquest was held, and thence to Prenzlau, where the deceased officer, who was only 29 years of age, was buried with military honors. In an order published by the commander of the regiment it was announced that Lieut. W. had died suddenly and blamelessly.

Stammering.

The Paris Debats publishes some curious statistics of stammering in France. Of 2,086,826 conscripts examined in twenty years, from 1850 to 1869, there were 13,215 exemptions on account of this defect. There were about 700 per annum before the new recruiting law, and they have reached 1,000 since the whole force has been subjected to examination. It is calculated that stammering affects 125 per 130,000 persons in France. It is more common in the South than in the North, reaching, for instance, the proportion of more than fifteen per 1,000 conscripts in the Basses Alps and Bouches du Rhone; while in the Department of the Haut Rhin the proportion is only .63 per 1,000. This difference is attributed to education being more widespread and the pronunciation more attended to in the North than in the South of France. It is pointed out that, as long as exemption from military service is accorded on account of the defect, there will be little desire on the part of parents to get their children cured of it. In a recent report to the Minister of Public Instruction, M. Chervin dwells on the necessity of abolishing this exemption on account of a deficiency he considers to be curable my merely obliging children to pronounce rationally.

The New Apportionment of Ohio.

The Columbus correspondent of the Chicago Times says: There has been considerable discussion over Ohio as to the political status of the Congressional apportionment. Taking the districts as fixed by the new law gives thirteen Democratic and seven Republican districts, figuring upon the last Presidential vote as a basis. The majorities in the districts on that basis were as follows:

Mr. Schleicher's Bond Bill.

Representative Schleicher, of Texas, has introduced a bill in Congress which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue in sums not exceeding in the aggregate $40,000,000 coupon or registered perpetual bonds, redeemable only by purchase in the open market, interest payable semi-annually in coin of the present standard value, at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, their proceeds to be applied solely to the purpose of erecting public buildings for the use of the Government. The bill appropriates for public buildings at Atlanta, Ga., $100,000; Chicago, $1,500,000; Cincinnati, $3,250,000; Evansville, $30,000; Grand Rapids, Mich., $50,000; Little Rock, $150,000; Memphis, $400,000; Nashville, $250,000; St. Louis, $1,600,000; State, War, and Navy Department buildings, Washington, $5,000,000. The bill also makes provision for the extension of the Library of Congress, and an appropriation of $400,000 for a building for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

APPALLING SHIPWRECKS.

A Storm in the Bay of Biscay Drowns Three Hundred and Twenty Fishermen.

A Madrid correspondent of the London Daily News furnishes the following particulars of the terrible disaster in the Bay of Biscay, brief mention of which has been heretofore made:

"It was holy week, and for several days the fishing boats had not left their ports. The nets had been hung out to dry, and the men loitered about to look on at the quaint processions of Good Friday. The weather had been very fine during the earlier part of the week, and on Saturday the sun rose gloriously on a quiet sea. Accordingly, before 8 o'clock, the sails of the fishermen of Biscay studded the horizon. By midday the breeze shifted to the northeast, and a line of clouds appeared far away in the horizon. The sea rose very fast, and the waves increased on the sands. Gulls and other birds began to sweep along the surface of the water with their peculiar cry. The sky grew overcast rapidly, and then the fierce 'noroeste,' the northwester of Basque ballads, began to howl and rage in a manner which made the bravest hearts quake. People gathered on the piers and on the rocks to gaze at the approaching squall, which came on with rain, hail and sleet, hiding the sea from view and driving all to their homes.

"When the squall was over, crowds of women and children flocked around the dismayed authorities, and despairingly complained of the post Captain having allowed the boats to leave. In vain did the officials protest that they had no reason to suppose that the beautiful morning would end in a squall. In vain did they say that they had no power to prevent the men going on their expedition. Heart-rending cries were heard, and still no news came, until it was reported that, on some beach, three shipwrecked boys had been found. Then planks and baskets washed in, and larger vessels who had weathered the storm brought in the dismal tale. The evening waned, and some boats more fortunate came in, only to increase the agony of the bereaved with certain details of the destruction of their comrades. Santander had lost seven large boats and five smaller ones, with sixty-seven men and lads. Other places in the same province had, during the night, reported about twenty-five boats lost, with crews varying from four to eleven hands. Biscay, however, had suffered most, and the excitement in Bilbao was intense on Sunday, as telegram after telegram came in from the Alcaldes on the coast. Off Cape Machichaco, well known to all vessels entering the Bilbao river, the squall had been most violent. Elanchovi, with 300 inhabitants, lost fifty-nine men and eight boats; Lequietio, Deva, Ondorroa and Piendia each lost three smacks. At the head of the casualty list stands Bermeo, the picturesque and lovely little town situated near the cape; 106 of its fishermen perished in fifteen boats. The Alcalde of the place telegraphs that the misery and grief of the wretched families are terrible. More than forty widows and 200 children, in a town of 1,800 inhabitants, are mourning this great calamity. Details have not yet been received from Asturias and the Galician coast. The official telegrams report a total loss, up to yesterday, of 320 men and boys in about ninety boats of different sizes."

The Influence of the Moon on Crops.

A correspondent of a New York paper was planting potatoes on the increase of the moon, or in the light of the moon; several of his neighbors were present and a discussion arose as to the effect the moon had on different crops. Answering its correspondent's inquiry, the paper says: There has been always a powerful superstition that the moon exerted a great influence upon the affairs of mankind, but this idea has prevailed chiefly among those who did not understand the utter impossibility that the moon could exert any such influences. Formerly the stars were supposed to assist the moon in these interferences with mankind and their labors, and to be able to "read the stars" was equivalent to the possession of prophetic powers. Now the stars have lost this reputation, and the moon is in a fair way to lose what little is left to it. Formerly crazy people were "moon-struck," but now, when we see a lunatic (derived from Luna, the moon, and really meaning moon-struck), we do not blame the moon for it. The moon has now fallen so low as to be supposed by some to influence only the twining of beans on the poles, the planting of seeds, the wasting of fat pork in the pan, unless it was killed under a growing moon, and the making of soft soap. To a reasonable person this seems a small business for the moon to be engaged in, or a very unlikely thing that the moon can exert any such influences. If the test is made it will be found that there is not the least difference in the growth of crops, the spending of fat pork, the successful making of soft soap, or any other of our common labors from the moon influence. If any difference occurs it will be from other causes, such as soil, weather, etc. Lastly, it is absolutely certain that the moon's influence on our atmosphere is so very small that it cannot even affect the weather in the least.

Wise and Bynum.

The Boston Journal's Washington correspondent recalls that at a night session in Congress away back in 1836 a member called Henry A. Wise to order, saying, "Though the gentleman from Virginia is a bully, he shall not bully me." "I bully that gentleman!" exclaimed Wise. "I would as soon think of bullying a fly." "You are a scoundrel, sir," retorted Bynum. "You are a — rascal and an impertinent puppy!" screamed Wise, and they made for each other. Other members got between them, and in half an hour the belligerents had shaken hands.

A Charitable Mule.

St. Louis has an animal known as Honig's mule, which is sold about six times a day on an average. The purchaser is never able to get him more than two or three squares away from the market before he falls down. He then sells him back to one of the cappers, who has followed his trail, for half what he paid for him, and the mule is coaxed back to the market to be sold over again. The mule keeps a good many St. Louis families from starving.

SWEET SEVENTEEN.

BY HERBERT BENTLEY FREEMAN.

How light her fairy footsteps fall!
The garden gate she gently closes,
And wanders by the blossomed wall,
While June makes mirth among the roses.

The burnished braids that bind her head,
With careless ribbon loosely holden—
Her friend Louisa calls them red,
Louisa's brother says they're golden.

Unschooled in the maturer arts
Of picking all her friends to pieces,
Nor skilled to chain her lovers' hearts
With witchery of love's caprices;

Lips that would scorn the truth to hide,
A laugh that's silvery and hearty,
The angel of the poor, the pride
Of every jolly Christmas party.

To flirt with poor old Colonel Chance,
And wing his heart with glances haughty
Between the pauses of the dance—
It's nice—but oh, it's very naughty!

Then outwards when her waltz is done,
For fear mamma should scent the treason
Poor innocent! condemned to run
The gauntlet of a city season.

She dreams all loves beneath the moon
Are equal parts of truth and honey;
Leave her alone—she'll learn too soon
That love's another name for money.

Where is the nameless grace of old,
The spotless soul, the pure compassion
Alas! is all the virgin gold
Untarnished by the dust of fashion?

And she, a city season's belle,
Of slaves and suitors she'll have plenty,
And marry, if her world goes well,
A rich old widower when she's twenty.

Gen. Dakin.

The late Gen. Thomas S. Dakin, of Brooklyn, N. Y., was the only one of our distinguished riflemen who had shot in every international contest. It is said of him, that at the time of his death he stood at the head of the marksmen of the world. The General had enjoyed unusually good health, and said to a friend, the evening before his death, that he had the headache for the first time in his life. Death was caused, according to the report of the physician, by neuralgia of the heart and paralysis.

ALL ABOUT WEDDING FEES.

Clergymen Who Receive as Much as $2,000 a Year for Tying the Nuptial Knot.

[From the New York Sun.]

In New York, where marriages form a very important part of the clergy's functions, wedding fees are looked after with especial solicitude. If a clergyman be popular, genial and of good social standing, his fees often form a large item of his income. The cream of the marriages in high life usually falls to the share of the Protestant Episcopal and Presbyterian ministers, since those two denominations embrace the wealthiest part of the church-going community. The Episcopal marriage service, with its ring accompaniment, fine music and poetic and historic attractions, is generally preferred by those who desire to be wedded in style, and to start in life under fashionable auspices. The rectors of this denomination's hundred or more churches probably reap a larger revenue in this respect than those of any other denomination, with one possible exception. Fees of $20, $50 and $100 are not uncommon, while on occasions when the Bishop or some other dignitary of the church is called in they reach $500. In the poorer parishes of the East and West Sides the amount shrinks to $7, $5 and even $2. As a rule well-to-do Episcopalians pay larger fees than others.

Next to the Episcopalians in this respect come the Catholics. Strictly speaking, priests are forbidden to take money for such services—that is, they are requested not to sell the sacraments—but custom sanctions a gratuity or offering, the size of which is according to the ability of the giver. As a class Catholics are more prompt and liberal than the average Protestants. Ten dollars is the sum ordinarily given. Even poor mechanics pay as high as $5. Where the parties are evidently too poor to meet such an expense, the priest often declines taking anything. After the Catholics are Methodists, Baptists, Congregationalists, and other Protestant denominations in the order of their numbers and wealth. Fees of $5, $10 and $20 are those most commonly given, the latter being the limit usually reached by the well-to-do but not wealthy class.

Hebrews contribute liberally, and a Rabbi with an average congregation rarely gets less than $10 or $20, and often $50, $100 and $250.

The largest fees are paid in the district bounded on the east by Fourth avenue, on the south by Fourteenth street, on the west by Sixth avenue, and on the north by Central Park. In this narrow strip, more than two miles long by a third of a mile wide, a fee of $50 is considered ordinary, and one of $100 from "fair to middling." In weddings attended with great eclat the amount sometimes reaches $500, though this is usually only when a Bishop or Cardinal is called in.

The wealthy dwellers about Gramercy Park are very good payers, as are those on Second avenue, from Eighth street to Twentieth, while the long and solid blocks of brown-stone about Stuyvesant Square are highly remunerative to the neighboring pastors.

More fees are paid on the East Side than on the West Side, and more north of Fourteenth street than south of it. It is a little singular that the proportionate size of the fee decreases on an average ratio with the wealth of the contracting parties. Thus, a man with $10,000 would rarely think of tendering less than $10, while a man worth $500,000 would consider $100 ample. A clergyman of twenty years' experience thinks that 1 per cent. of the groom's income would be a fair amount. A man in receipt of $1,000 per year is willing to pay $10, but one with five times as much would decidedly object to giving $50.

Wedding fees in Protestant churches are usually considered the perquisites of the pastor's wife. Ladies whose pin money from this source aggregates from $500 to $1,500 a year are to be found scattered over the magic parallelogram on either side of Fifth avenue. Some are said to enjoy as high as $2,000 or $2,500 from this source. In the days of Mr. Beecher's popularity in Brooklyn, his wedding fees are said to have been over $3,000 a year. If the pastor is unmarried he usually puts the money into books. Many a fine library has been accumulated in this way. One Episcopal rector, with a large congregation, contributes the amount of his wedding fees toward paying the funeral expenses of his more-needy parishioners.

A Printer's Case.

"You are a printer?" said Scully, as a rather good-looking young man was run from the bull-pen into the shoot at the West Side Court.

"Yes, sir."

"This is your first 'case?'"

"It's the first time I ever worked at a 'case' in this alley."

"Did you get drunk?"

"The 'boys' 'set' it up and gave me the 'string.'"

"I don't fathom your remark," said his Honor, putting one hand up to his ear and bending forward.

"They 'proved' the 'matter,' and then left me on the 'stone' for 'dead.'"

"Impossible! Dead! Deserted you in the snow-drifts! Or did I get the right glimpse of what you are trying to show?"

"I will 'correct' it myself, with your permission."

"Do so; go on."

"I was soon 'alive,' and when I was 'shoved over' I was 'standing.'"

"Young man, you narrate in parables. Can't you elucidate?"

"I will try, Judge. They put a good 'heading' on me, and gave me a prominent place at the head of the 'column'——"

"Young man, you are getting the court muddled. Come to the point."

"There's where I came to at last—a full stop. They 'locked me up'——"

"Yes, now I understand."

"And planed me down with a mallet——"

"Now I don't. You won't stick to the rule——"

"If I had stuck to the rule the 'stick' would have saved me."

"I don't get onto that."

"Neither did I. It was I who got off."

"Well, go on, go on," said his Honor, tipping back the chair, with the resignation of a man who gives up his seat in a crowded car to a woman.

"Then they put me in the 'chase'——"

"What! chased you? Impossible! But go on."

"And then they got out their shooting-stick——"

"Now, look here; do you mean to say they had to pull their revolver on you?"

"Not exactly, but they took a mallet. Then they sent me to 'press,' and here is the 'impression' as you see."

"Is there anything the matter with you, young man?"

"No, sir; only I want to be delivered."

"I am told by a friend of yours who has just climbed down from the back of my chair that you have spoken in the technicalities of your profession, and that you swore off on the 1st of January, but you were persuaded by a lot of boys that the old year hadn't ended, and so you fell. If I let you go and give you an almanac that contains a list of the eclipses and tells when it will thunder, will you promise never to look in a grocery again; never go out with the gang; never, no, never, sit up all night, and that you will use your efforts to the best of your ability to bleach your nose? Do you swear it?"

"I do, with italics."

"Then go away and be good."—New York Star.

A Celebrated Criminal Case.

Mrs. Kate Southern, the Georgia woman who killed her rival at a social gathering, has been sentenced to death. No criminal case in Georgia has ever caused so much excitement or called out so much general interest. The story of this young woman is dramatic and of absorbing interest from first to last, and is another exemplification of the saying that truth is stranger than fiction.

The condemned woman was the belle of a Georgia neighborhood, and fell in love with Bob Southern, the male flirt of the locality. She had many rivals, and among them was Mrs. Conant, who had been divorced from her first husband because of a flirtation with Southern. Miss Kate finally became Mrs. Southern, and a few months later, when in a condition that contributed to unnatural irritation and excitement, she met her rival at a dance, at her father's house, and, witnessing the flirtation carried on between this woman and her husband, sprung upon Mrs. Conant and stabbed her with insane fury. The victim fell dead, and the murderess, guarded by her husband with revolver in hand, escaped. The two went to North Carolina, and lived happily for a year. A child, now about six months old, was born there. Discovering that they were pursued, they left North Carolina, and moved westward. They were followed, captured, and taken to the scene of the murder. The trial resulted in the verdict of guilty of murder, and sentence was passed as stated.

One point in the defense was that Mrs. Southern, laboring under the unnatural excitement incident to pregnancy, was not responsible for her actions, and that the circumstances were such as to leave the worst possible effect upon any woman of sensitive nature in like condition. This point was elaborated, and called out the sympathy of women generally, and it is under this influence of women acting for woman, that a tremendous effort will be made for a new trial or commutation of sentence.

Force of Habit.

In most of our colleges it is the custom for one member of the faculty—usually the President—to have the supervision of all absent and dilatory students, and to him every such one is to go to explain the cause of his absence or tardiness. No more kind and indulgent guardian of the college discipline could have been found than Dr. A——. Every student knew well his old and stereotyped way of saying, "Well, well, I'll excuse you this time; but don't let it happen again."

Although not in accordance with the usual rule, Mr. H——, a married man, had been admitted to pursue the studies of the regular course. One day he was absent; on the next, appearing with his class in the doctor's room, he explained, with great embarrassment, that the arrival of an heir had been the cause of his detention. Without looking up from the papers on his table, and apparently without a thought as to the nature of the excuse, so long as there was one, the doctor graciously remarked: "Well, well, I'll excuse you this time; but don't let it happen again." The announcement was greeted by the class with the most tumultuous applause.—Editor's Drawer, in Harper's Magazine for June.

Mary's Little Lamb.

The following is the Chinese version of Mary and her lamb:

Was gal name Moll had lamb,
Flea all samee white snow;
Evly place Moli gal walkee,
Ba Ba hoppee long too.

We heard a son of Erin trying to surround Mary and her little lamb the other day, and this is the way he understood it:

Begorry, Mary had a little shape,
And the wool was white intoirly;
An', wherever Mary wud sthir her sthumps,
The young shape would follow her complately.
—Council Bluffs Globe.

So celebrated a poem should have a French version:

La petite Marie had le june muttong,
Zee wool was blanchee as ze snow;
And, everywhere la belle Marie went,
Le june muttong was zure to go.
—Imported poet of the Stamford Advocate.

Oui, monsieur; you avez un very large imagination; mais comment est this, pour Deutsche:

Dot Mary hat got ein leedle schaf,
Mit hair yust like some vool;
Und, all der blace dot gal did vent,
Das shaf go like ein fool.
—Hackensack Republican.

Soldiers and Lawyers.

An officer and a lawyer were talking of a disastrous battle. The former was lamenting the number of brave soldiers who fell on the occasion, when the lawyer observed that "those who lived by the sword must expect to die by the sword." "By a similar rule," replied the officer, "those who live by the law must expect to die by the law."

A WITNESS in a Charleston court refused to sign a deposition taken down in short-hand, on the ground that he could not be compelled to put his signature to any document not in ordinary writing. The presiding Judge sent him to jail for contempt, and the case is to go to the Supreme Court.

THE FAMINE IN CHINA.

A Narrative of Suffering and Death Almost Too Horrible for Belief.

[Letter from Dr. Williams to the Utica Herald.]

The piteous tales of woe from the famine-stricken districts of China which have reached me describe the desolation caused by the want of food there in such moving terms that I am led to send you an abstract in the hope of moving charitable people in this land to help. The portions of Shansi province, described in the letter received, are now probably beyond our reach, for such destitution must soon depopulate the land, but on their borders, near the seashore, there are myriads who can be reached, and their lives saved by timely relief. The total yet sent in all from the Eastern States cannot much exceed $5,000, and from Great Britain about £14,000 has gone.

The writer is T. Richards, an English missionary, living in the capital, Taiyuen, who made a journey about Feb. 1 to see for himself what was the state of the district south of that city. I abridge his report, which bears the marks of careful exactness and good sense in dealing with the misery around him:

"Jan. 29.—There was a fall of one inch of snow in the night. Saw four dead on the road, and one moving on his hands and knees. One of the dead was a boy 10 years old, carried by his mother; she laid him on the snow.

"Jan. 30.—One of the two dead bodies just passed was well dressed, and could not have been a poor man; just beyond them I met one staggering like a drunken man along the road, and as I looked a puff of wind blew him over to rise no more.

"Jan. 31.—Passed fourteen dead, some of them stripped for their clothes. One corpse was so light that a middle-sized dog dragged it about. Some were lying face downward, and one had its winding-sheet of snow on, showing that no wolves or foxes were near. I talked with an old man while climbing a hill together, after we had just passed a youth lying dead, and he said, in the most touching manner, 'Our mules and donkeys are all eaten up; our laborers are all dead; how is it that Heaven lets us poor people die like this?' In one place a notice declared that those who rob and steal should be put to death without mercy.

"Feb. 1.—Besides four women and two men seen unburied near the road, I met two youths, apparently brothers, 15 to 18 years old, moving along like men of 80, on their staves; then a young man, carrying his mother on his back, just ready to breathe her last. Saw two heads put up in cages, a warning to those who rob or steal, and many hats and shoes along the roadside, but no bodies.

"Feb. 2.—Saw a group of three lying together, who appeared to be a father, son and grandson. On the snow there were marks of a struggle and blood, but no body near. Two more heads hung from the trees in cages. For miles many of the trees along the roads were stripped of their bark five, ten and twenty feet above the ground for food. Several houses were passed with doors and windows open, jars and other utensils inside; nobody was left, and nothing had been touched, for they could not be turned into money nor food.

"Beyond this I was gladdened by the sight of wheat appearing from under the snow for a distance of ten miles, where the springs had furnished water for irrigation. The people told me that last season the crop was very promising up to the time of plowing, then a sudden flood and mildew blasted their hopes, and left them nothing but straw.

"Feb. 5.—This afternoon, at Hungtung, we saw the dead actually heaped on each other. On the main street was a man lying dead with the edge of a big stone between his teeth—he expired biting a stone. Saw two men grinding something very dark, and, on going near, learned it was the husks of millet mixed with old cotton wadding. People are now pulling down their houses for fuel, for coal is too dear for them.

"Feb. 7.—I bought three stone cakes, which I saw men eating. It was the same stone as our soft stone pencils (probably talcose slate), and is pounded to dust and mixed with millet husks and baked. It does not look bad, but tastes like what it is—dust. This was the worst day of the journey. There were more dead bodies on the roadside than before when we went by; we counted twenty-nine in a distance of eighteen miles. Some of them seemed to have been robbed and left to die; one woman, robbed of all she had and left, still moved, though unconscious of any one passing by. Another headless trunk proved that some murdered as well as robbed. I was away from my house fourteen days, and send an account of only a few of the dreadful sights I have seen.

"From others I learn that along the whole route from Fang-in Szchuen here (a distance of over 500 miles) dead men lay by the roadside every now and then. In Kansuh, far in the Northwest, grain was abundant, but grew scarcer each step as one approached the northern districts of Shansi. This year the cold had been unusually severe in the region of the Yellow river. Soft stone is sold at from a half to a third of a cent per pound, and bark at less than a cent per pound—both for food. But the people die of constipation. Grain is three or four times the usual price, turnips and cabbage five or six times.

"It is almost impossible to ascertain how many have died from famine. At Ping-yang, the people said that two large pits had been filled, and two carts were daily employed in carting the dead. The deaths in the hamlets among the hills are far more than in towns along the great thoroughfares or near rivers. In one district it was reported that one-third had died; in another, three-fifths. Whoever I asked coming from the southern departments of the province, Puchan, Kiang, Ping-yang, declared that one-half of the people were gone; and instanced villages numbering 300, 400 and 500 inhabitants, in which only 100 survived. Still, even if these estimates are exaggerations, what will it be at the end of the famine!

"The Government is doing what it can. The lowest allowance I heard of was 10 cents, and the highest 30 cents a month to each individual; in the capital 20,000 persons go to three soup kitchens outside the gates. Where grain is distributed, two or three ounces a day to each person is the limit. I have the best authority for saying that in many districts men are eating human flesh. Coal rises in price because it is unsafe to go to the mines alone to get it, for the persons will be stripped, and their horses, cows, mules or donkeys taken for food."

A TRAMP stole a ride from San Francisco to Council Bluffs by stowing himself in a freight car loaded with sheep-pelts reaching to within two feet of the roof. He got out at the latter city by breaking a hole in the side of the car.

Common Sense.

Many imagine all advertised medicines to be worthless nostrums, and indiscriminately condemn them; but is it not an injustice to the thousands of respectable citizens who give voluntary evidence of benefits received, to thus question and doubt their veracity and integrity? Fairbanks' standard scales are extensively advertised. Does it necessarily follow that they are inferior in make, and less accurate than others? Have they not been demonstrated to be among the best? Again, is it common sense to suppose that a physician with capital could be induced to hazard it and a hard-earned reputation upon a worthless article? R. V. Pierce, M. D., of the World's Dispensary and Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., is the proprietor of the most popular family medicines in the market. His reputation as a skillful surgeon and physician has been fully established for many years. Would physicians and clergy, after having tested his medicines thoroughly, unite in commending them to the afflicted, if they possessed no merit? The undersigned take pleasure in recommending Dr. Pierce and his Family Medicines to all who may need them:

Gen. Grant at the Paris Exposition.

A cable dispatch to New York Herald May 11th says that Gen. Grant was placed upon a square, American platform—that of the Howe Scale. The General in fact was weighed and for the first time in his life "found wanting," having lost seventeen pounds by his Egyptian trip.

At this season of the year the human system is liable to become disordered from the insufficient efforts of the liver to discharge the excess of bile. If nature is not assisted in her efforts, severe bilious attacks or prostrating fevers necessarily follow, causing great suffering and even death. A little timely precaution, however, will prevent all this, and may be found in that favorite household remedy SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR has been in use for half a century, and there is not one single instance on record where it has failed to effect a cure when taken in time according to the directions. It is, without doubt, the greatest LIVER MEDICINE in the world; is perfectly harmless, being carefully compounded from rare roots and herbs, containing no mercury or any injurious mineral substance. It takes the place of quinine and calomel, and has superseded these medicines in places where they have heretofore been extensively used. Procure a bottle at once from your druggist. Do not delay. Give it a fair trial, and you will be more than satisfied with the result obtained.

CAUTION.

As there are a number of imitations offered to the public, we would caution the community to buy no Powders or Prepared SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR unless in our Engraved Wrapper, with Trade-Mark, Stamp and Signature unbroken. None other is genuine.

DRAYING AND HAULING.

Rattling good teams and reasonab

Of all the senseless, nonsensical, and damphool demagoguism now in indulged in by politicians in this State, there is none more unreasonable than the opposition to the building of a new State House. The legislature, after many [illegible] at last took steps for the building of a new capitol, levied a tax and authorized the apportionment of Commissioners to superintend the building of the same. That the State needs a new capitol none will question, and to now impede the progress of the work by opposition, is the vilest kind of demagoguism.—Col. City Post.

It Mussed up the Roof.

"This mule,' remarked the livery stable man, as he passed the stall where the sleeping animal was leaning up against the partition, dreaming of Eden wherein there was but one mule and a thousand timid men. "This mule is a kicker.'

"This one?' innocently inquired the young man, laying his hand upon the mule's bustle to be sure that the proper animanl was indicated.

"This——"

The livery man said he did not mind the loss of the money, (as the young man did not take out the fancy rig he was going to look at) for he could more than make that up on the hearse and carriages as soon as the remains came down; but what he hated about it was having the roof of the stable mussed up where he went through.

They have some queer girls in Colorado. One of them, who resided in the Cache la Proude Valley, had been receiving the attentions of a young man for about a year; but becoming impatient at his failure to bring matters to a crisis she resolved to ascertain his intention. When he next called she took him gently by the ear, led him to a seat and said' "Nobby, you've been foolin' around this claim for mighty near a year, an' hev never yit shot off yer mouth on the marryin' biz. I've cottened to yer on the square clean through an' hev stood off every other galoot that has tried to chin in, an' now I want yer to come down to business or leave the ranch. Ef yer on the marry an' want a pard that'll stick rite toye tillye passin yer checks, but if that ain't yer game, draw out an' give some other feller a show for his pile. Now sing yer song or skip out.' He sang.

Enjoy Life.

What a truly beautiful world we live in! Nature gives us grandeur of mountains, glens and oceans, and thousands of means for enjoyment. We can desire no better when in perfect health, but how often do the majority of people feel like giving it up disheartened, discouraged and worried out with disease, when there is no occasion for this feeling, as every sufferer can easily obtain satisfactory proof that Green's August Flower will make them as free from disease as when born. Dyspepsia and Liver complaint is the direct causes of seventy-five per cent. of such maladies as billiousness, indigestion, sick headach, costiveness, nervous prostration, dizziness of the head, palpitation of the heart, and other distressing symptoms. Three doses of August Flower will prove its wonderful effect. Sample bottles, 10 cents. Try it. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

The manifesto of the Republican congressional caucus sounds like the last wail of a set of criminals who have been overtaken in their guilt and in their despair and utter helplessness called loudly upon their comrads in crime for help. It is signed by Eugene Hale, chairman, one of Hayes' visiting committees sent down to Louisiana and Florida, according to the late confession of the criminals engaged in the fraud, to carry out the conspiracy to rob the people of their duly elected president and vice-president of the United States. They predict terrible evils to the business and peace of the country by an investigation into their criminal proceedings! It will be altogether better for the business and peace of the couhtry, when found guilty of the charges against them, if they are all sent to the penitentiary.—S. B. Herald.

Never Known to Fail.

Dr. Morris' Syrup of Tar, Wild Cherry and Horehound has never been known to fail in permantly curing obstinate coughs, colds, croupe, whooping cough, nor any diseases of the respiratory organs, and it does it, too, at once. It is not necessary to take it for a long time before you can discover its beneficial effects. Its sale in this community is immense, and its popularity universal. It should not be classed with compounds put up by inexperienced hands. Do not fail to give this great and potent remedy a trial. It will not and cannot disappoint you. Try it once. Trial size 10 cents. Regular size 50 cents and one dollar. For sale by F. E. Davenport. Also agents for Prof. Parker's Pleasant Worm Syrup, which never fails. Pleasant to take, and requires no physic. Price 25c.

A Race for $3,000 in Gold.

Adams & Co., bankers, of California, failed. They had a branch office at a mining town about seventy miles distant, and no telegraph from Sacramento to this town. When Adams & Co.'s doors closed a rusty looking miner, with a gray shirt on, stood in the crowd. "By Jeems, that hits me!' he said, and started on a dead run for a livery stable next block.

"Say, Mister, put a Mexican saddle on to the best mustang you've got in the stable.'

"What for, sir?'

"No matter, hitch up.'

"But you are a stranger to me, and—and—'

'Hitchup, old fellow. How much is that ar' horse and saddle worth?'

"One hundred dollars.'

"All right; here's your ducats.—My name's Ben F——"

And soon he could not be seen for dust. Just out side the city he overtook a young man on horseback, who hailed him as he came up alongside.

"Say, Mister, can you direct me to ———?'

'Are you a stranger this way Mister?'

"Well, yes; you see Adams & Co. have suspended, and I am one of their agents, and am sent to carry the news to their branch bank at ———, and close it up before the depositors hear of our trouble.'

"All right you follow me;' and on they went, with the gold hunter only one length a head.'

On, on, on, to the half way house, the gold hunter widening the space between them.

Here the gold hunter leaps from his snorting, frothing steed. "Hostler, get me the best horse in the stable just as quick as God will let you. Here's one hundred dollars for any damages.'

In a few minutes he was on a fresh mustang, and just as he started up came his companion.

"Hello! say, Mister, hold on one minute; I change here.'

"Well, I've changed; cant stop; goodbye.'

In about two hours the gold hunter hitched his jaded, foaming steed at the edge of the town, dropped off his riding rig walked leisurely up to the bank, pulled out a certificate of deposit for $3,000, and presented it to the cashier.

"Do you want all of this now?'

"Well, yes; I'm going away and have to take it along.'

"But won't a draft on our Sacramento bank do?

"No, I'm going the other way."

"Oh, well; it'll take all the coin we've got, for our Sacramento bank has drawn very heavy lately.'

"Well, I can't help it; I must have

It was paid over the counter. Just as the gold hunter stepped to the door with his treasure in bags, the agent dismounted, and, running up the steps, was about to pass him as he stood apperantly waiting, and then, turning around called out to the banker: "You'd better shut your doors; your old bank is busted, and this man's come to tell you.'

It is unnecessary to add that Adams & Co. never resumed, but remained "busted."

A young pianist was giving concerts through the provinces of Germany for her support, and to enhance her reputation she advertised herself as a pupil of Liszt. In a little town in the interior of Germany, where she had announced a concert, she was confounded the day before the concert was to take place by seeing in the list of arrivals and at the very hotel where the concert was to be given, "M. L'Abbe Liszt." Here was a delimma, and what to do she knew not. Her fraud would be discovered; she would be exposed; she could never give another concert; she was ruined.

Tremblingly she sought the presence of the great mæstro, determined to make a clean breast of it and cast herself on his mercy. Coming into his room with down cast eyes, she knelt at the old man's feet and with many tears told her story—how she had been left an orphan and poor, with only her one gift of music with which to support herself; the difficulties she had encountered, until the fraudulent use of his name had filled her rooms and her purse. "Well, well,' said the great man, gently raising her up, "let us see, my child, what we can do. Perhaps it is not so bad as you thought. There is a piano; let me hear one of the pieces you expect to play to-morow evening.'

Tremblingly she obeyed, the mæstro making comments and suggestions as she played, and when she had finished he added: "Now' my child, I have given you a lesson; you are a pupil of Liszt." Before she could find words to express her gratitude Liszt asked: "Are your programmes printed?' "No, sir,' was the answer, "not yet.' "Then say that you will be assisted by your master, and that the last piece on the programme will be played by the Abbe Liszt."

A Novel Art Show.

A private letter received from an American gentleman in Paris gives an amusing account of a picture painted in six minutes. Says the letter:

"We were at the Cafe Chantant the other night. It is a building somewhat larger than the Corcoran gallery of art. It is a great place for music, songs and dances. There was one very amusing feature. During one of the entr' acts they brought on an artis who was billed to paint a marine view in six minutes, all ready for hanging (the picture, not the artist).

"The canvass was brought on.

"Out come the artist, a quiet, nervous-looking man of about 30 years of age

"His colors were all upon the palette, and his brushes were in his hand.

"Attention!' sang out the director.

"The artist seized a huge brush.

"At a signal the orchestral band struck up a clashing maddeningly nervous waltz.

"As the first note struck, the artist dashed a mass of yellow upon the upper part of the canvass. Then a bit of blue, then white, a dash of purple shadow, and then, with a quick twirl of a clean brush, a dark blue sea is dashed in agains the horizon.

"Two minutes gone.

"The waltz goes on faster and faster, the brush keeps time. A huge rock is sketched in with burnt sienna and black A light house with a vermillion range light is dropped upon the top of the rock.

"Clash, crash, one, two, three; a boat under full sail is thrown into the dim distance. Clash, crash, one, two, three, and another boat is thrown in. Light upon the water is thrown in with a free, steady hand. A huge brush then carefully blends the edges of the masses, and with a profound bow the artist turns to a cheering audience, gratified that he is through on time.

"And the wonder is that the picture is startlingly good in its broad effect. It is strong and clear. The colors are good and not muddily mixed. It was as good a novelty as I ever saw, and it beats all how it amuses the French people."

Waifs For The Ladies.

Mr. Nettle was recently married to a Miss Thorn. That's what you might call "a prickly pair."

The girls call telegraph operators electric sparks. But they always receive them without being shocked.

Miss Keeter is the name of the sweet singer of New Jersey. The best blood of the Jerseys flows through her veins.

"Women," says a writer, "are apt to be impracticable and vissionary." Jes so. A collection of belles is generaly chimerical.

What is the use of a fond wife saying to a doting husband, "H—l hath no fury like a woman scorned," if there is no h—l?

The divorce market must be still easy in Indiana. A county paper in the State heads its list of marriages "Limited Partnerships."

An editor of a rural exchange speaks of a kissing B, but he wont tell us the remainder of her name. Perhaps 'twas the hired girl.

At a recent Indiana wedding in a crowded church, the bride had to remain seated during the ceremony. There was standing room only.

A young lady amateur remarks that while she dosen't object to the "Loan of a Lover," she does disapprove of his keeping Lent.

Custom officer: "You said, madam, there was nothing but wearing apparel here. Now, this is spirit." Lady: "That Oh, nonsense! That is only my night cap!"

Woman consumes thirty-six buttons on her single pair of kid gloves, whereas man buttons his suspenders with a shingle-nail. And yet folks will ask "Button, button—whose got the button?"

No wonder the girls are always ready to tread the uncertain path of matrimony. Mrs. Dennison has made money enogh out of "That Husband of Mine" to buy a brick house with two bay windows.

A base, ignoble brute says that when he sees a woman neither fat nor fair, but forty, with a cardinal red plume on her hat, it suggests to him a life and death struggle between nature and art, with art on top by a small majority.

The first thing a wife does now when her husband dies is to run over to his office and inquire of the clerks, in smothered tones, "How much insurance did the old man have on his life? And was the last premium paid?" etc.—Sic mortaest.

Tramps.

There are tramps and tramps infesting the country, of every shade of complexion and genus, and the question is growing in importance, "what shall be done with them?" For years the charity of the people has been strained to the utmost in their favor. It is hard to turn hungry men, and more especially women and children, away from our door foodless, or to deny them shelter; but the day has arrived when forbearance has ceased to be a virtue; when work or starve is becoming the rule. But work the tramp won't, and steal they will; and the once plea of necessity has grown into the boldness of demand, and threats if they are not complied with, and many give from fear of some ruffianly attack or house flaming in the night. Indeed, so much is this the case, that women in isolated places are no longer safe, and our exchanges are not wanting in accounts of robbery and murder.

The stoppage of many great works; the cessation of labor in the vast coal mines; the shutting up of manufactories, the general stagnation of business gave a somewhat valid excuse for begging, and the tramps failed not to avail themselves of, and use it to the best possible advantage, until at last the occupation was reduced to a profession; to an organized society, with cant terms and signs, with places of rendezvous, and a general directing head, as has been proved by recent disclosures of detectives employed to learn the truth of the matter.

Winter drives the majority to large cities, and in the spring they crawl out to swarm us flies over the land. Of late however, our southern brethren are getting the benefit of their presence during the cold and snow, but they are certain to return to northern lands with the swallows, and so preserve their precarious health! This being the case, our doors are once again besieged; our barns made lodging houses, and our chicken coops, cribs, smoke-house and cellars being plundered; the tramp literally living upon the fatness of the land—representing the lillies of human life, and strongly opposed to toil, and never condescending to spin.

What shall be done to mitigate the evil? How can the tramp nuisance be abolished? How much longer must we patiently suffer and give our sub[illegible] to feed this shiftless, floating population? These questions, pertinent at all times, are particularly so when the city hives are swarming and the country has to bear the onus of the burden.

Among the varions plans that have been tried, none apper to have reached the root of the evil. Work houses have been used by the tramp rather as places of temporary refuge, than been looked upon as prisons; used when interested motives so dictated, and avoided at pleasure, or at best simply driving from one locality to another. The vagrant act is not looked upon with any dread by the professional tramp. The few days of incarceration serve as rest and a break to the general monotony. Anything suits him but responsibility, labor or forethought; to them he is constitutionally opposed.

Perhaps arrest, imprisonment and forced hard labor to all who have adopted the life of a tramp, would be the surest way of ending the matter; but the want of system, of uniformity of action, has thus far nullified any good that might have arised from it. For a single community to adopt stringent laws is useless save for itself, unjust to others and increases their burdens. There must be general action. The law that proves available in one locality, must be extended to all—must be universal in its working. Driving the tramp from one region to another, does not in the least do away with the evil—simply temporize with it. The same strong hand that is raised in Main must be felt in Georgia; New York must aid Illinois, and Virginia must second California. The tramp must be taught that change of latitude does not in the least lessen his liability to arrest and punishment; that by slipping over a geographical boundary line he does not escape Argus eyes and stone walls and iron bars, and—it may come to that—the treadmill. And there must be no lingering delay, or technical loopholes of escape. The penalty must follow swiftly upon the heels of transgression. The law must be one reaching to all portions of the land alike, and if States cannot or will not act in the matter, then the generl government should take it in hand.

It must come to this, or someting equally decisive. There is no longer any excuse for the bearing, and the more it is neglected, the more the fungus growth upon society increases; the more the pestilential, parasite plants suck out and fatten upon the blood belonging to others. And in view of these facts, in view of the urgent necessity of the case, why should there be any temporizing, any delay? We must either live at the mercy of tramps, or they must be taught that even as they sow, so shall they reap; that food and shelter and warmth and clothing come only by honest labor; that the day of promiscuous giving is past; that if they will not willingly work they will be made to do so; in short, that the 'tramp, tramp, tramp,' by shiftless and dishonest vagrants who riot in strikes and glory in conflagrations has come to an end.

We like the way the democratic newspapers in the southern states talk upon the subject of southern claims growing out of the war. The Nodaway Democrat, of Missouri, holds forth as follows: The danger to the United States treasury is not from claims of persons who aided the rebellion; but from the claims of persons residing in the southern states who were, or pretended to be, or who, for the sake of aiding claims, now pretend to have been loyal to the government of the union. Such claims, even of loyal persons, where they are from acts caused by operations of war, have been disowned by the public law of civilized nations condemned by adjudications of the supreme court of the United States, and only find any status by force of specific legislation of congress. These claims have become stale, and are often tainted with fraud. They are nearly always owned, in whole or part, by claim agents, by speculators, or lobbyists, who have no equiety against taxpayers or the public. Neither the house of representatives or the democratic party should be called to account for bills introduced, but for bills passed the democratic house and the republican senate should be held to the strictest responsibility.

A Terrible Indian Killer.

The man who has been in the Black Hills is a big gun at the village drug store, and feels called upon to tell the truth when narrating his adventures. Such a man, named Curt, was telling, the other night, how many Indians he had killed during his three months' residence in the hills.

After he had talked half an' hour, one of the listeners, who had kept track of the number killed, exhibited the figures. "I find,' he exclaimed, "that you killed 1,500 savages in three months.'

"Is that all?" exclaimed the unabashed Black-Hiller; "why, I believe you left out a week's work somewhere.'

"If you had such good luck killing Indians, why didn't you stay there?" demanded another suspicious listener.

"Well, the truth is, gentleman; I was afraid of ruining my left eye. I'd squinted along my gun barrel so much that my face was being drawn all out of shape, and the sight was so far gone that I had to be led about by a dog.'

"And you killed Indians while in that condition?'

"I did; though I've alwas felt a little mean about it. I couldn't see to shoot; and so I run 'em down and kicked 'm to death. It wasn't manly in me, and I want to ask the forgiveness of you, gentlemen, right here and now.

There was a long spell of appalling silence, and then some one said that Eph Francis had bought a new coon dog.

A High Wager.

A bassino marriage game was recently played in the staid old town of Franklin, Mass. One of the guests at an evening reception was a charming young widow, and another an available gentleman of means. Several couples had tested their skill at a bassino board when these two approached the table, and the gentleman suggested to his partner that they should try their skill at the pins. The challenge was accepted, and the lady playfully proposed that they should play far a wager. The gentleman gallantly assented and asked her to name the take. Seeing her confusion the host jokingly said: "His hand against yours!' The lady demurred and was turning to leave the table, when the gentleman, after a moments thought, said: "My hand for yours, if I win; or at your disposal for any young lady of respectability (her consent being first obtained), if I loose.' The wager was accepted, and the company gathered around the board. The lady led off with a king strike worth 45, while her partner missed "little bassino" and made a muff with his third ball. Undaunted he continued playing, and his fair antagonist followed with equal spirit until the seventh inning, when the score stood; he, 215; she 164. The excitement was now intense, and the widow, flushed and trembling, played very nervously. At the close of the run she had lost instead of gaining ground, the score being; he, 385; she, 188. The hostess advanced, took the feebly resisting hand of the fair widow and placed it in the hand of the winner, who said something very sweet to her, then he turned to the host and begged permission to keep the mace as a memento of the blessed evening.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

NEW YORK papers report that the Stewart hotel for women has proved a dead failure, and is run at a loss of $900 per day. It is said that eighty is the largest number of women who at any time availed themselves of the hotel, and that the number has dwindled, until now there are but fifteen boarders. The building is to be transformed into a general hotel.

A LARGE number of the Fall River (Mass.) mills have suspended manufacturing, throwing some 4,000 operatives out of employment.

GEORGE R. WATERMAN, the former Paymaster of the Pacific Mills, at Lawrence, Mass., has been convicted of stealing $111,000, and sentenced to twelve years in the State prison.

THE WEST.

NUMEROUS localities in Illinois and Wisconsin were visited on the evening of May 23 by the storm-king, and suffered vast destruction of property and serious loss of life. At Mineral Point, Wis., the tornado appears from the results to have been the severest, fully a score of dwelling-houses and other buildings being utterly demolished and as many more unroofed and otherwise injured. The contents of some were blown fully half a mile away. Eight persons were killed outright, and many others wounded, some of them beyond hope of recovery. The loss of property is estimated at over $100,000, without reckoning horses, cattle, etc. Everything in the line of the tornado is laid low, huge trees being carried hundreds of feet, huge rocks being misplaced, the ground plowed up, etc. At Paoli, Oregon, Mount Vernon and other towns west of Madison the hurricane was nearly as severe as at Mineral Point. Houses were unroofed, barns and fences prostrated, and many persons injured. On the same day a tornado swept through the town of Barrington, Cook county, Ill., making havoc wherever it struck the earth and killing three persons. Another tornado swept through Brown county, Ill., and three lives are reported lost.

SIX or seven hundred Nez Perces Indians who took part in the war under Chief Joseph last summer have sent a request to the authorities at Washington to be allowed to leave Fort Leavenworth, where they are now detained, and return to their old reservation in Washington Territory. After several consultations between the President and Secretary of War and Secretary of the Interior, it has been decided not to grant the request....It is estimated that fifty people were killed and over half a million dollars' worth of property destroyed by the recent terrible cyclone that swept across the State of Wisconsin.

THE Indiana State Millers' Association, the Grand Lodge of Masons, and the National Millers' Association were in session at the Indiana State capital last week....Joseph Oberlie, Alois Smith, Edward Williams, and Christian Turner, of Cleveland, while engaged in cleaning a privy-vault, were overcome by foul gas, and, falling into the vault, all four were suffocated before they could be rescued. All were married and leave large families.

CHICAGO elevators contain 721,020 bushels of wheat; 909,104 bushels of corn; 218,555 bushels of oats; 82,855 bushels of rye, and 307,617 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 2,189,151 bushels, against 5,633,147 bushels at this period last year.

THE HON. J. Scott Harrison, the son of President Harrison, and the father of Gen. Ben Harrison, of Indiana, died suddenly at his residence, near Laurenceburg, Ind., a short time ago. He was nearly 70 years old.

A PARTY of four masked men entered a sleeping car of a Union Pacific near Percy Station, Utah, a few days ago, and relieved the passengers of a considerable portion of their money and valuables. They fired three shots in the sleeper without injury to the passengers. They struck one passenger with a pistol, cutting the scalp some.

THE SOUTH.

GOV. COLQUITT, of Georgia, has commuted the death sentence of Mrs. Kate Southern, of Pickens county, to imprisonment in the penitentiary for ten years....Dr. J. C. Cook, of Columbia, S. C., was shot dead in his house the other day during a quarrel with his brother-in-law, Charles Martin, aged 20.

WASHINGTON.

IT is reported from Washington that the basis of a compromise has been virtually attained between the hard-money and the greenback men in Congress on the question of currency and finance, with the understanding that there is to be no further currency legislation at this session....The House Committee on Indian Affairs has agreed to a bill establishing the Territory of Oklahoma. This bill provides for the opening of the Indian Territory to white settlers.

REPRESENTATIVE PHILLIPS, of Kansas, has prepared a bill to regulate the sale of United States bonds, which, it is understood, expresses the views of the Banking and Currency Committee. The bill prohibits the sale of United States bonds except for refunding purposes, and provides for the opening at the treasury and sub-treasury of subscription books for bonds for refunding the debt at a lower interest. The Secretary of the Treasury is also required, if it is necessary to sell bonds, to sell them by contract to the lowest bidder, after advertisement.

SECRETARY SHERMAN is credited with declaring unequivocally that no more Government bonds will be sold for redemption purposes, as the success of the last $50,000,000 4½ per cents. assures over $200,000,000 gold surplus before January next, especially as our promising crops and the large European demand for American products render any considerable export of gold this year highly improbable....The official statement of the receipts from customs and internal revenue for the present fiscal year, up to May 27, show a very heavy falling off from the same period last year.

FOLLOWING is the full text of the bill passed by Congress to prevent the further retirement of legal-tender notes:

> Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act it shall not be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury, or other officer under him, to cancel or retire any more of the United States legal-tender notes; and when any of said notes may be redeemed or be received into the treasury, under any law from any source whatever, and shall belong to the United States, they shall not be retired, canceled, or destroyed, but they shall be reissued, and paid out again, and kept in circulation; provided, nothing herein shall prohibit the cancellation and destruction of mutilated notes, and the issue of other notes of like denomination in their stead, as now provided. All acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

THE President has nominated Crowley P. Dake, of Michigan, to be United States Marshal of Arizona.

GENERAL.

As a striking evidence of the progress of the revolution in transportation charges, the Chicago Tribune notices that lard is selling in Liverpool at $7.43 per 100 pounds, while the same article is selling in Chicago at $6.53 per 100 pounds—showing that it costs less than $1 per 100 pounds to move lard from Chicago to Liverpool. Cheap transportation brings a producer nearer and nearer to the consumer.

THE Grand Lodge of the World of the Independent Order of Good Templars has just held its annual session at Minneapolis, Minn. The report of the Right Worthy Grand Secretary states that the total membership of the order at the last report was 404,642. The number of members now reported is 316,717, with estimates for lodges not heard from of 467,403. The number of lodges at the last report was 6,439. The number at present is 6,738.

PRESIDENT HAYES visited Gettysburg on Decoration day, and was waylaid and pumped by the irrepressible interviewer. Nearly the whole interview relates to the Potter investigation. "Does it give you as much alarm as the letter of Mr. Key to the people of the South expresses?" asked the correspondent. "It gives me no more personal alarm than any other citizen. But I have learned to look with apprehension on the growth of caucus influence in America. I am endowed with a trust which I must discharge like a magistrate. Mr. Key did not exaggerate the case when he wrote: 'No man need hope that the schemes of the men who have engineered the movement to unseat President Hayes can be carried out without a bloody civil war.' That was what Mr. Key wrote," said the President. "Such schemes cannot be carried out without war. I swore to preserve the constitution of the United States, and will deliver the executive office in its integrity to my successor." "You do not admit, then, that Congress has any power to displace you from office?" "They can impeach me in the House of Representatives, and try me in the Senate. There is no other way in which I will recognize any attempt of Congress to remove me. It is my desire to administer the government kindly and wisely. But there is a point at which I may say, 'Go thus far, if you will; not farther.'"

POLITICAL.

POSTMASTER GENERAL KEY is out in an open letter, addressed to the people of the South, warning them against any attempt to unseat President Hayes as fraught with danger to the public peace, and urging them to support no person for Congress who is not pledged to sustain the title of Mr. Hayes. Congressman Potter, of New York, Chairman of the Special Presidential Investigating Committee, has also written a letter upon the subject of the pending investigation, in which he says:

> There is not the slightest chance of revolution or disturbance. When the whole country was at fever heat on the subject of the election, a way was found to establish a tribunal to pass upon the election, and every one submitted to that determination. The President's title rests upon that. If now it should appear that there was fraud which palpably affected the electoral vote, and which the commission did not notice, and, if a legal remedy exists for correcting the error, you cannot believe that such a proceeding, under the law, would lead to disturbance. If there be no such legal remedy existing, and Congress should hereafter, by the approval of the President, or by two-thirds of both houses without that approval, provide one, why should the legal determination thereafter had any more produce disturbance than the decision of the Electoral Commission did?

REPRESENTATIVE ALEX. H. STEPHENS has written a letter in reply to the statement of Congressman Potter touching the object of the pending Presidential investigation. Mr. Stephens views the whole proceeding as "unwise, unfortunate and mischievous," and thinks "its effect will be to disturb the peace, harmony and quiet of the country." In closing his letter he says:

> My own opinion is, as I have repeatedly said, that this affair will prove in the end either a contemptible farce or a horrible tragedy. Whether it will lead to the Mexicanization of our Federal republic, the result must show; but I say, as I said on another recent occasion, that all soft words instilling in the mind of the people of this country the idea that Mr. Hayes can be peaceably unseated by Congress are as delusive and guileful as the whisperings of the great arch-fiend, in the shape of a toad, in the ear of Eve, from which sprung all our woes.

The Democratic Congressmen from Tennessee bitterly denounce Postmaster General Key for writing a letter in opposition to the investigation. They assert that it was prepared for him, and that the only choice left him was to sign it or leave the Cabinet. Mr. Key protests that he wrote the letter with the best of motives, without dictation from or consultation with any one, and that, if he had the thing to do over again, he wouldn't alter a word of it.

THE Iowa State Democratic Convention met at Des Moines on Wednesday, May 29, and nominated the following ticket: For Secretary of State, T. W. Walker; Auditor, Col. Eiboeck; Treasurer, E. D. Fenn; Register of the State Land-Office, T. S. Bardwell; Judge of the Supreme Court, Judge J. C. Knapp; Clerk of the Supreme Court, M. V. Gannon; Reporter of the Supreme Court, J. B. Elliot; Attorney General, John Gibbons. The platform favors a tariff for revenue only, opposes the granting of subsidies by the General Government, denounces the financial system of the Republican party as responsible for the misery and want that now afflict the country, favors the repeal of the Resumption act, opposes any further retirement of United States notes, and demands a "thorough examination into the election frauds of 1876."

THE Prohibitionists of Pennsylvania have placed a State ticket in the field, as follows: Governor, Gen. F. H. Lane; Lieutenant Governor, John Shallcross; Secretary of Internal Affairs, Calvin Parsons; Supreme Judge, Daniel Agnew.

FOREIGN NEWS.

AN American gentleman, just returned from an extensive tour in Russia, says 200,000 Russians are moving towards the Galician frontier of Austria. The garrisons throughout Poland are moving southward. Camps of troops and recruits were noticed at many points along the railways. Moscow and St. Petersburg are full of troops, and new levies are constantly coming forward.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS.

FRIDAY, May 24.—SENATE.—Mr. Edmunds, from the select committee to take into consideration the state of the law respecting the ascertaining and declaration of the result of the election of Presidents and Vice Presidents of the United States, said that he was directed by the committee to make a report in part in the form of a bill to amend sundry provisions of chapter 1, title 3 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to Presidential elections. The bill reported by Mr. Edmunds provides that, when there is only one return of the vote of a State, it shall not be rejected except by the concurrent action of both houses. If more than one return is received, the vote of the State is not to be counted unless both houses agree as to which is the legal return. It also names the first Tuesday in October for Presidential elections, and the first Monday in January for the meeting of the electors. The bill was placed on the calendar....Mr. Burnside, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported adversely on the House joint resolution to provide for the enforcement of the Eight-Hour law, and also adversely on the Senate bill to regulate the hours of labor. Placed on the calendar....The Senate then discussed the bill to provide for a permanent government for the District of Columbia.

HOUSE.—The House spent another day upon the Army Appropriation bill.

SATURDAY, May 25.—SENATE.—Mr. Oglesby, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported, and the Senate passed, the House bill which provides that the notice of contest now provided for by law under the Homestead Pre-emption and Tree-Culture laws of the United States shall be published in some newspaper printed in the county where the land in contest lies, and, if no paper is printed in the same county, then in a newspaper printed in the county nearest to such lands. The object of this bill is to protect the interests of all parties to contests....The bill to provide a permanent government for the District of Columbia was discussed.

HOUSE.—Mr. Goode, the Chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, reported a bill to apply the proceeds of the sale of public lands to the education of the people....The House spent the day in committee of the whole upon the Army Appropriation bill. There was an animated debate over the provision to reduce the salaries of the General of the Army and Lieutenant General, but the reductions as fixed by the committee were sustained. Mr. Scales offered an amendment transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department, but action upon it was postponed.

MONDAY, May 27.—SENATE.—Mr. Beck introduced a bill to repeal the existing taxes on capital and deposits of banks and bankers, and to impose taxes on a dividend in excess of 8 per cent....A resolution was adopted calling upon the President for all the memoranda, minutes and correspondence in possession of the Government relating to the appointment of M. Delfosse as one of the Halifax Commissioners....The bill providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia was passed....The Senate decided, by the close vote of 28 to 26, to take up the bill to forbid the further retirement of legal-tender notes.

HOUSE.—Bills were introduced as follows: By Mr. Willis, to regulate the sale of United States securities; by Mr. Wood, to establish a permanent sinking fund; by Mr. Chalmers, to encourage the higher education of the colored race; by Mr. Neal, to establish a National University at Washington....Mr. Southard, from the select committee on counting the votes for President and Vice President, reported a bill on that subject....The House then took up the Army Appropriation bill, and adopted the amendments fixing the strength of the army at 20,000, prohibiting the use of any part of it for any purpose not expressly authorized by Congress, and transferring the Indian Bureau from the Interior to the War Department.

TUESDAY, May 28.—SENATE.—Mr. Hamlin, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported a bill providing for the payment of the award made by the Fishery Commission at Halifax, under the treaty of Washington. The committee enter a vigorous protest against the injustice and trickery by which the award was secured, declaring that in all future negotiations the Government of the United States will refuse to recognize the award as affording a precedent to determine the value of the inshore-fishery privileges....The Senate passed the House bill forbidding the further retirement of legal-tender notes.

HOUSE.—The House passed the Army Appropriation bill. It fixes the army at 20,000 men, forbids the use of soldiers for local police purposes in any of the States, and transfers the Indian Bureau from the Interior to the War Department....The Senate amendments to the bill repealing the Bankrupt law were concurred in, and the bill passed. The repeal goes into effect on the 1st of September....The Democratic members of the House held a caucus immediately after the close of the day's session, and resolved to postpone consideration of the question of final adjournment until the 5th of June.

WEDNESDAY, May 29.—SENATE.—Mr. Windom, from the conference committee on the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill, submitted a report, which was agreed to, and the bill passed....The River and Harbor Appropriation bill was reported from the Committee of Conference. It provides for the expenditure of $900,000 more than the House bill....The larger portion of the day was spent in considering the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill.

HOUSE.—The House voted to amend the Senate resolution for the final adjournment of Congress by substituting June 17 instead of June 10 as the date....Mr. Atkins, Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill appropriating $20,000 to defray the expenses of the Select Committee on Presidential Elections. The Republicans filibustered to prevent the passage of the resolution.

The Phonograph.

There was an exhibition of Edison's phonograph in Chicago the other day, and a local paper thus describes the wonderful machine: It was not a very formidable-looking machine, being easily lifted, and not occupying more than two square feet of space. There was an iron cylinder about five inches in diameter and six in length, having a thread cut into it screw-shaped. An axle extending through the cylinder projected at each end, and also having a screw-thread corresponding to that on the cylinder. At one end was an ordinary crank, by which the cylinder could be rapidly and easily revolved. At the end of an arm extending from the front side was a contrivance called the diaphragm, because it was as close an imitation of the diaphragm of the human throat as could be devised. This diaphragm could be swung around until it almost touched the face of the cylinder. It consisted of a small plate or disk of thin steel, having a concave surface intended to catch the sound, and attached to which, on the under side, was a minute needle, which, when the diaphragm was in place, would prick or slightly touch the cylinder. In order to work the instrument, it was only necessary to wind a sheet of tin-foil about the cylinder and talk or sing into the mouthpiece. The vibration of air would cause the needle to indent the tin-foil, the cylinder, of course, being revolved during the operation. After the speaking was finished it was necessary to swing back the mouthpiece and turn the cylinder back to the starting point. Then a cone-shaped funnel was attached to the diaphragm, which was again placed in position, and the phonograph was ready to report the sounds which had been previously voiced into it.

Something Very Queer.

Speaking of his recent trip to Cuba, the Postmaster General says: "One thing strikes me very queer, and that was the number of persons engaged in the sale of lottery tickets in Havana. Another thing more queer than that was that by some kind of a peculiar luck the Captain General of Cuba, stationed at Havana, always draws the capital, or largest prize. I have often heard that the managers and leading men in the New Orleans and Kentucky lotteries drew the largest prizes, now and then, but I was surprised to learn that the Captain General could get the capital prize every time. He is very rich."—Hartford Times.

IF any one doubts the onward march of improvement let him remember that the old plan of fastening your napkin around your neck at dinner time has been done away with by the patented invention of Marshall Burnett, of Hyde Park, Mass. You clamp a sort of a wire fence to the edge of the table before your dinner plate. The fence is jointed like lazy tongs. You place your napkin on the fence and pull the latter up under your chin when you are taking soup; push down the fence and napkin when you are done.

TWO TRAMPS slept one night last winter in a lime kiln, near Baltimore, and were stupefied by the fumes. One died, and the other was burned so badly that he lost an arm. The kiln was, however, so comfortable a lodging-place that the survivor tried it again on a recent night, and was found dead in the morning.

TAKE time, think long and well before you accept any proposal.

LEGAL DECISIONS.

In Some Interesting Cases.

Liability for Husband's Debts.—The case of Citizens' National Bank against Green, recently decided in the Supreme Court of North Carolina, suggests that "the emancipation of woman" is not complete in that State; at least, that her husband cannot turn property over to her and so free it from liability for his debts:

"A homestead in land to the maximum value allowed by law had been allotted to G., who was insolvent. From the proceeds of a crop grown on the land he loaned his wife $300, with which she purchased other land, taking the deed in her own name. Held, that the money advanced to the wife was still the husband's money, and the land purchased therewith his, and that such land was not exempt from his debts. The circumstance that property is the product of or increase from exempt property does not render it exempt."

The Albany Law Journal finds some interesting cases in the latest volume of "American Reports." The following are among them:

A Son Insuring His Father's Life.—In Guardian Mutual Life Insurance Company against Hogan (Illinois) it is held that the relation of father and son does not give the son an insurable interest in the life of the father, unless the son has a well-founded or reasonable expectation of some pecuniary advantage to be derived from the continuance of the life of the father. On the other hand, in Reserve Mutual Insurance Company against Kane (Pennsylvania) it is held that the son has an insurable interest in the life of his father, especially where the son is liable, under the Poor law, for the support of his father.

Dog Law.—In Helsrodt against Hackett (Michigan) a statute authorized "any person" to kill a dog going at large, and not licensed or collared. In an action to recover for the killing of plaintiff's dog by defendant's dog, held no defense that plaintiff's dog was not licensed and collared, as defendant's dog was not a "person." We know the converse of this to be urged once. Sidney Smith, when solicited by Landseer, the famous animal painter, to sit to him for his portrait, exclaimed: "Is thy servant a dog, that he shall do this thing?" In Rider against White (New York) it is laid down that one injured by the bite of a dog may recover damages of the owner on proof that the dog was vicious, and that the owner knew it, without showing that it had ever bitten any one.

Distinctions of Race and Color.—In State against Ross the court adjudged that where a white woman left the State to be married in another State to a negro resident thereof, but not intending to return, but was so married and afterward did return, the marriage was lawful in North Carolina. In State against Kennedy, where a negro man and a white woman left the State to be married, with intent to evade the law and to return, and were married in another State where such marriages were lawful, and did return, the marriage was held invalid in North Carolina. In Mount Moriah Cemetery Association against Commonwealth (Pennsylvania) it is held that a by-law of a cemetery association prohibiting the burial of negroes therein is void as to persons who were lot owners when the by-laws were passed. Judge Gordon says: "In a sound code of ethics this prejudice never had a respectable standing, for it was but the child of an abnormal, servile system that was entitled to no man's respect outside of the country and laws which maintained it. But at this time, when this prejudice is under the ban of recent constitutional and legal provision, expressly designed for its suppression and extinction, it is scarcely to be expected that we can be induced to indorse its respectability or to encourage it to linger around the halls of justice.' Judge Sharswood said, "I dissent from this judgment and opinion."

Long Opinions.—New Hampshire still continues the banner State for long opinions. Here in Hardy against Merrill we have twenty-two pages to demonstrate that non-professional witnesses may testify to their opinion of a testator's sanity, founding their opinion upon their knowledge and observation of his appearance and conduct. A good deal of the opinion was omitted, too.

Horses and "the Tender Passion."—In McKee against Nelson (New Hampshire) the court says: "There are a thousand nameless things indicating the existence and degree of the tender passion which language cannot specify; precisely what Judge Bellows, in Whittier against Franklin, said of the frightened mental condition and sulky disposition of a horse."

A Mania for Suicide.

Suicide has become an incident of such frequent occurrence in this city that it has almost ceased to excite surprise, and, consequently, we have in a great measure come to regard the event as part of the ordinary course of things. In this regard, however, we are far behind San Francisco. In that city a suicidal mania prevails to an extent that is positively startling. The following extract from the Chronicle, complied from the official records, reveals a horrible tendency to self-destruction:

Fiscal Year.	Suicides.	Fiscal Year.	Suicides.
1860	31	1870	47
1861	30	1871	51
1862	19	1872	37
1863	18	1873	36
1864	20	1874	61
1865	17	1875	64
1866	24	1876	60
1867	19	1877	76
1868	28	1878	107
1869	39

The number of suicides in San Francisco is equal to that in Philadelphia, which has a population two or three times as numerous. In New York, which, except San Francisco, shows the heaviest mortality from suicide of any American city, the number of deaths from this cause in 1876 was 150 against 29,102 deaths from all other causes, or 1 to 194; in 1877 the suicides were 148 against 26,055 deaths, or 1 to 176. In San Francisco the proportion of suicides to all deaths in 1875-'76 was as 1 to 80, and in 1876-'77 as 1 to 81. In 1877-'78 it will be much greater. The ratio of suicides to all deaths is already more than twice as great in San Francisco as New York, and will this year be nearly thrice as great, while the ratio to population is still more unfavorable.

Three conclusions are fully warranted by these facts: First, suicidal death is more frequent in San Francisco than anywhere else in the civilized world, and more frequent now than at any previous date. Second, it is accompanied by a similar pre-eminence and development of insanity, which appears to prove that both have a common origin. Third, this remarkable prevalence of insanity and suicide, and the increase of both in late years, corresponds with that development of stock-gambling and jobbing which, if allowed to proceed much further, will force every dollar of capital out of the State, reduce the masses of the people to despair and utterly bankrupt the community.—New York Graphic.

Theatrical Burnings.

From the year 1569, when the Teatro Della Carita, in Venice, was consumed by the flames, on to the end of 1877, 523 theaters have been completely destroyed by fire. Classic authors also chronicle the destruction by fire of 11 Roman theaters. Astley's Amphitheater, London, has been burned down four times (1794, 1803, 1830, 1841); Drury Lane, Covent Garden, and Her Majesty's, have each been consumed three times; and of existing London theaters seven have before been destroyed. No less than 31 fires in London theaters are chronicled, the next largest number (29) being recorded in the case of Paris, while New York follows with 26, and modern San Francisco with the astounding number of 21. An old chronicle records that the Teatro Atarazanos, in Seville, was burnt down in 1615 for the sixth time, that it was re-erected in 1631, and that it was consumed for the seventh time in 1675. Among the most disastrous fires recorded is that of the Theater of Capo d'Istria, in 1794, when about 1,000 persons were burnt to death. Nearly 800 were killed in the fire which broke out in Lehman's Theater and Circus at St. Petersburg, on Feb. 14, 1836. On May 25, 1845, at Canton, a Chinese theater caught fire. As usual there, the structure consisted only of bamboo, mats, boards, and light stuff, the whole being surrounded by four walls, and only one exit being provided. Of the many spectators, only a few were able to save themselves. The Mandarin, in his official report, stated that 1,370 corpses had been found, and that there were no less than 2,000 persons injured, of whom 300 expired shortly after. Another disastrous fire in China was that of Tientsin, in May, 1872, when 600 people perished.

Odds at Whist.

The question is often asked, What are the odds in favor of good play at whist? Hitherto it has generally been stated as about eleven to ten, but, according to a practical experiment recently made at the Athenæum, this seems to be somewhat over the mark.

On the occasion referred to two tables were made up. At one four really good players were placed. At the other two good players were pitted against two bad players, admitted duffers. The same hands were then dealt out to each table, and so the play continued on two consecutive nights, at the end of which the result merely showed a difference of 5 per cent. in favor of the good play as against the bad.

But, when the number of times that the money staked was turned over in the course of the two evenings is taken into account, this really represents a very considerable profit in favor of good play, the 5 per cent. in the case of whist being, as it were, cumulative.—London World.

"Where the Woodbine Twineth."

Speaking of Jim Fisk one is reminded of that expression so frequently used by him, "gone where the woodbine twineth." The origin of this was rather peculiar. Fisk attended to the sailing of the Sound steamer every afternoon, and then made direct for his usual haunt of splendid revelry, which was Delmonico's, in Fifth avenue. His best route brought him to Sixth avenue, corner of Thirteenth street, where stood a building covered with greenery, and called the "Woodbine." It was a popular drinking house, and it is said that some of Fisk's cronies were among its patrons. It thus became a common thing for him when asked concerning anyone to reply, "Gone where the woodbine twineth." This year the Woodbine yields to the inevitable laws of mutation. The house is demolished and all its memories and associations (to carry out the same figure) are "gone where the woodbine twineth."—New York Cor. Utica Herald.

Singular Deaths.

Deaths from strong emotion have been numerous within a few days. Louis Wassman was so affected by the imprisonment of a young companion in Moline, Ill., for theft, that he died of heart disease. Henry S. Moss, a Louisville merchant, declined rapidly in health after the exposure of his forgeries, and died a maniac. Henry Altroch died of grief in East Delaware, Ohio, on learning of his daughter's elopement. Mrs. Allingham dropped dead from heart disease at the sight of her sons fighting. Bryant Foley was so scared in Watertown, N. Y., by a belief that carbolic acid used in washing a wound had poisoned his system, that he died within three hours. A Harvard student named Waters studied nineteen hours without cessation, went crazy from excitement, and died in a madhouse. May Watterson, of Jasper, Ohio, fell dead when told of her lover's death.—New York Sun.

The Presbyterians.

The Presbyterian Assembly (Northern), which met in Pittsburgh the other day, represents a very important constituency. In May, 1877, the total number of synods was 37; of presbyteries, 175; of ministers, 4,801; of churches, 5,153, and of communicants, 557,674. Since 1872 the increase in the number of communicants has been 89,570. The total of contributions for all purposes in 1877 was $8,295,361. The business of the church is intrusted to the care of seven boards, which are subject to the General Assembly: Home Mission, Foreign Mission, Education, Publication, Presbyterian House, Church Erection, Relief. The care of freedmen is in charge of a permanent committee.

POPULAR SCIENCE.

THE hoofs of horses are round and flat; in the ass they are oval and hollow, and in the zebra they are oval at the toe and square at the heel, by the spreading of that part which is termed the frog. This causes the limb to stand more vertically upon the pastern, and gives a sharp firm tread upon declivities.

IT is stated that H. Dussault lately accomplished the feat of walking upon water at Taunton, Mass. He walked a quarter of a mile, on Taunton river, in six minutes. He wears a pair of patent shoes made of tin, about one foot wide and three feet long, in which air is confined, and he makes his way in a sort of skating gait.

DR. PRATT, a Georgia chemist, has discovered a method of making pure brimstone direct from iron pyrites, which are found in an exhaustible quantities in the northern part of the State. The process is simple, and the brimstone costs about one-third of the price for the ordinary article of commerce. A patent has been obtained, and works will soon be established.

WILD cattle feed in flocks, because they experience a sense of insecurity and dread of attack; they act instinctively upon the maxim that union is strength, and thus guard against surprise. The domesticated varieties scatter and browse separately because they have no such dread, and each animal follows its individual caprice or sense of enjoyment.

SOME interesting experiments have recently been made in Germany with the common nettle, which bid fair to make that modest weed an article of considerable importance. They consisted in working it in the same manner as hemp, and the fibers obtained were as fine as silk, while they yielded nothing to hemp fibers as regards durability. A considerable area has now been planted with nettles in that locality.

M. LENGLEN, of Arras, France, recently made known a curious case of the transmission of physical traits to the third generation. A man named Gamelon, who lived at the close of the last century, had six fingers, two thumbs on each hand, and two great toes on each foot. This peculiarity was not perceptible in his son, but in the third generation all of the children conformed to the malformation of their grandfather. A similar instance has been observed in the lower animals by M. Quatrefages.

A PHILADELPHIAN has just improved the steamboat propeller. There are four wheels, two on each side of the boat, run on endless steel cables from one wheel to the other, like a belt over two pulleys, both ends of each paddle being securely fastened into a triangular-shaped piece of iron which works like a cog, dropping into notches in the iron wheel at proper intervals as it revolves. Thus there are continually several paddles in the water all working at once, instead of only one, as in the ordinary wheel. Further, these paddles are working in comparatively still water, while with the common wheel the water is churned into foam, and, after a certain point is reached in the swiftness of the revolutions, speed is lost instead of gained.

Political Conventions.

Political conventions have been called to meet at the times and places mentioned below:

COMMUNISM VS. NATIONAL BANKS.

Money is power. Men are everywhere forced to admit it. Every crisis in public affairs proves the fact. Combined power is often dangerous, and always to be watched, for it grows as it combines and combines as it grows, till, gathering the force of the whirlwind, it sweeps all before it. Money in private hands for personal purposes often becomes oppressive, never dangerous; but money gathered into corporate magnitude, governed by corporate will, free from all personal individuality, rolls its way eyeless and soulless, like the wheels of Juggernaut, over obstacles in its way. It poisons nature into tyranny. Speaking all languages, it buys servants, witnesses, Judges, ministers, Kings and States; corrupting all power, remorseless as the grave, and devilish as the devil; it is the deity of the gambler, the god of the Jew, the idol of the banker. Such is its power.

The national banks form in each community, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the concentrated money power of the United States. Not satisfied with the general power of money incorporated into intensified strength, they have formed a kind of leviathan corporation, whose constituent elements are already made up in unified powers—a corporation of corporations—which they term the "Bankers' Association."

Its machinery covers the whole empire of financial action. Its wheels roll through every State and Territory. From center to circumference it rules the whole. Its aim is universal control. Its means 2,000 banks, wielding the combined capital of 300,000 capitalists, the deposits of 800,000 business men, aggregating more than $2,000,000,000, with $160,000,000 of surplus profits, and $30,000,000 of annual bounty robbed from the people without an equivalent or consideration. With recruits wherever there is a usurer or a gambler in money, they have formed and combined a power so leviathan in its proportion, so colossal in its centralizing strength, and so self-confident in its omnipotence, that it boldly and openly declares that its machinery is so oiled and greased that, on a single day's notice, it can concentrate a political power no power of Congress can resist. If the Bank Association is to rule as it has combined to rule, all property is at its mercy, all labor is its slave. For it can make and it can break; it can rule and it can ruin; it can build up or it can tear down. Defiant and implacable, as all corporate and impersonal responsibility is, it has no guide but greed, no god but usury; as ruthless as the Roman plunderers, it controls the torch that destroys and the sword that robs.

What is the purpose of this huge combination of moneyed monopolies? It is to make monopoly immortal, and robbery endless! It seeks to take from the Government its sovereignty in money. Its purpose is to kill the greenback as a currency. Its aim and object is to assert and maintain the highest prerogative pertaining to freemen. It would issue the currency, and control the currency. It would make the $7,000,000,000 worth of our annual production subject to its own valuation. It would make progress its slave, commerce its subject, manufacture its dependent, labor its hireling, Congress its puppet, and the Government its plaything.

It would make the bonds of the Government its basis to rob the people of a double interest on its money. It would make the bonds exempt from taxes, to exempt their capital from taxes, creating an oligarchy of privileges, and a nobility of aristocrats. It would make the producing farmer, the creative mechanic, and working laborer its subject slaves, to pay the taxes of the rich, and do homage to wealth.

Such are the exact purposes for which the Bank Association was created. It finds it legal to combine, centralize, and unify the power of money, to tyrannize over values, to avoid taxation, to impose burdens on the people, and to crucify labor. But it will tolerate no combinations but its own. ☞ When labor combines to protect labor, it anathematizes the people as a brutal herd of agrarian Communists. It consolidates the rich to force the people to grant the rich privileges, monopolies, and powers, and call its unions Bank Associations.

Is this battle to be endless, or, seeing and knowing the infamy of the object, will the people end it? The Roman patricians were never more insolent than the aristocracy of the Bank Association. In the old battle, patrician wealth, patrician monopolies, and patrician aristocracy were on one side; on the other were plebeian producers, plebeian manufacturers, plebeian labor, and plebeian poverty. The Roman aristocrat pursued his way to grandeur and wealth regardless of human suffering. Man, as an individual, if outside of the privileged order, was a thing, a slave, only fit to labor for the rich, pay taxes, and starve. Conquest, rapine, and slavery were his policy. We have got to root out this oppressive insolence, or it will root out liberty, equality and justice. We have got to conquer the Bank Association, or the Bank Association will conquer the people. The issue is definite, palpable, and irresistible. The living and the coming generations of men are bound up in its solution. With the Bank Association there is nothing sacred or respectable but money; in its philosophy power belongs to the few; the great public heart of the populace is but the laboring rabble. Its vital life is oppression; the very spirit of its existence is an antagonism to equality of rights. It is an iron-shod oligarchy, combined into monstrous wealth to march over the very tendrils of human welfare, crushing all it cannot seduce, and conquering all it cannot control. The birth of Christianity was the birth of Communism. Religion was charity, and mercy, and hope. "Love thy neighbor as thyself," "Do unto others as you would that others should do unto you," created Communism, built up the Church of the Messiah, and laid the foundation for those equalities of eternal justice which formed the type, and, after centuries of struggle, grew into political Communism. Communism in France was the first practical assertion of the political rights of the people. In the Pantheistic Governments of Greece and the Democracies of Athens, political equality was never admitted as a principle, as the history of those States attests, and as the learned Balmes proves to demonstration. In France Communism created free cities; out of the free cities, originated the Third Estate; out of the Third Estate, liberty. It took centuries for the principle of equality to battle down the iron bulwarks of tradition. Kings, feudal lords, the aristocracy were its antagonists. They had gathered up the power of oppression out of "the divine right of might," and they held it. The people were denied all rights; they were slaves to power. This principle pervaded through all Grecian history till it killed Grecian power. It annihilated Roman ascendency. It drove civil and political civilization from the shores of the Mediterranean to the shores of the Atlantic. Civil liberty was manacled and in irons till the French Communes asserted and maintained the political equality of the people. The Bourbons associated to defeat equality in politics as the Bankers' Association have associated to defeat liberty in America; and, weakened as Bourbonism was, it yet combined the capital of Europe, and for more than 800 years it kept up the savage reign of "might makes right."

Printing finally became the ally of right. Yet it took centuries to tear away the fetters of ignorance and flood the world with the illuminations of education, justice, hope and equality. Ignorance with the masses was essential to power with the privileged. The revolution of 1776 was the first national revolt. The revolution of 1789 was the revolt of humanity.

The Bank Association would drag the American people back to the black ignorance of night, to slavery, to subjugated dependents, to lordly masters, to cringing taxpayers. To do this it bribes capital to join capital; it feasts intellect, suborns talent, buys legislation, rules money, and demands with Hadrianic ostentation that the American people shall ignore their sovereignty, and give up to this association of the money-bags the management of the finances of the nation.

These aristocrats of money, the barons of the purse, the foster-brothers of railroad monopolies, stigmatize every associated effort of labor as Communism, and Communism as the license of murder, robbery and theft. They have no appreciation of that community of effort and energies which originated free cities, or of that highest and noblest of purposes which, while battling for equality of rights, battles for the civilization of the poor, for the uplifting of the downtrodden and the support of the oppressed; for homes won by labor; for bread earned by toil, but denied by greed; for education for children, secured by industry and provided by the State; in one word, for the respectability of comfort.

Labor associations have become essential to repress the insolence of capital. Labor unprotected is crushed to slavery. It is the declaration of the Bank Association that they will put their screws on labor until they have brought it to submission to the dictated prices of capital. Labor has learned to know its power, not to abuse it, not to trample on the rights of others, but to protect its own. It has come to know that it is the architect of progress and the originator of wealth. Always inventing, and creating, and producing, its Communism is this: It says to Capital: "In the past you made me your slave, for the future I make myself a freeman." Heretofore, especially prior to 1776, the producer was the mere servant of the consumer. In an age when mind is an essential element of labor, and humanity an element of the mind, the only rank for man to recognize is that which is foremost in producing for the body and for the soul. The laborer's life is his nobility. To create is to be noble. He who creates the best to elevate labor by labor, unto the enjoyment of equality, illuminated by education, radiated by justice, purified by charity, and refined by religion, is the most of a man. This is the Communism of the laborer. Franklin was a Communist, Guttenberg was an agrarian, Arkwright a civiliser, and Morse a leveler. They were each laborers to level up, not down; to civilize, not to heathenize; to feed, not to starve. From their toil-worn hands they built into light, not into darkness; to health and strength and intelligence, and not into decrepitude, weakness and ignorance.

What these sovereigns of toil were to progress the Bank Association is to slavery, to despotism, to the centralizing power of wealth. Its policy is to subjugate and enslave the people by controlling the money power of the nation. It is now robbing the people annually of $30,000,000 of a subsidy, for which it gives no pretense of an equivalent, and for which the people receive no semblance of a benefit. This annual robbery the Bank Association would make perpetual. Their means is corruption. They bid for a corrupt and purchasable press, and corrupt and villainous Hessians, vile panderers to mammon, advocate their monopoly. They would bribe Congress to tax the producer, and State Legislatures to sustain their unholy and infamous purpose. With a reserved fund of $166,000,000 of reserved profits, wrung from the industries of the nation, they have leagued themselves into a moneyed oligarchy to rule or ruin the country. By attempting to kill the greenback they have prostrated labor to want, business to bankruptcy, and prosperity to ruin. There is one thing certain—the people must kill the Bank Association or the Bank Association will kill the equalities of liberty. There can be but one sovereign power in finances. It must be the greenback as the money of the nation, sovereign, absolute and irredeemable, because it is sovereign and absolute, and adequate, because the nation can measure and supply its wants without usury, without interest, without bonds, and without cost; or it must be the national-bank money, created by a combination of individuals to rule the nation, a money dependent upon the fluctuations of gold, the greed of usurers, the will of aristocrats—to be doled out as speculators may choose at high interest, at usurious compounds, and at such times and places as the Shylocks of the money market may choose. There can be no independence if the people and the nation are to be dependent for money on banks. The banks must yield or the people must yield. The banks have money; the people have the ballot; the laborer's vote weighs as much as the banker's vote. There are one, two, maybe three hundred thousand bondholding, tax-exempt, bank-monopolist aristocrats, who would tear down the flag of the free, make slaves of the laborers and dependents of the producers under the standard of Shylock, waving his scales and brandishing his knife, as the emblems of mammon and the ensign of the money-power. But the people can count their hosts by the millions, and each one of this host, marching upward and onward to labor recompensed, to education secured, to comforts won by industry, to independence obtained by the equalities of law, and to that civilization where want is a stranger and crime a foreigner, will bear aloft the ballot, on which, in letters of living light, the world can read:

The sovereignty of the people is education.

The sovereignty of labor is progress.

The sovereignty of the nation in the sovereignty of the greenback, is independence, prosperity, and the death of all monopolies, subsidies, and privileges.

The national banks would have us pawn our future to the Jew. They would hang around us the remorseless skeleton debt, forever gnawing with its vulture-like greed upon the vitals of our prosperity.

Let us cut the cable. Let the people commune together as the burghers and people of Cambray, and Metz, and Arles, and Narbonne communed. Let us swear as they swore to be free, to submit to no monopolies, to permit no privileged exemptions, to allow no Bankers' Association to regulate, control, or dole out individual money to take the place of national money.

Let us be sovereign to secure education, sovereign to protect labor, sovereign to make the greenback sovereign. To do this, the people must use the ballot, and through it reign. Their souls, though separate, must have but one prayer, acting to one end, inspired by one purpose, and ascending into unity as the wings of the bird bear it into the heavens, moving ever apart and yet ever in unison to secure the reign of equality and the prosperity of justice.

Labor, long docile, must learn the logic of political logic. It must use the ballot. It must demand the right and ask no more. It must reason to secure it, but it must prepare to resist oppression. Capital says, "Work at my wages or we will starve you to it." Power, whether it is clothed in the impersonal impudence of corporate strength or in the self-elated tyranny of brief authority, says, "You yield or we shoot;" "You submit or we kill;" "You work at our wages or you get no work." "You are getting too comfortable; you can eat as the rich eat; you clothe your children as if you were independent. You educate them as if they had a right to hope. You are getting proud. You have a home. We must stop this! You must be contented to live as the European laborer lives." Yes, capital says this, and capital, to carry out its purpose to make labor its slave, combined its power in the Bankers' Association. It is the duty of every laborer, of every producer, of every thinker and of every human being who loves God and humanity better than he loves gold, to put it down, DOWN, DOWN. Let us do it.

STEPHEN D. DILLAYE.

INDIANA NATIONALS.

The State Convention at Indianapolis.

The Convention of the National Greenback party, which assembled at Indianapolis on the 22d of May, was one of the most intelligent political gatherings that ever convened in the State of Indiana. The following ticket was nominated:

Secretary of State—Henry James, of Grant county. He is Master of the State Grange, a former Republican, and will poll the full vote of the party.

Auditor—Jacob F. Bird, of Gibson county, formerly a school-teacher, now a dry-goods clerk. He is an old Democrat.

Treasurer—R. P. Main, of Floyd county, a wholesale grocer in New Albany. He was a Douglas Democrat, but has since, until lately, acted with the Republicans.

Attorney General—David Moss, of Hamilton county. He is an old Democrat, a lawyer in Noblesville, and attorney of the Indianapolis, Peru and Chicago railroad.

Superintendent of Public Instruction—Prof. John Young, of Marion county. He is well known in this State, having been connected for many years with educational interests, and having served one term as Consul at Belfast. In 1858 he made the race for the same office on the Republican ticket.

The platform adopted by the convention demands the abolition of all bank issues, the free coinage of gold and silver, and the issue of full legal-tender paper money in sufficient quantities to do the business of the country; is opposed to all measures looking to the resumption of specie payments; proclaims uncompromising hostility to the system of Government bonded indebtedness, and calls on the Government to use the money now hoarded for resumption to pay and cancel bonds, and that it should make new and liberal issues of money to be applied to the same purpose, and that the issue of future interest-bearing bonds should be prohibited by a constitutional amendment; demands that all legislation should be enacted and so administered as to secure to each man as nearly as possible the just reward of his own labor; denounces all lawlessness, violence and fraud that refuses submission to the will of the people honestly expressed through the ballot; denounces the red-flag Communism imported from Europe, which asks for an equal division of property, and the Communism of national banks, of bond syndicates, and of consolidated railroad corporations, which have secured and are enforcing an unequal division of property, having already divided among themselves $10,000,000,000 of the property of the people by corrupting the representatives and servants of the people; calls on the State to reduce the rate of interest until it shall not exceed an average increase of wealth by productive industry; favors few laws and rigid enforcement; few officials and the payment of just compensation by a fixed salary wherever practicable; denounces as unfair and unjust the district apportionments in the past, and pledges its members of the Legislature to an apportionment that will secure a full and untrammeled expression of the political sentiments of the people.

MONEY—ITS HISTORY AND ITS USES.

BY O. F. BURTON.

Money of Account.—Money of account should be national and current only in the nation that issues it. It should be as nearly devoid of intrinsic value as possible, so that its own value could not be affected by natural laws; then a proper volume to supply the demands of trade could be maintained, unchangeable, as a strictly national money would not be drawn out of circulation and exported to foreign countries, or used in the arts, and thereby create a money panic and depreciate the value of all commodities. The entire volume of such national money would float constantly in the hands of the industrial classes, as an unchangeable standard measure of value, and an even and unfailing supply of the life-giving element to trade and commerce. Prices of all commodities would remain comparatively steady, and the industrial classes would receive the full benefit of their labor.

Idle capital would receive no interest, and bondholders would become as useless as drones in a bee-hive.

Science and Paper Money.—The art of printing has become so nearly perfect that paper money can now be made incomparably superior to any money or currency that has ever been in use. It is light, easy to transport, not subject to loss by abrasion, and in every way tenfold more convenient and economical than metal money. Gold and silver are cumbersome; scarce in nature, extremely fluctuating in supply and consequently in commercial price; possessed of value enough in the arts, when they are money, to cause them to be drawn out of circulation in sufficient quantities to derange the price of all other commodities, and thereby divert the profits of labor from the scanty store of the industrial classes to the overflowing coffers of speculators in money. Gold and silver coins are subject to a heavy loss by abrasion, and they cannot be used in any large commercial transaction without a paper representative. We must recognize the self-evident fact that trade and commerce have overreached the power of exchange in metal money as far as steam has overreached animal power in transportation.

Congress should accept the inevitable at once and exercise that high constitutional prerogative which gives it power to coin paper dollars, and establish them as a standard measure of value in defense of the liberties of the people.

The money that measured the value of the life blood of a million soldiers is worthy to measure the value of any and all other commodities, even to measure out the interest on the plunder of a commune of freebooting bondholders.

True National Money.—Let the Government issue directly to the people, in exchange for national-bank notes, Government bonds and necessary supplies for its support, a volume of paper money fully equal to the entire demands of the internal trade of the nation. Such money should be made a full legal tender for all debts now contracted and not made payable by constitutional law in coin, and it should be made an exclusive legal tender for all debts contracted hereafter.

No stronger redemption qualities can be given to any money than to make it a full legal tender for all debts public and private, for then it would be redeemable on presentation in all the commodities of the nation including gold and silver.

Limit the Volume of Money.—The representative value of the total volume of national money should be permanently fixed in the national constitution upon a basis of not less than $30 per capita. In order to regulate the circulation of such money to suit the demands of trade in brisk and dull seasons, and to prevent speculators in money from locking it up for the purpose of creating a scarcity in circulation, and thereby reducing the value of all commodities for the purpose of speculation, there should be issued with the Government notes, and as a non-circulating portion of the national money, registered certificates of deposit, bearing a rate of interest not exceeding 6 per cent. per annum, and not exceeding in their total representative value one-third of the total representative value of the national money notes. Such certificates should be issued in series and in small denominations, and be made intervertible with the Government notes through the principal postoffices, which would thereby make them a convenient and secure investment for the small surplus-earnings of the laboring classes.

When a scarcity of money occurred the Secretary of the Treasury at his option, or by the duly authorized request of the Chambers of Commerce or the Boards of Trade of two or more of the principal cities of the United States, should be empowered and required to suspend the exchange of the registered certificates for Government notes, and call in the outstanding certificates by lot and series, until there was no longer a scarcity of money in circulation, and then resume the exchange of certificates for notes again. Whenever any series of the certificates were called in, the interest thereon should cease ten days after the call was duly published, and the interest should not be resumed on any certificate called in until it had been returned into the treasury, and had again been exchanged for notes. By limiting the issue of national paper money to the actual demands of trade, and compelling every one to exchange labor or commodities equal in value to the representative value of the paper money before it could be procured, then its utility would impart to it exchangeable value equal at all times to its nominal value.

A 3-65 registered bond made interconvertible with the Government notes might answer the purpose of the registered certificates (most interconvertible men have dropped to 2 per cent. Ed.); but they would have to be limited in their issue the same as the registered certificates. An unlimited issue of 3-65, or any other bonds, would gradually lead to the conversion of a considerable portion of the property of the wealthy classes into such bonds for a permanent investment; and in a few years the nation would be saddled with a debt which would require all the profits of industry to meet the interest, a large portion of which would be drawn from the country. The industrial classes of England are carrying a debt amounting to nearly $4,000,000,000 at 3 per cent.; and an unlimited issue of 3-65 bonds would probably make our national debt in a few years equal to the debt of England. An unlimited issue of Government notes would be as destructive to the welfare of the Government and the people as an unlimited issue of bonds. Paper money like everything else, must be useful to be valuable; and whenever the volume exceeds the demands of trade that moment it will begin to lose its unchangeable value.

When there is a large surplus of paper money floating in the hands of the people, they will offer and urge it in exchange for some kind of property that will bring them an increase; this would lead to a rapid deterioration in the exchangeable value of the money, and to its ultimate destruction as a medium of exchange. An interconvertible certificate would make the surplus money in a dull season always worth 3 per cent. (or whatever the rate was); this, with a positive limit to the issue, would hold the exchangeable value of the balance of the money in circulation at par with its nominal value.

It is an unalterable law of nature that an unlimited supply of anything will render it valueless for commercial purposes.

Air and water are two examples.

If gold and silver were as plentiful as iron, they would have as little commercial value as that metal.

If Government notes were printed in unlimited quantities, they would soon fall to the commercial value of the unprinted paper.

If our present vicious financial system is broken up, the bankers will no doubt endeavor to have an unlimited issue of paper money so as to destroy its value, for the purpose of convincing the people that no system of money can succeed but their barbaric metal system.

The advocates of a true national paper money must by discretion avert such a terrible calamity to the people of this nation.

Conclusions.—1. The Government should issue paper notes directly to the people, on receipt of the substance of the national tax, in quantities limited in the national constitution on a per capita basis.

2. The Government notes should be made the sole legal-tender money of the nation, and the commercial interest on money loaned should be limited in the constitution to 5 per cent. at most.

3. The circulation of the national money should be regulated by an issue of interconvertible registered certificates of deposit, not exceeding one-third of the total value of the notes issued.

4. Gold and silver should be demonetized as legal tenders for payment of all future debts, and they should hereafter be exchanged by weight at their market value, the same as other commodities.

5. The Resumption act, the National-Bank act, and all other acts inconsistent with the provision necessary to carry into effect such a national paper-money system, should be repealed at once.

6. Free banking should be allowed, and the rate of interest on national money should be regulated by an amendment to the constitution.

7. The people should end their financial sufferings at once by enforcing measures which will establish a permanent system of national paper money on the above basis.

Make Them Face the Music.

The gravity of the proposed investigation is increased by the mention of the names of two high officials in connection with the electoral frauds. With those frauds crime was coupled. If John Sherman, Mr. Hayes' Secretary of the Treasury, and Minister Noyes, representing this country in France, are innocent men, they will insist upon an inquiry into charges which arraign them before the country as the accomplices of forgery and perjury. They will appeal to their partisans in the House to promote an investigation by which alone they can be exonerated. For them to shun inquiry themselves is to acknowledge the charges well founded. For their party to shun it, is to condemn these high officials. They must see that the attempt to introduce side issues can in no way help their case, and only strengthens the suspicion that places them under a black cloud.

The issue as made up by the resolution is one which no honest party can shirk. If there are other matters involving questions of party morality proper for Congressional inquiry, the Republicans may propose investigation into them at any time. But they can have nothing to do with the question whether frauds operated positively in the result by which Hayes was counted in, and that is the question with which Congress has to deal. That is the question the country wants answered. The Republicans have denied from the outset the fact that any fraud was committed in either Louisiana or Florida. The Democrats now propose to prove that frauds were committed in both. Keep the Republicans to the issue and make them "face the music."—Trenton True American.

The Shorter Catechism Without Answers.

Why did Hayes nominate Wells to be Surveyor of the port of New Orleans? Why did he make Anderson Deputy Collector there? Why did he make Keener and Casenave Custom Clerks there? Why did he make Stearns, of Florida, Commissioner of Government property at Hot Springs? Why did he nominate McLin for Chief Justice of New Mexico? Why did he nominate Cowgill for a United States Marshalship? Why has he just appointed Packard Consul to Liverpool? Did he do these things, which debauch the civil service, for nothing? Is it only a coincidence that these are the very persons who stole the Presidency? Is it only another coincidence that Noyes, Kasson and Sherman, who told these fellows that, if they put Hayes in, then he should take good care of them, have themselves been placed as Ministers to France and Austria, and Secretary of the Treasury, respectively!—Brooklyn Eagle.

SCHEMING SHERMAN.

An Extraordinary Interview Between the Treasury Secretary and a Louisiana Ex-Secretary.

[Washington Telegram to Chicago Times.]

Nothing more extraordinary has been developed since the Tilden-investigation movement began than the sensational scene that took place to-day in the private office of Secretary Sherman, where James Anderson, formerly Supervisor of East Feliciana parish, openly defied the Secretary and even went so far as to shake a cane in his face. Anderson is understood to be the chief witness in the case against the Secretary, and it has been often stated that he was the witness who could prove the authenticity of Sherman's letter to Webber, the other Feliciana Supervisor, and who was afterward killed. Anderson reached Washington in the morning and was at once set upon by Maj. Marks, of Louisiana, who wants to be Internal Revenue Collector of New Orleans, and who insisted that Anderson must have an interview with the Secretary, hinting pretty broadly that it would be more advantageous to him than to testify before Potter's committee. Anderson finally consented, and they went together at about half-past 1 o'clock. They were shown at once into the Secretary's private office. Maj. Marks advanced toward Secretary Sherman and said: "Mr. Secretary, here is the gentleman of whom we have spoken, Mr. Anderson." Secretary Sherman was seated at his desk, with his attorney, Mr. Shellabarger, at his right. Mr. Anderson did not know at the time that Mr. Shellabarger was the attorney of Mr. Sherman. After the formalities of opening the conversation, Secretary Sherman said to Mr. Anderson:

"Do you know me?"

Mr. Anderson said: "I do."

"Have you ever met me before?"

"I have," was the reply.

"Where have you met me?" said Sherman.

"In New Orleans."

"Do you know of any particular transaction that took place between us during my visit to that State?"

Anderson was about to reply to this when his quick eye caught sight of a short-hand reporter opposite the Secretary busily engaged in taking notes. He started back at once and saw that he was in a trap, and that it was the intention of the Secretary to commit him to some statement in the presence of his lawyer and to go with it before the investigating committee to refute any statement that he might be presumed to make against Mr. Sherman. Anderson then spoke out in a very angry tone of voice, saying, "I did not come up here to talk to a short-hand reporter. I did not come up here at my own request, but at the request of Maj. Marks, and I do not think this is fair treatment. You ask me if anything peculiar took place between us. You know as well as I all about that, and you are just as capable of answering that question as I am. If you want it answered you will have to answer it yourself." Mr. Anderson is a man of very fiery temper, and he hardly waited for a word from the Secretary, when he continued in a very loud tone of voice, "I suppose this trap is only one of your many schemes against me. You know that I know all about that letter that you wrote to Webber, and which is now in the possession of Mrs. Webber. I suppose that you would like to put me out of the way in the same fashion that Webber was, who was guilty of the crime of knowing too much." At this outbreak from the infuriated Anderson, Secretary Sherman sank back into his seat, and did not appear to know what to do. Marks finally endeavored to restrain Anderson, but the latter was beside himself with rage, and would pay no attention. He shook his cane in Sherman's face, and defied him. He said to him, "You have endeavored to intrap me, and, so help me God, I will never speak to another member of this administration, or have anything to do in any way with any of you." After several more passages of a severely denunciatory character, he went out of the room with Maj. Marks, who endeavored to pacify and quiet him down, but it only resulted in a violent quarrel between them.

Settled, Is It?

Investigation has become a necessity whose ponderous proportions no Democrat in Congress, who favors the perpetuity of the Democratic party, dare ignore or disregard. But there seems to be a prevailing purpose not to permit investigation to go forward to its logical consequence of righting the wrong of 1876, and hence the noisy clangor about that sacred title which was conceived in crime and brought forth in fraud. The cautious and always-intelligent correspondent of the Boston Herald says that it is "settled" that investigation will be rigorous, but that, although the fact be proved, as it surely will be proved, that Mr. R. B. Hayes gained the Presidency by the agencies of conspiracy and crime, nothing will be done to disturb him in a position which was obtained by these means. Settled, is it?

We say, as we said in the outset of the confessed crimes that made Rutherford B. Hayes Acting President, never mind that title. Give the country the facts—the whole truth, and nothing but the truth—and then let the public opinion of the country ferment for a season. The conspiracies and crimes alleged against Hayes and his bribed and amply-rewarded retainers fully demonstrated, Democratic gentlemen who hope for glory from the existence of that party may begin to see through the spectacles of such a derided man as Montgomery Blair, or even Benjamin F. Butler, as to whether the monumental crime of the age can be settled in that manner. There is a God in the Democratic Israel yet, as certain men in the country will find, to their sorrow, unless they have a care how they play their little parts in this crisis in Democratic affairs.—Omaha Herald.

District Conference.

The Eleventh Session of the Fort Wayne District Conference of the M. E. Church, convened at this place Monday evening, June 3d, Rev. T. Stabler, Presiding Elder, in the chair.

The following regular pastors were present: Revs. Burwell, A. A. Brown, C. H. Brown, D. M Brown, J. B. Carnes, W. H. Daniels and wife, H. M. Lamport, Wm. Lash, J. M. Mann and wife, H. J. Norris, B. Sawyer, T. Stabler, Rev. Paschal, A. G. McCarter, I. J. Smith, and a number of lay delegates, about seventy persons in all.

Monday evening—Sunday School Mass Meeting, addressed by Messrs. A. A. Brown, Norris, Welch and C. H. Brown. The Sacrament was then administered.

SECOND DAY.

After devotional exercises and roll call, E. M. Brown was re-elected Secretary, and H. M. Lamport and W. H. Daniels, Assistants. Committees were then appointed for the session.

Reports were then made from the various charges in the District.

Revs. Rice, Sanders, and Peddicord were introduced to the Conference and invited to participate.

Huntington was selected for the holding of the next session of the Conference, and recommended that it be held next December

In the aternoon services, A. A. Brown addressed the Conference on the subject, 'The Missionary Societies in our Sunday Schools; their spiritual and financial importance." J. B. Carnes read a paper on the same subject. The subject, "Should children habitually attend more than one Sunday School," was discussed by H. J. Norris and others.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the District held session in the evening, Mrs. H. M. Lamport in the Chair. A report of the condition of the Society was made, and the report of the Secretary and Treasurer was made.

Mrs. C. H. Brown read an able finished address on the subject of Missionary Work. On motion the Presiding Elder was requested to secure the publication of the address in the Christian Advocate and Auburn COURIER.

THIRD DAY.

After devotional exercises the following persons were licensed to preach: T. A. Pattee, J. H. Fry, C. H. Snodgrass and Peter N. Lantz. The licenses of the following were renewed. John Aikins, J. W. Foughty, R. M. Kimsey, and Hiram Parent.

GARRETT, June 3d, 1878.

EDITOR COURIER, Dear Sir—Quite a number of copies of the Waterloo Press were sent to our citizens last Friday, which caused considerable of inquisitiveness as to the object. But their inquiry was soon answered when their attention was called to an article written in defense of the interrogations made from here in the COURIER of May 23d. We wish to state to the editor of the Press that we did not expect those questions belittle, as they are based on facts, and he has shown himself to be an ignorant, officious blackguard to publish such an article on a subject he knows nothing about. We will ask this editor if we have ever stuck our nose in any town affairs out side of our own. What do you know about our town troubles? how much did you get for writing that scurrilous article on a subject you knew nothing about? who paid you for the papers you sent here? or are your coming in as a competitor with the Garrett editor for the championship as an officious blackguard? Do you not think it will pay you to attend to your own town affairs, and keep your nose out of matter that you are ignorant of? Those interrogation points are facts and can be fortified by affidavits with more added to them, so you or any other person can make your best out of it. We challenge you to investigate the matter, and if you wish to do so set the day you will be here, and there will be a committee to wait on you, providing you can come as a gentleman. Now, either come up or shut up, and do not be making an ass of yourself by writing up matters you know nothing about, and sending them to men who are posted on the subject. About the amount of it is this, the editor here was not considered quite blackguard enough to do the subject justice, so the job was let to the next best. W. C.

GARRETT, June 3d, 1878.

EDITOR COURIER. Sir:—Inasmuch as your patience has undoubtedly been severely tried by several lengthy, though well justified articles from your correspondents here in regard to our election and corporation matters, I will, in taking liberty to trouble you once, try, not to be the hair that will break the camel's back, but be as brief as possible in my remarks, for which I hope you will find room in your ever welcome COURIER.

Mr. Powell, editor of the Garrett Herald, in an article appearing in his paper of May 30th, headed "Town Board Meeting," has used my name repeatedly in a manner, which I think will justify the few personal remarks I am about to make. The bond question alluded to in that article is a plain fraud, a regular "thimble-rig" game, played by that conspicuous majority of the Board under the advice of Mr. Covell, justifying any language used by me in trying to prevent the perpetration of such fraud, and I have no doubt but that a court of justice will convince Mr. Powell together with the whole clique, that a lie, though ever so well stuck to, even by three or four, will never make truth, because the truth will have to come to light some time. But knowing the fact that Mr. Powell was not present at that meeting of the Board, and undoubtedly received his report from a party to whom he is looking for some of the spoils of office, I can and will readily pardon him for the slurs thrown at me, if the few citizens who were present at said meeting, will excuse him for the following, which appears as a conclusion to the above mentioned article, to-wit: "The room was quite full of the 'unterrified' and resembling some times the boisterous appearance of the lower House of Congress, except the rebels were a minority. The Marshal kept very good order, however. Knock-downs were not resorted to." This is the language he uses about seven or eight of his fellow citizens of both political parties, who, having heard of the attempt to approve an unlawful Treasurers bond with no legal surety, came to see how the men they had helped to put in office would care for and promote the interest of their constituents, but who (Mr. Covell excepted) were all as quiet during the whole time of the meeting as men could be, none of them moved from their seats, spoke a word or took any part whatever in any business, and yet, fellow citizens, this conglomeration of questionable wisdom, honor, decency, education and property of an editor who is soliciting your patronage, seems to think that he has just cause to call you "a boisterous crowd of rebels," whom the Marshal kept in order. Now, while such may not be unbecoming language for an editor of his grade, I would inquire how you like it, fellow citizens? But there will be no cause for complaints of that kind hereafter, inasmuch as said majority of the Board of Trustees have ordained that the meetings shall hereafter be held at Mr. Covell's office in his private residence, so that if any of you should ever dare to show any interest in the town business, that legal gentleman (?) can show you the way out by law, or close the door and keep you out. Again I must ask you fellow citizens, how do you like such treatment? or how do you like the Treasurers (Mr. Bryant's) bond of $5000 with Mr. S. H. Morse (one of the Board of Trustees) as the only freehold surety, secretly and forcibly approved by Mr. Morse as Trustee, whose taxable property according to his sworn statement on the Assessor's list, real, personal, bank and all is valued at $1,821, yet the Garrett Herald says: "Mr. Morse pays about one-fourth of all the taxes of Garrett, and he approves of the bonds, and it is those fellows that have no property that are the most interested. They fear the Treasurer will get away with their poll tax before they work it out on the road." All I have to say in answer to that gentle hint is, that while I do not claim to be in possession of any wealth myself, but acknowledge to be poor, it is my opinion, that neither the editor of the Garrett Herald nor some of his friends have any more just cause to fear that anybody will get away with any property belonging to them, then myself, and while according to an old saying poverty is no sin, it is very inconvenient to be honest, but very disgraceful to be dishonest.

In another little squib, headed "Disgraceful," he speaks of "half a dozen bummers," having reference to the correspondents of the COURIER, and says they are the worst element our town contains. It is my opinion, that if the half dozen "bummers" had had the chance to hold important and well paying rail road offices, that, while some of them would be holding them now, and others might have also improved their opportunity of speculating and dealing in jobs, positions and passes, the proceeds of which would also enable them to step around in broadcloth acting the swell and playing off wealthy. Under those circumstances they would be called gentleman, no difference how much rascality they might have planned and carried out, but as they work for an honest living, they are called "bummers."

But I promised to be brief and must close, but will in due time give a full account of this bond business and other transactions of this majority of the Board. Begging your pardon Mr. Editor, I leave it for my fellow citizens of this community to decide whether or not I am justified in making my remarks so personal. Waterloo Press please take notice. J. W. WAGONER.

The Press disclaims any responsibility in communications inserted in that paper, and we believe it is the proper position to hold. But in another column it charges the COURIER in taking part in the controversey at Garrett, when we have not said a word on either side. If the Press is not responsible for the opinions of its correspondents, it ought not to hold the COURIER to such a line.

AUBURN, IND., May 21, 1878

EDITOR COURIER—Having discovered that the charges made by me in an article published in these columns last fall, affecting the moral character and the standing as a physician of Dr. J. B. Casebeer, are not supported by the fact that I was led to believe by my informers when I wrote the article, I cheerfully retract the charges made in said article, and ask you to publish this for me.

Yours, A. R. BOLLAR.

The Waterloo Cornet band will please accept our thanks for a delightful serenade, which they tendered us last Thursday evening. The boys are making admirable progress in their music, and their excellent playing here on Memorial Day, received many deserved compliments. The members are all clever, good looking, well behaved gentlemen, and create a good impression, a very desirable feature in an organization of this kind.

The Kellogg concert at Fort Wayne last Friday evening was a grand affair, and quite a number from this place were in attendance. When called out Miss Kellogg sang "Way Down Upon the Swanee River," to the delight of all present. No one can form an idea what music there is in this little ballad until they hear one sing it as above. Mr. Conly, the bass singer, had a superior voice and sang splendidly. Miss Roze was good, but does not excell where Kellogg reigns. The tenor singer did not meet expectations.

The Waterloo Press does us great in justice when it says we forced the sheriff to cut off all patronage from a democratic paper at Garrett. Not one single word passed between Sheriff St. Clair, and our self on the subject, and, we can easily prove by the deputy that we readily assented that the paper there should have all sales occurring in the neighborhood, and which went there until that officer was misrepresented and villified by Dr. Parker. We believe Mr. Baxter does not mean to misrepresent us, and trust he will look up the facts and state them.

Mr. A. J. Ralston was at Mansfield, Ohio las Friday, when Webb, the negro murderer was hung. Webb had killed several of a family named Finney, in December last, and was convicted on the testimony of a little girl who saw him enter her room with a lamp in his hand, a few minutes before the horrible deed was committed. Jack says the gallows was surrounded by a high inclosure, but the crowd was determined to see the villian hanged, and they made a rush for it. Taking the guns of about sixty soldiers who were there for its protection, they soon battered it down. Webb was a black, burly negro, and stepped upon the stage as though it was the proudest moment of his life.

The admirable essay, written and recited by Mrs. C. H. Brown, of Monroeville, at the M. E. church last Tuesday evening before the District Conference, on the subject of Missionary Work, was pronounced by all to be the finest effort in that direction ever listened to in this part of the State. Classical, chaste, refined; beautiful in conception, teeming with bright thoughts, elegantly expresed, it charmed and captivated the entire audience. It was delivered in a superb manner, a deep sympathy with her subject animating the speaker, whose pure articulation and subdued intonation gave it an inconceivable force and effect. We will give it in full next week.

Memorial Day.

Though the weather on last Thursday morning, was anything but inviting, yet the attendance at the decoration was quite large in the afternoon. The line formed at one o'clock, with the Waterloo band at the head, and marched to the cemetery, where an eloquent, well written address was delivered by Gen. Blair. After reading the names of the deceased soldiers, forty little girls, all dress in white, loaded with wreaths, crosses and bouquets, marched to the grave of each soldier, and left the offering of a grateful people. This part of the ceremony was very beautiful and impressive. The choir sang several appropriate pieces, and the band furnished some good music. The programme was short, and was carried out in a neat and tasty manner.

A Horrible Affair.

Last Wednesday the dead body of John Scott Harrison, the son of a President and honored citizen of the Ohio Valley and beloved member of society, was laid to rest in Congress Green Cemetery alongside the tomb of his President father, whose name the great country delights to revere. On Friday his son climed to the top story of the Ohio Medical College, at Cincinnati, in search of a stolen body of a young friend who had died a few days since, and removing a cloth from the face of a corpse in one of the dissecting rooms, discovered beneath the horrid mask the features of his dead father, the son of President Harrison, and father of Gen. Ben Harrison of this State. It seems that when they got into the dissecting room they found a windlass and rope which was let down through a shaft in the floor, and attached to which was a body. They raised it up, but Mr. Harrison said it was not the body of the friend he was hunting for, and whose grave had been robbed, as he died with consumption and was more emaciated than this corpse. The detective advised him to look at the face over which was a cloth. The body was then raised out of the well, the trap-door dropped beneath and the body lowered upon it. The rope had been rudely tied about the body below one arm, and as it drew upward pressed the head forward, the blood streaming from an incision in the neck. Loosening the rope

THE BODY FELL TO THE FLOOR,

the light from the window directly over the head shining directly upon the head and shoulders. Mr. Harrison gently

RAISED THE COVERING FROM THE FACE OF THE DEAD.

It revealed the face of an old man, with full, white beard, cut squarely off an inch below the chin, white hair closely cut at the back, a face discolored by the pressure of the rope and by rough handling from those by whom he had been dragged from the grave. "An old man," remarked somebody; and Mr Harrison stooped down to take a parting look at the face, when suddenly a change come over his countenance, the blood fled from his face, and he seemed about to fall to the floor. "What's the matter," said Colonel Snelbaker, as he stepped quickly to his relief. Still Mr. Harrison was silent, his blanched face still growing paler, as with eyes starting from the sockets he gaze upon the face of the dead man before him, supporting himself upon the arm of the detective, until finally, recovering himself, he gasped:

"IT'S FATHER,"

and sank, almost unconscious, into the arms of his attendants. Only an hour before he had detailed to Colonel Snelbaker the care taken to prevent the possibility of robbery of his father's grave, and now without the slightest warning or expectation, he was confronted with the mutilated body of his father. The first shock over, and Mr. Harrison having sufficiently recovered his self-command, he immediately prepared for the removal of the body to an undertakers.

The Garrett Herald says the COURIER shows its hostility to Garrett, by publishing communications from that point. In the last six months we have added about thirty-five new subscribers to our list at that place, among them as good citizens as can be found in the town. We have never personally written a line derogatory to the character of our neighbor, and have always felt a friendly interest in that locality. All that has appeared in the COURIER has come from citizens of Garrett, men who have done as much for the town as those who denounce them as bummers. While we have never uttered a word of reproach against any of its citizens, the Herald has abused and villified, without stint, men who have done more for the town in a month than the Herald has during its entire existence. This thing of characterizing citizens as rebels and bummers may be regarded as brilliant on the part of a newspaper, but it will not go down with the people. The columns of the COURIER are ever open for the redress of any grievances the people may have, and blackguardism from any other journal will not deter us from giving them benefit of an extensive circulation.

AUBURN, IND., June 1st, 1878.

To the First Baptist Church of Auburn, Indiana:

DEAR BRETHREN:—On account of the inability of the church to raise a sufficient salary for the ensuing year, I herewith tender my resignation as Pastor of this church, said resignation to take effect September 10, 1878. In so doing I desire to express my devout thanks to Almighty God that he has given me seals to my ministry while among you. I also desire to publicly express my heart-felt thanks for your earnest and untiring labors in season and out of season. Also for your tender sympathy, and christian love extented to me at all times, but especially midst my hours of deepest grief. I also desire publicly to express my attachment to, and deep solicitude for the future welfare of this church, and that the Lord may add to you "spiritual members," and that you may grow and increase in all things which pertain to life and godliness; and that the Lord Jesus may speedily send you "a man after his own heart" as my successor, is the prayer of your retiring pastor.

AUBURN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Superintendent's Annual Report for 1877--78.

To the School Board,—Gentlemen,

I herewith submit to you my second annual report for the school year beginning September 3rd, 1877, and ending May 24th, 1878.

1. Whole number of days taught	189.
2. Number of pupils of school age as shown by last enumeration	513
3. No. of pupils enrolled during the year	460
4. Average number belonging	303.3
5. Average daily attendance	270.3
6. Average percent of attendance	88.5

REMARK:—The above figures, in themselves considered, (and they should be considered in no other way,) do not exhibit a very [illegible] result. The average daily attendance, as compared with the aggregate enrollment, is low. If however, we compare these figures with the corresponding figures taken from the school statistics of other cities and towns, the comparison is generally found to be in our favor. The following instances are given as illustrations:

No. of children of school age—Grand Rapids, [illegible]; St. Louis, [illegible]; Terre Haute, [illegible]; Albany, N. Y., 26,898; Dayton, 14,824; Auburn, 513.

No. enrolled in the school.—Grand Rapids, 5,805; St. Louis, 32,658; Terre Haute, 3,347; Albany, N. Y., 10,860; Dayton, 5,776; Auburn, 460

Percentage of enrollment on enumeration.—Grand Rapids, .64; St. Louis, .28; Terre Haute .554; Albany, N. Y., .38; Dayton, .39; Auburn, .895.

Average daily attendance—Grand Rapids, 3,060; St. Louis, 20,479; Terre Haute, 2,556; Albany, N. Y., 6,179; Dayton, 3,002; Auburn, 2,703.

Percentage of attendance on enrollment—Grand Rapids, .54; St. Louis, .60; Terre Haute, .70; Albany, N. Y., .57; Dayton, .84; Auburn, .59

REMARK:—It is thus seen that our percentages of enrollment and attendance compare favorably with those of other places. It must be said, however, that the greatest evil in the schools of Auburn is irregularity in attendance on the part of the pupils—an evil which is attributed not to necessity, but to a lack of appreciation on the part of parents, of the damaging effects of irregular attendance.

COST OF SCHOOLS.

1. Teachers' salaries	$3,244 11
2. Janitors salary	221 00
3. Fuel	125 00
4. Incidentals	50 00
Total	$3,640 11

PERMANENT SCHOOL PROPERTY.

1. New school building	$10,000 00
2. Ward " "	1,500 00
3. School grounds	2,500 00
4. Out buildings	600 00
5. School furniture	820 00
6. Furnaces	400 00
7. Bell and gong	187 00
8. Fuel on hand	50 00
9. Books and apparatus	50 00
Total,	$16,107 00
Interest on value of permanent school property for the year at 8 per cent	$1,288 56
Sum of current expenses brought over	3,640 11
Grand total of expenses for the year	$4,928 67

Dividing the total of expenses for the year by 460, the number of pupils enrolled, the cost per capita of enrollment is found to be $10 71.

We append the annual cost per capita of enrollment in a few other places:

Fort Wayne, $11 56; St. Louis, $22 05; Lafayette, $15 52; Terre Haute, $21 30 and Milwaukee, $9 77.

By the most accurate computation we have been able to make, we find the cost per capita of enrollment in the high school to be $19.92. The cost per capita of number belonging [average] is $33.30. In Fort Wayne high school the latter figure is $50.01, exclusive of the cost of special teachers.

THE HIGH SCHOOL.

Whole number enrolled during the year	59
Average number belonging	35.5
" daily attendance	32.1
" percent of attendance	90.1

The results of the work in the high school department this year are highly satisfactory. Although the higher classes were small, the curriculum of studies was rigidly followed, with a view to the graduation of a class by the end of next year. It is believed to be better to pursue such a course than to modify the work with each succeeding term. To my mind the thing most needful to the success of Auburn high school, is greater permanence of work and organization. There have been too many changes. The character of the school has been too temporary The time has come when the high school of Auburn should be understood to be a permanent institution, with a settled curriculum of studies and an organization, such as to enable it to graduate a class each year. Then will it be a fitting crowning piece for the school system of the town, and a powerful stimulus to exertion in all the other grades. Let no measures be taken that can impair its efficiency.

THE INTERMEDIATE AND PRIMARY GRADES.

In these departments the work done during the year was, in general, commendably efficient. In the D primary grade some difficulty was experienced at the beginning of the last term in grading a large number of children, who then entered the schools for the first time. The difficulty, and the manner in which it was met, suggest the recommendation that hereafter that grade be allowed to constitute a school in itself, and that it be divided into three sections separated by one terms' work.

FINAL EXAMINATIONS AND PROMOTIONS.

These were much more largely attended this year than last, and with good results. In reporting the number of promotions from the several grades I am obliged to omit the C and D intermediate grades, on account of an irregularity in their examination in arithmetic, which will render it necessary to examine them again in that subject before their fitness for promotion can be determined.

In concluding this report an expression of my thanks are due to my associate teachers for their efficient co-operation in bringing the work of the year to a successful issue and to the several members of the school board for their support and uniform kindness.

Respectfully submitted,
M. SEILER, Sup't.

Andrew H. Dill, was nominated for Governor in Pennsylvania. The State platform demands that further contraction of United States legal tender notes is unwise and unnecessary—that they should be received for custom duties—that gold, silver and United States legal tender notes at par therewith are the just basis for a fair circulation. Opposed to national banks, and favor treasury notes issued in exchange for bonds bearing a low rate of interest, as the best from of paper currency based upon the credit of the government.

Garrett Items.

—The two boys who were injured by the explosion of a torpedo, week before last, are improving and strong hopes are entertained of their recovery.

—A team hitched to a wagon with a small boy in it, ran away here last Saturday. It was a terrible sight to see the child tossed up and around as the team flew over planks and gutters. Every person expected to see the child killed, but they were fortunately caught Mr. Embrey's butcher, about one square south of the depot. The childs head and face was bruised some, but not very bad.

—The town board met in regular session last Monday evening and a few citizens who have invested in property here went to attend the meeting, conducted themselves in a gentlemanly manner by keeping good order, and then on Thursday, when the Garrett "Astonisher" came out, which is published by the black swamp gorilla, they were scandalized in a contemptible manner for putting in their appearance before that learned and intelligent body As the caucus was held in secret, we suppose from the tone of the "Astonisher," that the meetings of the town board are to be held hereafter in secret also, and those who have bought property will have to get a permit from O. J Powell, or they cannot be admitted. This is the man who is publishing the "Astonisher," for the benefit of Garrett, and growling because we can resent his insults through the COURIER. This is the man who went to the Emanuel church, occupied the front seat, listened to an able sermon delivered by the right Rev. D. L. Trumble, never paid one nickle to the support of that gentleman, who contributed the only reading matter that ever appeared in his paper worth reading, and then was the first man to try to cut the gentleman's throat behind his back; whose shoes he is in no wise worthy to lace, and yet we are all bummers if we do not take him for our counsel.

—Now a few words about our school: A good school, well managed is a credit to any town or community. So also is a good newspaper, but a poor school with which the majority of the parents are dissatisfied is not much of a credit anywhere. So with a newspaper that devotes its columns to blackguarding the citizens of the town in which it is published, is a disgrace to the town. The following is a list of names who have been dissatisfied with the management of the school:

Mr. Fordyce, Mr Rowe, Mr. Wagoner Mr. Galloway, Mr. Cady, Mr. Koontz, Mr. Lantz, Mr. Loar, Mr. Sargent, Mr. Farnsworth, Mr. Boardman, Mr. Mills, Mr. Moses, Mr. Groves, Mr. Caldwell, Mr. Shelter, Mr. Long, Mrs. Nunn, Mrs. Slusser. If any of us would keep one of our children at home one day, send them the next with a written excuse that we had necessarily detained them at home with our name attached, the excuse would be sent back to us with the instructions that it was not satisfactory, that it did not state what we had detained them for, and that they would have to apply to the board of trustees to be admitted back in the school. One young lady about fifteen was kept at home two days, sent back with an excuse, and was sent home with the excuse it was not satisfactory. Applications were made to the trustees and they would not accept it. Another about the same age was treated in the same manner—could not be admitted as the teacher and trustees all agreed that she would be an imposition on the school on account of her advancement. She wished to study algebra.

A sixteen thousand dollar school house was forced on the tax-payers of the town, but if our children wish to study algebra it is an imposition on the school. We could give dozens of such cases of space would permit, but let us examine the other side of the case. A great many of us are working for the railroad company, have to work ten hours a day and twenty-six days for a month or two hundred and sixty hours. If we loose one hour we are docked. The teachers which we are paying out of our hard earnings, who are our servents, employed to teach our children, have six hours a day to serve, and twenty days for a month or one hundred and twenty hours. We find we have one hundred and forty hours more in a month to serve than they have and cannot take one hour unless at our expense, and yet these teachers who are in our service, can, and have left here on the trains Thursday nights, absent themselves from service till Monday morning and never ask us for an excuse who are laboring hard to pay them, but if we keep one of our children at home one day, thereby loosing the advantages of the school which we are paying for, there is a fuss kicked up if we do not tell these teachers what our children are kept at home to do. We can give the names of several children who have been kept at home on account of the cruelty in the school room. We do not expect an answer from our editor on this subject. He may possibly try to answer it by calling us all bummers, or say by the "horned spoons" he don't know of any one that is dissatisfied with the school.

A TAX-PAYER.

U can make money faster at work for us than at anything else. Capital not required; we will start you. $12 per day at home made by the industrious. Men, women, boys and girls wanted everywhere to work for us. Now is the time. Costly outfit and terms free. Address True & Co., Augusta, Maine.

THE DOOR-STEP.

BY E. C. STEDMAN.

The conference meeting through at last,
We boys around the vestry waited,
To see the girls come flitting past,
Like snowbirds willing to be mated.
Not braver he that leaps a wall
By level musket-flashes litten,
Than I who stepped before them all,
Who longed to see me get the mitten.

But no—she blushed and took my arm
We let the old folks take the highway,
And started toward the Maple Farm,
Along a kind of lovers' byway.
I can't remember what we said;
'Twas nothing worth a song or story,
Yet that rude path by which we sped
Seemed all transformed in glory.

The snow was crisp beneath our feet,
The moon was full, the fields were gleaming;
By hood and tippet sheltered sweet,
Her face with youth and health was beaming.
The little hand outside her muff—
Oh, sculptor, if you could but mold it!—
So lightly touched my jacket cuff,
To keep it warm I had to hold it.

To have her with me there alone,—
'Twas love and fear and triumph blended;
At last we reached the foot-worn stone
Where the delicious journey ended.
The old folks, too, were almost home;
Her dimpled hand the latches fingered;
We heard the voices nearer come,
Yet on the door-step still we lingered.

She shook her ringlets from her hood,
And with a "thank you, Charles," dissembled,
But yet I knew she understood
With what a darling wish I trembled.
A cloud passed kindly overhead;
The moon was slyly peeping through it,
Yet hid its face, as if it said,
"Come, now or never! do it! do it!"

My lips till then had only known
The kiss of mother and of sister,
But, somehow, full upon her own
Sweet, rosy, darling mouth I kissed her.
Perhaps 'twas boyish love, yet still,
Oh, listless woman, weary lover,
To feel once more that fresh, wild thrill
I'd give—but who can live youth over?

FARMER WATERS' APPLES.

It made no little stir in Cranston when it was rumored about that Farmer Waters had been heard to say, in the presence of some twenty or more persons, that whoever he had the good luck to find meddling with his early fruit he would treat in a manner not over and above palatable. No little stir, I say, it occasioned, because the good people of the thriving, populous village all wanted to learn (as all such good people do) who the trespasser upon the grounds of the richest farmer in the village might be.

But in vain each man looked into his neighbor's face for some trace of guilt, and eyed askance every rollicking youngster that walked along the street—nothing could be learned of the unruly marauders; till at last the villagers hinted that the wealthy bachelor was more frightened than hurt, and that he only raised the outcry to frighten thieves away from his premises; that no one would dare to venture through the plantations, or get within the shadow of the old, solemn, ghostly-looking grange, for the sake of a few early apples.

But there was a little mystery about the affair that the people of Cranston could not see through; not that it was so very deep and profound that it was proof against all solution; on the contrary, it was the simplest matter in the world—or would have been, I mean, if they had known how to solve it. For that part it was just like any other puzzle. They could easily conceive the possibility and probability of a wild set of mischievous urchins or frolicsome young men, and even a company of unprincipled vagabonds, disturbing the quiet of the farmer's orchard, but further than that their ideas could not find a way. Had they been told in confidence that the morning after the depredation there were innumerable tracks of tiny, dainty shoes upon the green turf and soft, brown soil of the shrubbery, that in one place was found a small kid glove, and in another quite a bit of a cambric handkerchief, with the name of the owner delicately traced in the corner—had they been told this, I say, they would have better understood the quiet way in which the owner treated the robbery, and the profound silence which he kept when the subject was discussed in his presence. But they did not know, and so they scouted at the whole affair, or at least as much as they dared, when the richest and most honored man in the village was concerned.

But, one day, when the little wonder had quite died out in the village, to those who knew "the signs of the times" there seemed an event of some importance brewing. All day, in the old brick house opposite, the laughing, mischievous school-girls were knotted together in various places, chatting in low, confidential tones. School over, the merriest of the lot sat down upon the green turf and bent their bright heads together, and said so many funny things, and made such a number of comical suggestions upon the matter which they were discussing that the whole air rang with their laughter. Just over the way from the young ladies' academy the stately house of Mr. Waters gleamed out from the plantations and shrubbery that surrounded it—looking so royal and grand, so like some old, ancient castle, with its arching porticos and snowy turrets, and above all so formidable and threatening in its aspect, that none but a set of madcap school-girls would have dared plan against its peace and quiet.

But, from the many roguish glances and bright, suggestive smiles that were directed toward it during the day, it was quite evident that the old mansion and its grounds was the subject of their thoughts and plans. At night the question was proved beyond a doubt, for when the village was still and quiet, and the moon sailed clearly up the blue steep of the sky, pouring her rain of silvery light upon the old grange, a strange procession of reckless, merry lasses stole into the wide, old gate that led through the principal avenue of the formal old garden to the coveted orchard.

For awhile as they wound along the shady walk they were silent and cautious, hardly daring to breathe a sentence above a whisper; but each moment they gained courage, and before they had traversed half through the grounds their mirth got the better of their fears, and they laughingly joined their daring leader in a plan to capture the owner, if he should trouble them.

"The one that shall catch him first shall have him," broke in a light, musical voice above the buzz and laughter of the party.

"Good, good!" answered another; "but that will be Kate Weston, our Capt. Kate, I am sure, for she can outrun any girl in Cranston. Why, girls, she goes it like a deer!"

"Hush, hush!" Capt. Kate turned about suddenly as she spoke, and held one white hand up threateningly toward the party. "If you mention the old ogre's name, he'll be sure to be out here. Remember, his apples are dearer to him than his gold; for, like many men, he thinks more of having his stomach well filled than his pocket."

How beautiful she looked, standing up there in the full, clear moonlight—brilliant, daring Kate Weston! There was a deal of pride about her slender, willowy form—in the way she carried her perfect head, flashed her great hazel eyes, and curved her tempting rosebud mouth. And now, as she spoke of Farmer Waters, her whole face seemed to glow with an expression nearly akin to scorn. For some reason, no one knew what, she had taken a bitter dislike to the great man of the village. Her very first impression of him was an unfavorable one, she used to say. When she met him one afternoon, as she was returning from a walk, he had stopped a friend to ask about her, and that, too, in such a loud tone that she could not, had she willed it, remain ignorant of what he was saying. She had heard his companion give her history in short, detached sentences. "Poor orphan—delicately reared—well educated—very beautiful and talented—proud—living with a poor relation on the outskirts of the village," were the words that fell upon her ear as she swept haughtily by them.

After that she had been introduced to the handsome, wealthy young farmer at a school picnic. She knew that the presentation had first been suggested by him; and, though she met his courteous, gentlemanly advances with a quiet, easy dignity, at heart she was repulsing him all the while.

Perhaps he was conscious of this, for he was more than usually winning and pleasing in his addresses, even when he saw in what a bitter, satirical way she cut down his finest and most polished sentiments, quietly making them the food of her merriment. This was not all, either. It was not enough that Kate should have all the enjoyment of the day spoiled for her; but she must work herself up into such a passion as to lay awake half that night, in order to sob it away from her naughty, perverse little heart.

Poor Kate! And that was not all, either. On St. Valentine's day some one had annoyed her by sending for her acceptance one of the prettiest, daintiest little rings imaginable, within the expanding bud of a blush-rose valentine. And then the most puzzling of anything about it was that it was posted at Cranston, where she did not know a single gentleman who could afford to send her a present of so much worth. She had vowed, at first, never to wear it; but, after a while, when she found that it looked so pretty upon her slender white finger, and improved her taper hand so much, she gave up, and did not allow it to go a single moment from her sight. And, better still, she used sometimes to press the dainty circlet to her lips, and then pout and put on the haughtiest of all her ways to make up for her foolishness.

So it was that matters went on between the proud, gentlemanly young farmer and the brilliant, beautiful Kate, until the affair of purloining the apples was brought to notice. Kate could not brook a threat, and, when the young farmer's cartel reached her, she headed the little group of her school friends for a second attack.

Kate looked very beautiful, standing there in the clear, silvery moonlight, holding up one white hand menacingly toward her watching band of followers.

"Pshaw, Kate! don't let's try to keep still! Let him chase us if he likes, and see what he'll catch," sounded the pleasant, musical voice of little Lucy Smiles. "I don't believe I shall drop another glove for him to pick up, let me run ever so fast. I hope he was pleased with my name stamped upon the wrist."

"He didn't trouble himself much about you or your name, I'll wager you, when he had Kate's dainty 'kerchief to wear next his heart. That isn't the best of it; there was a specimen of her handwriting upon one corner of it, and, if he isn't as blind as a bat, he'll see who favored him with the bushel May-basket made out of cabbage heads. Kate wrote the verses," retorted Mary Prince, laughing and clapping her hands.

"Hush! say, girls. You mustn't run on so; I don't want to be caught without any apples," said Kate. "So speak low, if you cannot keep from talking. We are almost there now. Hush! See the ripe, yellow fruit glistening in the clear moonlight!"

Kate tiptoed up to the little thicket of trees, followed by the hushed group.

"After all, I don't believe there is any use in keeping so still," she said, looking around. "It seems too much like downright stealing, instead of graciously condescending to test our neighbor's hospitality. So help yourselves, dears, while I preside as well as I can, in place of the gentleman himself. No doubt he'll thank me for it when—he gets a chance!"

"Perhaps, after all, he's hid in this thicket of trees, and when we get to helping ourselves, as you say, he'll come jumping out here in the very midst of us," suggested some one, in a timid voice.

"Pshaw! Don't fear, Hattie. Why, we'll frighten him to death in five minutes if he ventures to show his head. There! take this apple—and this—and this. Catch them as fast as I throw them. That's brave! Stand out where you are, and, if you hear any noise, why, run!" cried Kate, turning again to the tree. "Here—catch my hat, and bring me some leaves. I am going to ornament my hair for the occasion."

She twined the dark leaves in and out her glossy braids, and then, looping a fairy white apron upon one arm, commenced filling it with apples.

"One for Elly Gray, two for Dame 'Lizabeth, three for little Bobby, and the nice big bouncer for me! Thank you, thank you, Mr. Waters! The company beg me to tender you in their behalf their—their—what's that, girls?"

As Kate spoke, there was a little crackling noise among the apple boughs in the thicket at her back, and before she had time to sound an alarm young Waters bounded out in the very midst of the frightened girls, who ran, screaming lustily, in every direction. But could there have been an eye witness to the comical scene, it would have been very easily observed that the farmer cared little about capturing any save their wild, reckless leader. Down the long avenue Kate flew like the wind, with the dignified bachelor following closely after her. Faster, faster she went, her long, glossy braids falling about her face and down her shoulders—her light scarf, like a banner of rosy mist, floating out upon the breeze as she flew along. Faster, faster! Another moment passed and she was within a single leap of the wide gate. But her pursuer was there before her, and, like a frightened deer, she sprung away in a different direction. There was another gate that led from the west side of the grounds, and like lightning she shot toward it. But oh! horror of horrors! It was locked fast! She turned about again, but the enemy was closely upon her track, and there was no hope of escape for her. Panting and trembling, she stood silent until he came up to her.

"Permit me to escort you to the house, Miss Weston," he said, bowing low before her, and speaking as though nothing in the world had happened to mar his self-possession.

"No, I thank you, sir; I will go home, if you please."

Kate's voice shook as she spoke, and she fairly reeled as she made an attempt to take a few steps forward.

"I cannot permit you to go home while you are so weary," said he, courteously. "You cannot walk without assistance, even. Lean on my arm; in a moment we shall reach the house."

But Kate did not accept his aid willingly, and so he went forward, and, gently putting his arm about her, drew her toward the house. Her breath came freer and easier in a moment's time, and, when she stood within the old oak entrance-hall she was quite herself again.

"I will go no further, if you please, sir," she said, pausing there and giving a hurried glance over her deranged toilet.

"This to a man of my hospitality, Miss Weston? This way, if you please."

He threw open a door into a small sitting-room, and motioned her to enter. When she went hesitatingly forward, he drew a large easy-chair up before the window, and begged her to be seated.

"O, but our fruit!" said he. "Excuse me for not relieving you before of the burden."

Kate crimsoned to the very roots of her hair as he pointed to her apron of apples, which she still held looped up over her arm. The next moment he had gathered them into a fruit-dish, and was ringing for plates and knives.

"Excuse me, sir, but I cannot remain longer," said Kate, rising, and giving a little flash of light into his face.

"But I shall insist upon it," said he. "I have a moral right to detain you to-night, remember."

"Or would have, perhaps, if I was not able to purchase my own ransom," said Kate. "I think I understand you. May I ask at what price you value your fruit?"

She drew her purse from her pocket with one hand, and pointed to the fruit with the other.

Mr. Waters' lip curled for a moment, and his steady eyes burned beneath their perfect brows with a deeper light; but, when he spoke, his voice was as firm and mellow as though the faintest ripple of passion had never broken over its quiet surface.

"By the peck those apples are worth—let me see—some 5 shillings at the early season of the year. Perhaps I can afford a discount upon the price, since you have taken so large a quantity."

"No, no, sir, do not rebate the smallest fraction upon them, as you value your happiness!" said Kate. "If I have not enough money in my purse, I can apply to some friend to lend me the remainder."

"Miss Weston!" said the young farmer, and he spoke her name in a low, stern voice.

"You choose well, sir, I am sure," said Kate. "Among the score of girls who visited your orchard to-night, I am the only one who has not some friend to buy them from the unhappy consequences of this adventure. There is my purse, sir!"

She threw the small purse upon the carpet at his feet as she spoke, and then, ashamed of her ungenerous words and her high flow of passion, burst into tears.

"Miss Weston!" The voice was a little tremulous now, but it detracted nothing from its deep sternness. He stepped in front of the door as he spoke, as he divined an intention on the part of Kate to glide from the room.

"A moment, if you please—I will not detain you long," he said, inclining his head toward her. "I believe you too true and generous, Miss Weston, to think me guilty of such meanness as you have just ascribed to me. I am sure that for a long time you have known me better. If you have not, it is not my fault. For a long time I have been interested in you. Your face pleased me when I first looked upon it, and I felt that it was no common soul, no poor spirit, that spoke out eloquently from your features. It may have been weak in a man, much your senior in years, to follow you about, though I have endeavored to treat you with the courtesy and respect which were yours by right, as I have esteemed you very highly; have, I am almost afraid, by the little pang I feel at my heart to-night, been allowing myself to love you, even. That is all. I promise you as a true gentleman that I will not annoy you any more. You may go now."

He stepped aside from the door to allow Kate to pass out, but she stood before him without moving to go, while the willful tears still broke up from the depths of her beautiful eyes and fell upon her cheeks.

"I will not detain you longer," he repeated, hesitatingly, seeing that she stood immovable and silent.

She drew up her haughty head as he spoke, and dashed the burning tears from her cheeks; then she started forward without looking up into his face. For a moment she tottered upon the threshold, pressing her slender fingers over her wet eyes, and then turned back again to her host, who stood with his head bent toward her.

"I—I—do not want to go!" she cried, springing back to him, and holding out both white hands to meet his eager, passionate grasp.

Then—then—but the rich young farmer is too reticent and great a personage for me to meddle with this one delicious little love scene of his life. You must imagine the rest yourself, dear reader. All I can say is that Kate Weston became Mrs. Waters in consequence of the affair of the apples.

Origin of the Cardiff Giant Fraud.

That great hoax, the Cardiff giant, was conceived by one George Hull, a tobacconist of Binghamton, N. Y. It was the outgrowth of a controversy held one evening, in 1866, between Hull and a Rev. Mr. Turk, of Ackley, Iowa, regarding the former existence of giants in the earth, in which the latter proved victorious, his ready tongue and loud voice easily bearing down and overwhelming his opponent. Hull retired at a late hour, and, being chagrined with his defeat, lay awake the greater portion of the night, thinking of the extreme gullibility of the world in matters where the Bible could be cited as evidence, and in planning how to turn this peculiarity to his advantage. The result was that he decided upon producing an image which should, after being buried and exhumed, pass muster as a fossil man of unusual size, being assured that such men as his late opponent in argument would aid not a little in contributing to the final success of the undertaking.

In 1868, having studied the subject carefully and completed his arrangements, Hull associated himself with one Martin, and proceeded to Fort Dodge, Iowa, to procure a suitable block from which to carve his image. An acre of quarry-land was purchased, and work commenced, but only to be soon abandoned, owing to the extreme friability of the stone, and the persistent annoyance of the curious and inquisitive inhabitants of the neighborhood. Martin, now thoroughly disgusted, withdrew from the project; but Hull, hearing of another gypsum-bed in a more retired locality, on the line of the Dubuque and Sioux City railroad, then in progress of construction, went thither, and the following Sunday engaged the foreman of the railroad-gang to employ his men in quarrying out as large a slab as the nature of the ground would permit, paying for the labor with a barrel of beer. The result was a slab weighing three and a half tons, measuring twelve feet in length, four in breadth, and twenty-two inches in thickness. With almost incredible difficulty and labor, the block was transported over forty miles of terrible road to Montana, the nearest railroad-station, where it was shipped to E. Burghardt, Chicago, who had been engaged to grave the image. On its arrival at that city, it was moved to Burghardt's barn, which had been prepared for its reception, and two men at once set to work upon it—one, Edward Salle, a German; the other, an American named Markham. It was Hull's desire to represent a "man who had laid down and died;" but, as he entertained doubts as to the universal acceptation of the "fossil-man" theory, it was decided to produce an image that might also pass for an ancient statue. This combination of designs was the cause of that curious feature which attracted notice and provoked discussion when the giant came to be exhibited, viz., the lack of hair.—Dr. G. A. Stockwell, in Popular Science Monthly for June.

A Louisiana Execution.

Edward Bowen, a son of Dr. E. G. Bowen, of Brookhaven, Miss., went over to Manchac, La., last summer, with an excursion party. In passing the platform at the depot he noticed a party of negroes dancing, among whom was Isaiah Evans. After watching them a while, Bowen remarked to a friend that Evans did not know how to dance. Evans, who was under the influence of liquor, immediately drew a pistol and fatally shot Bowen. He attempted to escape, but was overtaken and captured. His trial, conviction and sentence quickly followed. Through the efforts of his counsel, however, the execution was staved off until the 10th of May last, when the sentence was carried into effect. From a Southern exchange we glean the following particulars of the hanging, which, we are told, was witnessed by several thousand people:

"The prisoner was accompanied by several colored preachers, who kept up a constant praying and singing, in which they were joined by a large portion of the assembled multitude. When Evans had ascended the scaffold the Sheriff asked him if he had anything to say. He stepped to the edge of the scaffold and said: 'My friends, I hope this will be a great warning to many of you. To-day I am here before you to meet death. I hope to meet my God in heaven. I have come through the darkness and been brought into the light. I've been baptized in the river of Jordan, and am ready and willing to die. When I get to heaven I'll not be a murderer there. I ain't felt that I'm going to die; I'm just going to step off from this world and rest in paradise to-night.' Turning to Dr. Bowen, the father of the murdered man, he continued: 'Mr. Bowen, I murdered your son. I beg you to forgive me. Oh, my God! how I have prayed that he will be in heaven, and that I'll meet him there this evening. Before his face I hope to be judged.' Turning again to the multitude, he said: 'I've been wicked and bad; I've been a man that feared neither God, man nor the devil; I've been a drunkard, gambler and murderer. Brothers and sisters, all, farewell. I'm going to be an angel in heaven, and from the skies view the whole universe. God said that I would never get to Him unless He called me like this, and He fixed it so that I would by killing this man, and now I'll be with the angels in heaven.' The black cap was then adjusted over his face, and at 12 m. the trap fell. Evans dropped six feet, and his neck was broken."

A Curious Tree.

A curious peculiarity of the boabab tree, found in Africa and Madagascar, is that scarcely any injury will destroy it. Fire scorching the exterior does not impair its vitality. Nor can it be injured from within, as it is quite common to find it hollow. Even cutting it down does not exterminate it, for it continues to grow in length while lying on the ground, and its roots, which reach forty or fifty yards from the trunk, retain their vitality. Although the tree attains an enormous age, Livingstone having examined one which he judged to be 1,400 years old, it is attacked by a disease which affects its woody structure, so in course of time its own weight causes it to fall in a mass of ruins.

A LIFE OF TORTURE.

One of the Most Remarkable Cases of Anchylosis on Record.

[From the Lockport (N. Y.) Journal.]

In the year 1848, a boy then 18 years of age by the name of Jonathan R. Bass, lived with George W. Rogers, of this city, in a house on the ground now occupied by the Lockport Journal building. One evening while on his way to a pasture field above High street, for the cows, he was taken with a severe pain in the bottom of his right foot. He supposed at first that a nail was hurting him, but upon examination he could find nothing. That night and for a number of days his foot was swollen very badly and was exceedingly painful, and then got better, but was more or less troublesome after that. In the fall of 1849 he went to Avon four months, but got no better. That winter he attended school at our Union school, and in the spring went to Buffalo for a time, meanwhile getting a little worse. For a few months of the following summer he was able to act as Captain of a canal boat, which he ran between Buffalo and Rochester. He did no work, however. After that he went to G. W. Eastman's commercial school at Waterville, Oneida county, and in 1853 kept books for Hall & Co., of Buffalo, but, continuing to grow worse, had to give up his place, and came to his home in Cambria. In 1854-5 he did a little writing for parties in Lockport, and in 1856 was very bad and suffered very much, all the joints of the body and limbs becoming more or less affected by this time. In 1852 he was put on an invalid bed, made by Moore & Glass, of this city, from which he has never been removed. He could manage, however, with a good deal of difficulty to feed himself for eight years after that, since which time he has been fed with a spoon, which is quite a difficult task, as his jaws are firmly set, and nothing thicker than a knife-blade can pass them. Yet he eats almost everything that other people do, and is very hearty. Fat pork, fat beef, baked beans, potatoes and milk are his favorites. Being very much interested in the war, reading everything that came in his reach, which he could do by having it placed on a rack before him, he so injured his eyes that in 1869 he became blind, and has remained so since. He talks without difficulty, is very intelligent, and converses freely upon any subject that he has had an opportunity to study up. The writer of this article called upon Mr. Bass, a few days since, and made a careful examination of his physical condition, and found every joint entirely anchylosed, or grown into solid bone, with the exception of his fingers and toes. The bones of the fingers of the right hand have been nearly absorbed, and the flesh remaining is puffy and flaccid. In the left hand not only the bones of the fingers, but the bones of the whole hand, have undergone this same process of absorption. The finger-nails on this hand were grown out beyond the ends of the fingers three and one-half inches, giving a weird and inhuman appearance to the hand. The arms are straight down by his sides, and fixed in this condition, and in the middle of the arm and forearm measured only five inches in circumference.

The limbs are straight—with a dislocation of the right hip joint—but all firm and solid bone, the thigh measuring only eight and one-half inches around.

The bones of the toes are absorbed the same as the hands, and the flaccid toes droop and hang down like fringe. The spinal column is also perfectly consolidated, thus rendering the body capable of being lifted by one's hands under his head and heels without yielding or bending the slightest whatever. The muscles are not paralyzed, but their action seems perfectly under his control, as seen by the action of the tendons and cords.

The pulse is regular—beating seventy to the minute—strong and full. All the vital organs are sound and in active condition, thus rendering him capable of living many years longer. On the whole, this is probably one of the most remarkable cases on record in this or any other country.

Novelties in Paper.

A correspondent wants to know if it is really true that car-wheels are made of paper. We can assure him that it is. The paper is subjected to enormous pressure and inclosed between thin plates of iron. Such wheels are found to have extraordinary elasticity and endurance, and are coming to be much used not only in this country, but in Europe. The latest novelty in use of paper appears to be for chimney-pots. They are made in Breslau, and are light and durable. Before the paper pulp is molded and compressed into the required shape it is treated with chemicals which render it non-inflammable. Specimens of paper and cloth made from the California cactus were recently exhibited before the Maryland Academy of Sciences. The cactus grows abundantly in many of the Western States and Territories, and it is found on arid soil where nothing can be cultivated. The success that has been met with in making paper from this plant is so marked that the business will probably be attempted on a large scale. —Journal of Chemistry.

Work of the Bible Society.

The annual report of the American Bible Society, read at its recent sixty-second anniversary, in New York city, shows that the number of copies of the Bible manufactured at the Bible house was 654,893; printed abroad, 233,908; purchased abroad, 17,978; total, 906,779. Copies issued at home, 663,900; abroad, 195,593; total, 857,493. Bibles for the blind were also issued to the number of 521, making an aggregate of 11,236 volumes in thirty-six years. The issues of the society for sixty-two years amount to 34,864,315 copies. The cash receipts for the year were $446,954. This amount is less than that of last year by $96,625. The fact was mentioned that a firm of native publishers in Japan has expressed a desire to participate in the publication of the scriptures for their own countrymen. They will soon issue a pocket edition of the New Testament in Japanese.

AFTER THE QUARREL.

BY MRS. S. M. B. PIATT.

Hush, my pretty one. Not yet.
Wait a little, only wait.
Other blue flowers are as wet
As your eyes, outside the gate
He has shut forever. But
Is the gate forever shut?

Just a young man in the rain
Saying (the last time?) "good-night"
Should he never come again
Would the world be ended quite?
Where would all these rose-buds go?—
All these robins? Do you know?

But—he will not come? Why, then,
Is no other within call?
There are men, and men, and men—
And these men are brothers all!
Each sweet fault of his you'll find—
Just as sweet in all his kind.

None with eyes like his? Oh—oh!
In diviner ones did I
Look, perhaps, an hour ago,
Whose? Indeed (you must not cry)
Those I thought of—are not free
To laugh down your tears, you see.

Voice like his was never heard?
No—but better ones, I vow;
Did you ever hear a bird?—
Listen, one is singing now!
And his gloves? His gloves? Ah, well,
There are gloves like his to sell.

At the play to-night you'll see,
In mock-velvet cloaks, mock earls
With mock-jeweled swords—that he
Were a clown by! Now, those curls
Are the barber's pride, I say;
Do not cry for them, I pray.

If no one should love you? Why,
You can love some other still;
Philip Sidney, Shakespeare, ay,
Good King Arthur, if you will;
Raphael—he was handsome, too,
Love them, one and all. I do.

THE New York Herald publishes a statement showing that in 1865 there were 30,000 more shoemakers in Massachusetts than there are to-day, although the products of that branch of industry in Massachusetts exceed by the enormous amount of $71,000,000 the production of 1855. This extraordinary increase of products, with so great a diminution in the number of hands employed, is of course attributable to the introduction of the most approved labor-saving machinery, by which Massachusetts commands to a great extent the markets of the world in the shoe trade.

Resignation.

Father, I have learned to trust,
And feel at length that thou art just
To take away
Each staff and stay
Which hindereth me
From trusting Thee
I now resign
My will to Thine.

Not till I found myself forsaken
And all I clung to most was taken—
Of friends bereft,
'Till few were left—
Could I look up
Accept the cup
And calmly say
Be Thou my stay.

Now with confiding love I rest
Upon my precious Savior's breast,
And feel that He
My friend will be;
Through all the strife
And toils of life
With Jesus near
I need not fear.

The Golden A., B., C.

The following selections are from the "Life and Sermons of Rev. Dr. John Tauler":

After a manly, and not a childish sort, ye shall, with thorough earnestness, begin a new life.

Bad ways ye shall eschew, and practice all goodness with diligence and full purpose of mind.

Carefully endeavor to keep the middle path in all things, with seemliness and moderation.

Demean yourself humbly in word and work, from the inward holiness of your heart.

Entirely give up your own will; evermore cleave earnestly to God, and forsake Him not.

Forward and ready shall ye be to all good works, without murmuring, whatever be commanded you.

Give heed to exercise yourself in all godly works of mercy toward the body or the spirit.

Have no backward glances over the world, or the creatures, or their doings.

Inwardly in your heart ponder after your past life with honesty, sincere repentance in the bitterness of your heart, and tears in your eyes.

Knightly and resolutely withstand the assaults of the devil, the flesh, and the world.

Learn to conquer long-cherished sloth with vigor, together with all effeminacy of the body, and subservience to the devil.

Make your abode in God, with fervent love, in certain hope, with strong faith, and be toward your neighbor as toward yourself.

No other man's good things shall ye desire, be they what they may, corporeal or spiritual.

Order all things so that you make the best, and not the worst of them.

Penance, that is, suffering from your sin, you shall take willingly, whether it come from God or from creatures.

Quittance, remission, and absolution you shall give to all who have ever done you wrong in thought, word, or deed.

Receive all things that befall you with meekness, and draw improvement from them.

Soul and body, estate and reputation, keep undefiled, with all care and diligence.

Truthful and upright shall ye be toward all, without guile or cunning.

Wantonness and excess, of whatsoever kind it may be, ye shall learn to lay aside, and turn from it with all your heart.

Xt., our blessed's Lord's life and death shall ye follow, and wholly conform yourself thereunto with all your might.

Zealously keep a rein over your will and your senses, that they may be at peace with all that God doth, and also with all His creatures.

All this lesson must be learned of a free heart and will, without caviling.

"The Perfection of Beauty."

There is no perfection of beauty in this world. Here the ripest fruit has some speck in it. The sweetest rose has a thorn on the stem, or a worm at the heart of it. The brightest sky has a cloud upon its surface; and the sun itself has dark spots on its face. There is something to mar the beauty of all our brightest things in this world. But in that world—that city—that place where Jesus is—there will be nothing to mar the beauty that is seen everywhere. It will all be "the perfection of beauty."

A little girl was gazing up at the starry sky one clear night. She seemed to be very much occupied in thinking about something. Her mother said to her, "What are you thinking about, my dear?"

"Oh! mamma," she said, "I was thinking if the outside of heaven is so beautiful, how very beautiful it must be inside!"

A very sweet thought, indeed, and one we may often consider ourselves, when we look up at the sky, on a clear, bright night, and see how it sparkles in its loveliness. That is the outside of heaven.

Sometimes when people are dying the heavenly land, where Jesus is, comes very near them so that they can see it before they die.

A little boy was dying. His father and mother were sitting on one side of his little bed, and the doctor was waiting and watching near. He had been silent for some time, and appeared to sleep. They thought he might pass away as he slept. But suddenly his blue eyes opened, wide and clear, and a sweet smile broke over his face. He looked upward very earnestly, and then, turning to his mother, said: "Mother, what is that beautiful land that I see there, beyond the mountains?"

"I don't see any mountains, my dear," said the mother.

"Look there, mother dear," he said, pointing up. "They are very near now—so large and high—and the country beyond them seems beautiful! The people are so happy, and there are no sick children there. Is that the heavenly land I see?"

"Yes, my child," his mother sobbed; "that is the heavenly land where Jesus dwells."

"Oh, mother—oh, father, don't be sorry for me, but come after me to that beautiful land. Good-by, mother dear; I'm going now, and Jesus has sent His angel to carry me over the mountains."

These were his last words. He died in his mother's arms. The angel carried him over the mountains to "see the King in his beauty." But he had caught a glimpse of its brightness before he went away. The beauty of the place is one of the things that will help to make up the glory or beauty that we shall see in Jesus when we go to heaven.—Richard Newton, D. D.

Amen.

1. Its Origin.—Amen is a Hebrew word, of Hebrew origin. Prior to the time of Christ it was found in no other language but the Hebrew. Pagans did not make use of it in their idol worship. But with the introduction of Christianity it has found its way into the languages of all nations, who have received the Christian as their religion. In the Greek, Latin, German and English tongues, it is the same in orthography, in signification, and, with very slight deviations, also in pronunciation. It has been left untranslated, and has been transferred from the Hebrew just as it is found there, because there cannot be found in any language any single word that expresses its precise and complete sense and meaning.

2. Its Sense.—Luther, in his Smaller Catechism, defines it thus: "Amen, amen, that is, yea yea, it shall be so." Cruden says of it: "Amen in Hebrew signifies true, faithful, certain." It is used in the end of prayer in testimony of an earnest wish, desire, or assurance to be heard; amen, be it so! So shall it be." Webster says: "Amen, as a noun, signifies truth, firmness, trust, confidence; as a verb, to conform, establish, verify; as an adjective, firm, stable. In English, after the Oriental manner, it is used at the beginning, but more generally at the end of declarations and prayers in the sense of, be it firm, be it established." All these definitions agree in making amen to mean: "Verily, true, certain, be it so, shall it be." Some ancient forms of ritual have rendered it into English, namely, "So mote it be."

It is used in address by man to his Maker, and by Him to us, and accordingly, as used by either, differs somewhat in application, as must be evident. For man makes favors, and God bestows them; God makes promises, and man pleads them. When man says amen, he claims the divine assurance; when God says amen, He confirms it.—Lutheran.

The Load on His Mind.

Some one, a figure arrayed in white, with frills around its head and blood in its eye, let him in, and he lunged with easy grace into the first chair that went past him, after he had made several vain attempts to seat himself on the piano. The reproachful figure of Mrs. Bosbyschell regarded him with calm severity, and her icy silence made him feel uncomfortable.

"Moggareck," he said thickly, but with grave earnestness, "Moggareck" (Mrs. Bosbyschell's front name is Margaret), "I've—hic—I've gotta—gotta quinckened coshielace."

"A what?" asked Mrs. Bosbyschell, in calm disdain.

"A quicked coshience," repeated Mr. Bosbyschell. "A quicked coshience, A—hic—I've got something ommy min', Moggart. I've gotta—hic—coffesshiol—codfession—gotacofession t'make."

"You can make it in the morning," she said, imperiously. "I am going to bed. You may sleep where you please, or, rather, where you can."

"Naw," protested Mr. Bosbyschell, with much vehemence, "can't—can'twait—can'tgot'sleep 'ith th'aload ommy—ommy mind. Got caffession t'make, an' mus'—mus' make it. Done suthin', Moggart—hic—been—been a—beena load ommy mind long time. Been—hic—carryin' guilty secret 'round 'ith me too long. Quicked coshience won' gimme—won'gimmy nope—hic—no peace, Mus' tell you sumpin', Mogert, sumpin' 'll s'prise you. I've——"

"Mercy on me, man!" exclaimed Mrs. Bosbyschell, startled from her composure, "what have you been doing? Tell me quick, tell me, for Heaven's sake!"

"Moggart," said Mr. Bosbyschell, "it's sumthin' ye nev—hic—never suspec—suspected. It'll mos' kill ye. Hic! S'pec' it'll n—righ drive me crazy. 'Sawful t' think 'bout it. Y'—y'wouldn' b'lieve it of me. Margart, y'—ye wouldn' I've been——"

"Speak!" shrieked the almost frantic woman. "I'm wild with suspense! Speak, tell me all, quick! O, I can tear her eyes out! Tell me, you brute, what is her name? Who is she?"

"Wh—wh—hic! Who'sh who?" demanded Mr. Bosbyschell, in blank amazement.

"The woman, you wretch!" screamed his wife; "who is the woman?"

"O, shaw, Moggart," ejaculated Mr. Bosbyschell, "tain' th—hic—that. Wussun that. 'Smore dreadful. Hic. 'Smore crushin'. You—hic—y'won't hardly b'lieve it—hic—w'en tell ye. Moggart——"

"Speak!" wailed the anxious woman, wringing her hands. "Speak; let me know the worst! What have you been doing?"

"Moggart," said Mr. Bosbyschell, solemnly and with the air of a man upon whom a quickened conscience had wrought its perfect work; "Margart," he said, nerving himself for the shock of confession, "Margort, I've—hic—I've been drinking!"—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

Nihilism.

The old truth that abstract ideas will in time work themselves out in forms of political combination receives a fresh illustration in the Nihilist conspiracy which now threatens the peace of Russia. As far as appears, Nihilism is another name for positivism. It denies the possibility of religious knowledge, and therefore takes the Agnostic view of the world and man. As in Christendom all civil institutions, law, marriage, and morals are founded on the Christian religion, Nihilism has begun war upon these, and in despotic Russia such a war quickly brings on a crisis. Strange to say, the seeds of Nihilism were sowed by a novelist—Tourgueneff. The students of the universities have been fascinated by this protest against society as now organized in the empire, and Nihilist clubs have sprung up in all directions. The Russian police confess their inability to put down the clubs.—Harper's Weekly.

Hippophagy in London.

A serious attempt is about to be made in London to introduce horseflesh as an article of food. It will be remembered that in 1868 a grand banquet was held at the Langham Hotel, at which the chief dishes at least of every course consisted of horseflesh dressed in a variety of ways. The dinner was pronounced to be a success. The Board of Works having sanctioned the establishment of slaughter-houses for horses intended for human food, hippophagy may be expected to have a fair trial in England.

A Story of a Trail.

She was a tall, stout individual, and sprung out of the wagon as lightly as a spring chicken after a grasshopper. He was a little, withered, dried-up weasel, and followed slowly, bringing a basket of eggs with him. They entered one of our stores and she asked:

"What are ye givin' for eggs?"

"Eight cents," was the reply of the counter-jumper.

"Well, here are three dozen," said the fat party, "and I'll take it into calico."

"But I want some yarn to mend my socks," put in the old man.

"The weather is warm," replied the fat party, "and you can do without socks."

"But my boots hurt my feet," insisted the old man.

"Go barefooted," said she, rather sharply. Then, turning to the clerk, she changed her tune, and remarked: "Young man, please count me out the eggs and give me four yards of calico to match this 'ere dress."

"But—" the old man was going to continue, when she raised her huge index finger and said: "Henry Winter Davis Spriggins, them 'are eggs are mine; the hens what laid 'em are mine; the corn what fed 'em was mine, and I'se going to have a trail on this 'ere dress as long as Betsy Gowen's, if every toe on your feet turn into gum biles. Now, shut. And you, youngster, yank off four yards of that 'are calico, or you will hear a bumble-bee a-buzzing."

The old man shut, and the clerk yanked off the calico.

Starving Celestials.

The famine in China continues to make terrible ravages. It has now extended from the provinces of Shantung and Pechili to that of Shansi, where, according to the Chinese philanthropist, Tong Kingsin, nearly one-half of the population is starving, and men kill each other for food. Societies have been formed to collect money and corn for the sufferers; and the Government, besides remitting the land tax payable by the provinces in question, has granted $500,000 for their relief. Ten steamers laden with rice are at Tientsin, but there are hardly any means of conveying it into the interior, and the money is often not honestly distributed.

A huge conger eel, which died lately at Southport Aquarium, England, weighed 96 pounds, of which 7½ pounds consisted of ova, and it was found that the number of eggs must have been not less than 14,551,000. A family party indeed!

A Great Historical Work.

The Pictorial History of the World, embracing full and authentic accounts of every nation of ancient and modern times, and including a History of the rise and fall of the Greek and Roman Empires, the growth of the nations of Modern Europe, the Middle Ages, the Crusades, the Feudal System, the Reformation, the discovery and settlement of the New World, etc., etc., by James D. McCabe.

There has long been a great and universally-felt want of a History of the World suitable for general use. This want is now being supplied by The National Publishing Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., Chicago, Ill., St. Louis, Mo., and Dayton, Ohio, who have issued a handsome volume, entitled "The Pictorial History of the World," by James D. McCabe, a well-known historical writer. This work will, undoubtedly, take rank as a Standard History. It is the most valuable book that has been published in this country for many years. It contains a separate and admirably-written history of every nation of ancient and modern times, and is full of valuable information concerning them, presented in popular style, and in a manner that will enable the reader to refer instantly to any subject upon which information is desired. The book is a complete treasury of history, and there is not a question that can be asked concerning any historical subject, but an answer to it can be found in this work. The author does not content himself with a mere dry statement of facts, but sketches the life and manners of the various nations of which he treats, in life-like colors, and presents to the reader the causes which led to the prosperity and decay of the great powers of the world. He shows us the various great men—the warriors, statesmen, poets, sages and orators—of ancient and modern times, and makes them familiar to the reader. There is not a dry page in the book. It is as fascinating as a romance, and at the same time one of the most valuable works of reference ever published. We are constantly called upon to discuss the great questions of history, and the wars and quarrels of the nations of the old world require us to be continually refreshing our historical knowledge. So many discoveries have recently been made, so many of the old ideas and traditions have been exploded and shown to be mere myths and legends, that the subject of history may be said to be almost entirely new, and he who was well informed twenty years ago will find himself unable to discourse intelligibly upon historical subjects now unless he has kept up with the advance of historical research.

The mechanical execution of the book fully sustains the high reputation of the publishers. It contains 1,260 large double-column pages, and over 650 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes; portraits of the great men of ancient and modern times, and views of the principal cities of the world. The engravings in the book are genuine works of art and were made at a cost of over $25,000. The great number and high character of these engravings make this the most valuable art publication of the century. A prominent feature of the work is a full History of the late War between Russia and Turkey.

This is the most complete and valuable History of the World ever published, and agents who take hold of it will reap a rich harvest. The price is so low that every one can afford to purchase a copy. It is sold by subscription only, and the publishers want agents, as will be seen by their advertisement in another column.

Wilhoft's Tonic.—Safe, Permanent and Complete!—Wilhoft's Tonic cures Chills and Fever, Dumb Chills and Bilious Fevers—those Titans that kill their thousands where this remedy is unknown. It cures Enlargement of the Spleen. It cures Hypertrophy of the Liver. It hurts no one. It cures all types of Malarial Fevers and is perfectly protective in all its effects. Try Wilhoft's Tonic, the great infallible Chill Cure. Wheelock, Finlay & Co., Proprietors, New Orleans.

Mothers! Mothers!! Mothers!!! Don't fail to procure Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for all diseases incident to the period of teething in children. It relieves the child from pain, cures wind colic, regulates the bowels, and by giving relief and health to the child, gives rest to the mother. It is an old and well-tried remedy.

There is nothing so dear as cheap medicine; it is dear at any price. This is true of the large packs of condition powders now sold. Buy Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders and you can't make a mistake. The large packs are utterly worthless.

The Secret of Business Success.

It is claimed that Vanderbilt exhibited great nerve and shrewd business sagacity in the purchase of stocks and railroads controlled by him. Yet, whenever he made an investment he received in return an equivalent, either as his own, or as collateral security. Dr. R. V. Pierce has invested many hundred thousand dollars in advertising, depending entirely upon the superior merits of his goods for security. The unparalleled popularity of his family medicines, and the annual increase in their sale attests in arguments stronger than words of their purity and efficiency. If the blood be impoverished, the liver sluggish, or there be tumors, blotches and pimples, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will effect a speedy and perfect cure. If the bowels be constipated use Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. Debilitated females suffering with those peculiar dragging-down sensations and weaknesses will find Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription a safe and certain remedy. Prompt relief and a permanent cure have so universally followed its use, that the doctor now sells it under a positive guarantee.

Oakland, Douglas Co., Ore., Jan. 22, 1877,
Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—Your Golden Medical Discovery has cured my daughter of goitre, after many physicians had failed. Inclosed please find $1.50 for a copy of The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser. With us it takes the place of the family physician. Yours truly,

Aaron Allen.

Mt. Vernon, Ohio, July 10, 1876.
Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—Four bottles of your Favorite Prescription has entirely cured my wife. We employed three different physicians and many remedies, but found no relief. With a thankful heart, I am, ever your friend,

August Warring.

A Newspaper Wonder.

The Advocate, a Greenback, Labor paper, published in New York, has created a marked excitement among publishers. It was begun in May, 1875, as a local paper, at Spring Valley, Rockland county, and on Jan. 1, 1877, removed to New York. The first issue in that year was 438 copies, using twenty-five pounds of white paper, postage 50 cents, while the issue of May 22 inst. was 156,000, using near nine tons of white paper, and paying $300 postage. This has been done by a discreet but bold method of advertising. The company expect to reach a circulation of 2,000,000 in 1880, and propose to expend $200,000 in advertising to secure that end. It during the months of June, July, August and September puts its advertisement of one column into 2,500 papers, including the city dailies. If business men would take courage and show faith in printer's ink much could be done to dissipate hard times by reviving business.

Boys, Make a Noise.

The Fourth of July will soon be here, and every boy and girl will want to shoot one of my extra-fine, nickel-plated, seven-shot Revolvers. They are perfect beauties, and cost only $2.00. Sent, postage paid, by mail. Address G. A. Harris, Manufacturer, 177 Fifth avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Kneaded Biscuits.

Put two teaspoonfuls Dooley's Yeast Powder in a quart of flour; rub into this two tablespoons of lard, with a little salt, and add enough sweet milk to make a stiff dough. Knead well for five or six minutes, roll thin, cut into biscuits, and bake a delicate brown.

Horrid! Yes, it is, that our habits will produce disease; but it is a certain fact that our style of eating and working will sometimes produce Heart Disease, and we must buy some remedy for its cure. We can recommend to you Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR as a reliable remedy, one which has been sold for twenty-years, and whose merits are conceded by those who know of its use. Try it, and our word for it you will thank us for the recommendation. Among the many forms of Heart Disease are Palpitation, Enlargement, Spasms of the Heart, Stoppage of the Action of the Heart, Trembling all over and about the Heart, Ossification or Bony Formation of the Heart, Rheumatism, General Debility and Sinking of the Spirits. Send for a pamphlet of testimonials of cures to F. E. Ingalls, Concord, N. H.

The HEART REGULATOR is forsale by druggists at 50 cents and $1 per bottle.

There is no remedy in the world so valuable to use in the case of sudden accident or illness as Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. It can be used internally and externally, and its power is truly marvelous.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser, having been permanently cured of that dread disease, Consumption, by a simple remedy, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure Cure for Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, &c.

Parties wishing the prescription will please address

The Cheapest Paper in the World!

ITS CHARACTER AND PURPOSES.

RELIGION.
It adopts the theory that as no man is reliable who has not some form of religious faith, so no paper can fill its full mission without imparting a pure religious tone to its teachings. It advocates the ethics of the Society of Friends. It teaches Quakerism.

FRATERNITY.
It adopts the theory that fraternity—sympathy—a disposition to herd together and to help each other by counsel and costless co-operation—is a natural and beneficent tendency of our nature—advocates that form of fraternity shown by the masonic philosophy. It teaches Free Masonry—which means Masonry as a symbolic moral science, not as a hotbed of gin-piggery, a business machine, or as a political power.
It teaches Masonry as an elevating, mind-strengthening moral science—without any regard to any importance of signs, grips, tokens, or oaths—Masonry as an educator and a hand-maid to religion. It deprecates its abuses and prostitution.

THE GRANGE.
It adopts the theory that as one of the pernicious results of the late, unhappy war is the habit of extravagance and wanton waste of our people, that the Grange, of all institutions in America, is the only organized and most practically effective influence in aid of a return to the economic ways and industrious habits of American society as it was before the war and as it should be now.
It teaches the lessons of the Grange.

POETRY AND FAMILY LITERATURE.
It adopts the theory that no mind is properly balanced that does not love flowers, poetry and little children; therefore it devotes a large space to family literature—pure, elevating, inspiriting poetry, which stimulates to higher and nobler thoughts, and leads to an effort to be and to do better, and to cheery, light, apt, sound, fables and sentimental as taught in story and miscellany.
It teaches and elevates through light literature.

GENERAL NEWS.
It adopts the theory that as local papers give the local news, so should a general paper give the general news, and it gives more news items in condensed form than any other ten papers published.
It teaches comprehensive news gathering, and the most terse, dense, accurate method of writing and speaking.

SPIRIT OF THE PRESS.
It adopts the theory that the press is the public teacher, and that the giant minds of the age are now somewhat and will in the near future largely be found in the control of the press; and that it is destined to attain a grander and more practical power for good than it has ever reached, and that to familiarize its readers with the pith and excellence of current editorial production is a duty to its patrons, and so it gives each week extracts from the leading literary, independent, political and labor press of this country, as well as giving the views of the old-world press on current events and questions of our time.
It teaches the press as the greatest educational power of our generation, and aims to elevate and practicalize it and to bring it down in price to the feeble ability of our financially-exhausted people.

THE TIDE-LEVEL OF THOUGHT.
It adopts the idea that
"Man is man through all gradations,
Little recks it where he stands—
How divided into nations,
Scattered over many lands," and that to get at the average judgment of our people—the tide-level of opinion on current questions—the true way is to give each week proper specimen letters from as nearly as practicable every section of the country, on whatever question is uppermost, thus bringing home with truth and accuracy to every reader what the earnest workers think, say and feel.
It teaches the tide-level of sentiment among the people is the only safe guide to the statesman and political economist, and it thus finds and proves that level.

FINANCE AND LABOR.
It adopts the theory that as a nation we are a family, and should be governed as a family; that we should have a standard and measure of value fixed by Government—a national paper currency, made and issued by the Government—which shall be made to do all the offices of gold and silver among our people, and so be as good as gold and silver, but to have no relation to or be in any way dependent upon gold or silver; that there should be enough of this currency in the hands of the people to enable every man to pay for what he buys and when he receives it, whether he buys labor or labor's products; that the true way for Government to issue the increase to the people is to employ 1,000,000 laborers to build up the wealth of the country in peace, as it employed 1,000,000 of our best men to destroy accumulated wealth in war—by carrying on a vast system of internal improvement of the water ways of the country, to the end of cheapening and quickening transportation, and thus relieving and making production more profitable; that the public lands should be at once thrown open to free occupancy and use by actual settlers—to the end of immense and cheap production and foreign shipment of products, and so turn the balance of trade from the world to America, and enable us to pay our mammoth debt as if it were a bagatelle; that the Government should be the depository of the surplus of the people's earnings and savings, at say 3 or 3.65 per cent. interest in currency; that this surplus should be applied to buying up our higher-priced gold bonds from day to day in the market, till all are paid, and then, as the fiscal agent of he people, receive the mole-hills of deposits, and make the mountains of loan to cities and States at say 4 per cent., and so fix and control the rate of interest in the interest of enterprise.
It teaches legislation in the interest of labor.

EXTORTION.
It adopts the idea that the best way to help a laboring man is to enable him to make one dollar answer the work of two by striking out the middle-man and extortionist as completely as possible.
It adopts the idea of "direct action" in co-operation, and brings the manufacturer and user of an article into immediate relations.
It brings the maker of a piano, sewing machine, etc., into direct and immediate contact, and avoids all middlemen, enabling a family to get a $1,000 piano for $325, a $300 organ for $100, a $40 Grover & Baker sewing machine for $10, etc., etc.
It teaches co-operation.

ADVERTISING.
It adopts the idea that a certain community of interest exists between advertiser and reader—that the tax upon the reader should be lightened and added to the advertiser—and thus, by cheapening the paper, expanding its circulation, and rendering more sure and profitable the advertisers' venture.
It teaches cheap papers and profitable advertising.

ITS CIRCULATION AND INCREASE.
Its actual circulation on May 15th was 141,000—the largest in America—reaching 21,393 postoffices—its increase for the past thirty days has been 2,000 a day—for the last ten days has been 4,000 a day, and for the last five days has been 10,000 a day, and on the Fourth day of July it will reach every postoffice in the United States, and be full 500,000—the largest in the world.

THE FOURTH OF JULY NUMBER.
The number bearing date July 4th, 1878, will be the best paper ever presented to American people, if money and brains can make it so.
The editorial labor on that number alone will cost one thousand dollars.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENT.
The most comprehensive, practical, accurate, sound, complete, exhaustive and convincing argument ever made on the subject of internal improvements, accompanied by a mammoth map showing the relations between cheap, safe, short water-way transportation and profit to the producer, and the way in which American products can control the markets of the world, will be given in that number.

The Continued Decline in Teas.

Has had a depressing influence on the market; so much so that they have declined to the lowest point they have ever reached and at these low prices are relatively much cheaper than coffees. Our trade in them is constantly increasing. The 25c and 40c Teas are taking the lead as they are fresh, sweet and good drawing goods. The 60c and 80c Teas are extra selections. We purchasing direct of the importers and selling direct to our customers, thereby saving the profit of the middle men, which is 10 to 25 per cent.

THE LION-TAMER.

"The lioness will be the death of you yet, Joe.'

"Pshaw!" said Joe Amberly, "the Lion-Tamer" of a large traveling circus, laughing at the predictions of his assistant.

"You may laugh as much as you please, but some day you will find I am right, and that to your sorrow, though then it will be too late.'

"I have performed with all the animals for some years, and never had any difficulty.'

"You forget the one at Longtown'

"That didn't amount to much. I soon brought them to subjection.'

"But the trouble commenced with this same lioness.'

"Yes; though it wouldn't have been so bad if those cats of hunting leopards had not set up a yell and drawn the black tiger into the affray.'

"She has a devil of a temper when it is up—is the most treacherous beast I ever fed or had anything to do with. I have been watching her close for a couple of days,' continued the assistant "and know she is mighty cross-grained. So, depend upon it, you are going to have trouble.'

"I dont see why, more than at any other time.'

"There are times—and you know it, if you will only reflect—and this is one of them. If I was in your place I wouldn't try to show off to-day with any extras; but just give a common performance and get out of the cage as quick as I could.'

"You know what we advertise, and what a crowd has gathered.'

"Yes,' with a laugh; "and I know we never have or do one-half there is in the bills. Paper is cheap, Joe, but human life is precious. Think how poorly off you would leave your wife and child if any thing should happen to you, and what would become of your wife if any thing should happen to the child?'

"Do not mention it.'

The man who had handled and tamed and toyed with savage beasts as if they had been harmless kittens groaned aloud at the thought. A man of the most ardent, even passionate, nature, he bowed down in worship to his wife and little girl. And that day it had been advertised that he would take his child and a pail of blood into the cage with him.

It was a very daring, foolhardy project at the best; but how much more so when the beasts were doubly savage and out of temper—when the slightest thing might arouse them to all their prestine fury, and the fierce blood of the wilderness assert itself in all its tempestuous wrath.

But the husbandly and fatherly emotion was soon conquered. The habit of years and his natural strength gave him self-reliance; and it would take more than idle words to turn him from his purpose, no matter how dangerous it might appear to others. To this must be added the esprit de corps that would make him take the most desperate chances before having even the shadow of cowardice attached to his name.

Still, he could not help thinking more deeply, perhaps, than ever before. Was there in reality any danger? He could not convince himself of it, argue the matter as he would.

The old lion in the cage, though a monster in size, was inoffensive, tame and obedient. In the language of the keepers, he was "good for nothing but to make a show and set back in the corner, grind his teeth and growl." Besides, he was a friend, and upon more than one occasion had acted the part of peace maker. The leopards—a pair of spotted cheetahs—were scarcely to be taken into consideration. The black tiger, the most rare and strikingly beautiful animal in any collection, was ordinarily quiet, though when fully aroused not to be trifled with.

But the lioness was the special one to be dreaded and watched. She was a beast of uncommon power, with massive arms, long, curving claws, tail lithe and nervous as a serpent, teeth sharp as needles, flexile, treacherous, smooth, tawny skin and yellow eyes that ever flashed fiercely. Never, even in her best moods, had she been submissive, and her mildest play was rough in the extreme.

The lion-tamer turned from his companion to go and dress for his attractive but dangerous performance; but before doing so he visited the double cage, and made a critical examination of the beasts, who any instant might be to him as fate. There was nothing to especialy awaken fear; and, half vexed with himself for having been needlessly disturbed, he passed from the great canvass into a smaller compartment, and found his wife and child waiting for him—the one a young and beautiful woman, and the other a very fairy of a child, whose hair hung down upon her back, as the brightest and finest of spun silk.

"I am sorry, Joe,' said the wife and mother, as her husband entered, "that you have consented to so foolish a performance as the one advertised for to-day.'

"Why, May?" and he looked most earnestly at her.

"Because the ordinary performance is hazardous enough.'

"Then you think this more so?"

"I don't know that it is,' she replied, having the utmost confidance in her husband's ability; "but somehow I don't altogether fancy having Inez taken into the cage.'

"You know my reason for consenting, and that it would never have been given had you assent not first been obtained.'

"Certainly, and it is very good of you Joe.'

"That it was promised on account of my salary being raised.'

"Yes."

"And that it was to secure the raise of salary, so as the sooner to accumulate enough to buy a little home against the rainy days that may come.'

"Yes, my dear Joe; but,' with a smile, "had not pride something to do with it? That's the curse of the profession. Each one is always trying to out do the other, running risks on that account they will not otherwise attempt.'

"Well, May, I only gave my promise to do the act once, but even now will give it up if you say the word. I had rather disappoint all the managers and be called a coward by all the rabble in the world than cause your heart to beat with fear, or to bring tears into your eyes."

"No, no, Joe. Don't think I lost confidence and pride in you. No, don't think of giving it up. I suppose I am foolishly nervous. But you will be careful, and not run any unnecessary risk?'

"My own heart would have to be torn out before anything should happen to our darling;' and he stooped, raised the child, tossed her up, caught, kissed her and hugged her to his bosom.

"But yourself, Joe?'

"O, I'll look out for number one.'

The conversation did not tend to ease his mind, and before dressing he went out and held another conversation with his particular attendant, and took another look into the performing cage.

The animals were more quiet than when he had seen them previously; the lioness especially appeared in a playful mood, and, with something of a load lifted from his heart, he returned, with but little time remaining before he would be called upon to prove his right to the proud title of lion-tamer.

And every inch he looked one, as he stepped in view of the densely-crowded assembly. Gorgeous in his new custom and with a look of calmness and determination upon his face, he looked, with his tall and sinewy form, fit to grapple with and overcome the fiercest beasts that ever prowled amid the jungles of Asia and Africa, and made night terrible with their roaring.

A burst of applause—a perfect tempest of huzzas and clapping of hands—greeted him as he swung his little girl, dressed in silver tissue, and with the gossamer wings and tiara of sparkling jewels around her golden curls that represent the traditional fairy, upon his shoulders. While looking at his stalwart proportions, the men thought what a dangerous antagonist he would be and the young mothers shuddered at so beautiful a child being taken into a den of savage animals.

With a graceful bow and the dignity of a Roman conqueror, the lion-tamer strode through the circle, dissappeared behind the cage, and with such rapidity as to astonish the audience, stood within the compartment where the huge lion was lying and the agile leopards leaping about, and had placed his child between the claws of the greater brute, and she was playfully toying with its shaggy mane.

For a time he made the leopards leap about him as kittens, jumping from corner to corner, resting upon his shoulders, bounding lightly over the extended whip. Then he gave his attention to the mother lion, opened its immense jaws, placed his arm and thrust his head between them, raised his fairy like child upon its back and made it march around with her. Then he prepared to throw the two cages into one.

"Let Inez come out now,' whispered the attendant, uneasily. "You have done enough already to keep your promise, and the audience won't know the difference.'

"No; I will go through. Mind what I told you, and have things ready in case there should be trouble, though I don't fancy any,' Then he continued aloud, so as to be plainly heard by every one, "Hand me the pail of blood.'

A cold shiver, a supernatural awe appeared to pass through the frame of all, as the vessel, dripping with crimson drops, was given to him, and more than one asked themselves if the man was mad to thus not only risk his own life, but that of his beautiful child. And when he loosened and thrust aside the partition, and the fierce lioness and sleek tiger came bounding in, their breath was absolutely suspended, and their hearts momentarily ceased to beat.

"Down!"

The tiger obeyed, and the foot of the lioness was upon his neck.

"Up!"

And the leopards were purring like great cats upon his shoulders, while the lioness lay crouched with her tawny paws thrust through the bars and growling savagely.

"For mercy's sake let her alone,' whispered his attendant; "and mind not kick over that pail. If the blood should be spilled, it would be all over with you both. All the men in the world couldn't save you.'

"Stand ready, but keep still. The brute shall mind.

His child was sitting on the back of the lion, and smiling in that den of horrors. Her confidence in her father was sublime—was as perfect as her love. She never dreamt of fear when he was near to protect, and while the lookers-on shuddered, she innocently deemed it a pleasant pastime.

"Down!"

The leopards leaped to either corner, and crouched down.

"Come!"

The lioness grumblingly arose, crawled suddenly to his feet, rose and laid her great claws upon his shoulders, making him swerve with her weight, and raised her terrible head upon a level with his own. Slowly and slowly they turned around as if waltzing, the low mutterings of the beast becoming more plainly audible every moment, and her yellow, feline eyes snapped with hidden fires.

With an amazing exhibition of strength he wrestled with, tripped and threw her from him, and the canvass tent rang again. But instantly she was upon her feet, lashing her sides with her prehensile tail, drawing back her lips so as to show her teeth, and uttering the deepest and fiercest howls.

"For the love of mercy hand out your child, Joe,' said his attendant.

"Wait a moment I shall be done very quickly.'

The crowning feat was to come. It was one upon which he had bestowed time, and upon which he had prided himself—was a tableau of wild beasts, with manhood and childish beauty for the central attraction.

He stepped to the corner, led the monster lion forth into the center of the cage, made him lie down, placed the little girl upon him and stood astride. Then a shrill whistle brought the cheetah leopards bounding upon his shoulders and standing up with paws crossed above his head, the black tiger erect upon his left, and throttled with his hand. But the lioness failed to do his bidding and take her place upon his right. She lay in the act of springing, and at but a little distance.

"Come.'

There was a movement, and the whip was raised and fell heavily upon her head. That was all that was needed to awaken her latent ire, and, with a roar like that given in her native forest, she sprang with almost resistless force toward him. A sharp, stinging blow on the bridge of the nose for moment cowed her, and she might have been conquered had she not partially fell upon and upset the pail and deluged the floor of the cage in blood.

Then all became the wildest commotion—the most terrible and savage sounds. Every beast sprang down, lapped the blood, and then turned upon him. Even the veteran lion appeared to foget the long years of training, and something of his young forest life blazed forth.

Amberly comprehend all in an instant and the father triumphed over the actor. He snatched the now terrified and screaming child, sprang with her to the door, thrust her into the hands of the watchful attendant, and would have followed, had not the lioness grappled and drawn him back, rending his shoulder with her sharp claws, and causing the blood to stream over his rich dress.

He was fighting against most desperate odds, knew it, backed into the corner, and called for his irons. One, red-hot at the end, was handed to him, but at the first stroke the lioness sent it whirling, and her sharp teeth almost met for a moment his thigh.

"Hand me something sharp with which I can brain the brute!"

Everything upon which hands could be laid was thrust to him, but he failed to reach them, and the danger was becoming more and more imminent. The blood had been lapped up clean—all were mad with desire, the tiger and the leopards crouched upon him. Then the majesty of command asserted itself.

"Come, Samson.'

The old lion came forward at the words, seemed to comprehend that something was wrong, thrust himself between his master and his raging mate and when she turned upon him, sent her rolling with a blow of his great paw.

The lion-tamer might have escaped, but, bleeding, wounded as he was, he would not retreat, and turned his attention to seperating the now tangled mass of fighting animals. Picking up one leopard after another he drew them into a further corner of the cage, dragging the tiger, with the lioness clinging to it and tearing its glossy hide, thither, tore open its paws by main strength, hurled it back and shut the partition, turned, reeled to the door, fell upon it and was dragged through to safety, even with the lioness rattling behind him as it was closing

A few steps taken, and the lion-tamer fell fainting by the side of his already insensible wife, who lay with her affrighted child hugged closely to her scarcely-beating heart.

Then the silence that had been as death was broken by the most tumultuous shouts, and breath was drawn again, and half-fainting women and fear-palsied men felt as if a mountain had been lifted from their hearts.

Lame, torn and weak, the lion-tamer entered the cage the next day before the most unprecedented crowd, it having been advertised that he would do so in his bloody clothes, but never again could he be tempted to take child or pail of blood behind the bars.

From the Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Indiana Republicans.

They have met in Convention, nominated and resolved. Of the ticket nominated we have nothing to say. In the first place, the State ticket nominated is not of prime importance in this election. No Governor is to be chosen. The contest this year in Indiana, as in other states, is for the possession of the House of Representatives. In the second place, the people of Indiana have a fuller acquaintance with the citizens of that State that have been put in nomination for the minor State offices to be filled than people outside the State can have. They can not, however, have a better, a more intelligent acquaintance with the doctrines announced in the platform, or a wiser discernment of its force as a political shibboleth, than some people without the boundary lines of Indiana. In Indiana, as in Ohio this year, the platform is the candidate. The Indiana Republican platform we can not but look upon as an unsuccessful candidate from the start. Its approaches to courage are confessions of defeat. Its time-serving is weak. It reveals no ability to confront the questions of the hour with frankness and force. There was the question of the indorsement or the condemnation of the President and his Administration. This is a far more important political question than it was a year ago. It is a test question. Does the Republican party, for example, approve or disapprove, the Republican President's Southern policy? It is about that that the discussion really hangs. The Republicans of Indiana dare not meet the question.

We print the platform in full. The first entirely new doctrine announced by the Indiana Republicans—not doctrine entirely new, but new for them to declair—is, "Full commendation of and sympathy with all efforts for personal reformation." Such a plank is a surprise in a Republican political platform. We fear there is some hidden meaning in it, as there was in "chops and tomato sauce." So few Republicans are making any "efforts for personal reformation," the plank cannot be meant for Republicans. It is cunningly designed to catch Democratic votes. We do not look on this as a strong party declaration. The Indiana Republicans should first strive to hold their own party together, and proselyte afterward. By throwing their "commendation" and their "sympathy" wholly outside their party they have really lost strength.

Passing the platitudes in the platform which are abundant, and passing the things said that all parties admit, what is the attitude of the Republican party upon the essential public issues? Protective tariff is indorsed, of course. That is in harmony with the spirit of the Republican party. But what about the President and what about the currency? What is known as the Southern policy of the President is the distinguishing fact and feature of his Administration. There is no controversy worth patriotic notice save about that. That policy is not indorsed or mentioned.

The "personal integrity" and "the general course" of the Administration of the President only are commended. It is easy for them to say that they will defend his title against revolution when there is no revolution, and when none is even threatened.

The currency part of the platform is cobbled. It shows the great progress the Ohio Democratic financial doctrine has made, but not for the first time. Ten years ago the Republicans of Indiana and Ohio, and of half a dozen States in the North-west, adopted the Ohio Democratic idea, and repudiated it when in power. The Indiana Republicans now delare for "no abandonment or depreciation of the greenback currency," and for the "receipt of greenbacks for customs;" but in absolute hostility to one part of this declaration they announce "opposition to further financial agitation." They bow to the majority of the Democratic doctrine of the West—with reservations. The words of their mouths do not seem to be the meditations of their hearts. They talk of "gold and silver and paper" with absolute looseness. Nothing there against the National Banks, nothing about resumption, but by denouncing all further discussion of the financial question they pronounce in favor of leaving our financial legislation as it is. That would damn any party in Indiana.

THE OLD HOME.

It is not a castle olden,
Standing in the sunlight golden,
Relic of the past,
With a deep moat mossed and hoary,
And a ray from bygone glory
O'er the ruin cast.

But a mansion fair and pleasant,
Known alike of peer and peasant
For its kindly cheer,
With its gables and leafy covers,
Ferny haunts of loitering lovers,
And the shy wild deer.

Crimson blossoms redly glowing,
Flickering shadows o'er it throwing,
Veil the lichen's stain;
Sunset gleams of rose and amber,
Where the ivy tendrils clamber,
Flush each casement pane.

Lurks no ghost behind the arras,
Happy midnight dreams to harass,
[illegible] no Banshee's wail;
Tapestry, nor antique lumber,
Doth its sunny hall encumber,—
Shield nor suit of mail.

Morning wakes its household noises,
Busy footsteps, laughing voices,
As in days of yore;
Burns the warm hearths too brightly,
Where the gay groups gather nightly,
Though it knows me no more.

Hearts, by other loves supplanted;
Steps, that once its precincts haunted,
Hushed by mount and sea;
Only my sad heart remembers
Flowery Junes and dark Decembers,
Spent, old home, in thee!

Shadows pace the garden alleys,
Wander with me through the valleys,
Join my woodland walk;
And by the streamlets willow-shaded,
Where the song-birds serenaded,
Parted lovers talk—

Idly walking, idly dreaming,
With the sunlit waters gleaming
Golden at their feet,
While the fair-haired children plunder,
Rosy-mouthed, with blue-eyed wonder,
Fruitage wild and sweet.

When I stretch my hands in greeting,
Each familiar name repeating,
Straightway from my sight,
Back to angel bowers they vanish,
Even as beams of morning banish
Visions of the night.

HAUNTED HOUSES.

The Black Ribbon on the Wrist.

The incidents which we are about to relate occurred at the commencement of the present century, and we must admit that the circumstantial evidence is very strong on behalf of the truthfulness of the preternatural portion of the narrative.

Lord Tyrone was born in Ireland, of noble and wealthy parents, who died when he was still very young. He was left to the guardianship of an elderly relation—an honorable man, but who had become strongly tainted with infidelity.

Upon this same gentleman's care was another ward—also an orphan, but of the tender sex. Lord Tyrone and Miss Gower (for that was the young lady's name) were therefore brought up together from their very childhood, and they regarded each other as brother and sister.

But we must here add that they were both educated by their guardian in those principles of infidelity which he himself so boldly professed.

This guardian dying when they were each of them about 16 years of age, they fell into very different hands.

After some years had elapsed, and both had attained their majority, they made a solemn compact that whichever should die first would, if permitted, appear to the other, to declare what religion was most approved by the Supreme Being!

Miss Gower was shortly afterward addressed by Sir Martin Beresford, to whom she was soon married; but a change of condition had no power to alter her friendship with Lord Tyrone. The families visited each other, and often spent some weeks together.

A short time after one of these visits, Sir Martin remarked that when his lady came down to breakfast her countenance was disturbed, and he inquired of her health.

She assured him that she was quite well.

He then asked her if she had hurt her wrist.

"Have you sprained it!" he said, observing a black ribbon round it.

She answered in the negative, and added: "Let me conjure you, Sir Martin, never to inquire the cause of my wearing this ribbon; you will never see me without it."

"Very well," said he, smiling; "since you beg me so earnestly, I will inquire no more."

The conversation here ended; but breakfast was scarcely over when Lady Beresford eagerly inquired if the post had come in. She was told it had not.

"Do you expect letters," said Sir Martin, "that you are so anxious for the arrival of the post?"

"I do," she answered. "I expect to hear that Lord Tyrone is dead. He died last Tuesday at 4 o'clock."

"I never in my life," exclaimed Sir Martin, "believed you to be superstitious; some idle dream has surely thus alarmed you."

At that instant the servant entered and delivered to his master a letter sealed with black.

"It is as I expected," exclaimed Lady Beresford; "Lord Tyrone is dead."

Sir Martin opened the letter; it came from Lord Tyrone's steward, and contained the melancholy intelligence of his master's death, and on the very day and hour Lady Beresford had before specified.

Sir Martin begged Lady Beresford to compose herself, and she assured him she felt much easier than she had done for a long time, and added, "I can communicate intelligence to you which I know will prove welcome; I can assure you beyond the possibility of a doubt that I shall in some months present you with a son."

Sir Martin received this news with the greatest joy.

After some months, Lady Beresford was delivered of a son (she had before been the mother of two daughters).

Sir Martin survived the birth of his son little more than four years.

After his decease his widow seldom left home; she visited no family but that of a clergyman who resided in the same village.

The clergyman's family consisted of himself, his wife, and one son, who, at the time of Sir Martin's death, was quite a youth.

To this son, however, Lady Beresford was after a few years married, notwithstanding the disparity of years and the manifest imprudence of a connection so unequal in every point of view.

Lady Beresford was treated by her young husband with contempt and cruelty, while at the same time his conduct proved him to be the most abandoned libertine.

By this, her second husband, she had two daughters; after which, such was the baseness of his conduct, she insisted on a separation.

They parted for a few years, when, so great was the contrition he expressed for his former conduct that, won over by his supplications, promises, and entreaties, she was induced to pardon, and once more reside with him, and was in time the mother of a son.

The day on which she had been confined just one month, being the anniversary of her birthday, she sent for Lady Betty Cobb (of whose friendship she had long been possessed) and a few other friends to request them to spend the day with her.

About 7, the clergyman by whom she had been christened, and with whom she had all her life been intimate, came into the room to inquire after her health.

She told him she was perfectly well, and requested him also to spend the day with them; "for," said she, "this is my birthday. I am 48 to-day."

"No, madam," answered the clergyman, "you are mistaken. Your mother and myself have had many disputes concerning your age; and I have at last discovered that I was right. I happened to go last week into the parish where you were born; I was resolved to put an end to the dispute; I searched the register, and find that you are but 47 this day."

"You have signed my death-warrant," she exclaimed; "I have then but a few hours to live. I must, therefore, entreat you to leave me immediately, as I have something of importance to settle before I die."

When the clergyman left her, Lady Beresford sent to forbid the company coming, and at the same time to request Lady Betty Cobb and her son (of whom Sir Martin was the father, and who was then about 22 years of age) to come to her apartment immediately.

Upon their arrival, having ordered the attendants to quit the room, "I have something," she said, "of the greatest importance to communicate to you both before I die—an event which is not far distant.

"You, Lady Betty, are no stranger to the friendship which subsisted between Lord Tyrone and myself; we were educated under the same roof, and in the same principles of infidelity.

"When the friends, into whose hands we afterwards fell, endeavored to persuade us to embrace the Christian religion, their arguments, though insufficient to convince, were powerful enough to stagger our former feelings, and to leave us wavering between two opinions.

"It was, then, in this perplexing state of doubt and uncertainty, that we made a solemn promise to each other that whichever died first should (if permitted) appear to the other, and declare what religion was most acceptable to Heaven.

"Accordingly, one night, while Sir Martin and myself were in bed, I suddenly awoke and discovered Lord Tyrone sitting by my bedside.

"He was dressed as when I had last seen him, in the evening costume of the day.

"'It is I,' he said; and the tone of his voice, always soft and low, was now softer and lower than ever, and likewise marked by an indescribably solemn gravity.

"Astonished, yet not absolutely frightened, but with a bewildering sensation in the brain, I screamed and endeavored to awake Sir Martin. 'For Heaven's sake,' I exclaimed, 'Lord Tyrone, by what means or for what reason came you hither at this time of night?'

"'Have you, then, forgotten our compact?' said he.

"'I died last Tuesday at 4 o'clock, and have been permitted, by the Supreme Being, to appear to you, to assure you that the Christian religion is true, and the only religion by which we can be saved! I am further suffered to inform you that you will soon become the mother of a son, who, it is decreed, will marry my daughter.

"'Not many years after his birth, Sir Martin will die, and you will marry again, a man by whose ill-treatment you will be rendered miserable. You will have two daughters and a son.

"'But, just one month after the birth of this son, you will die, in the 47th year of your age!'

"'Just Heavens!' I exclaimed, 'and can I prevent this?'

"'Undoubtedly you may,' returned the apparition; you are a free agent, and may prevent it all by resisting every temptation to a second marriage; but your passions are strong—you know not their power; hitherto you have had no trials. More I am not permitted to reveal; but if after this warning you persist in your infidelity your lot in another world will be miserable indeed.'

"'May I not ask,' said I, 'if you are happy?'

"'Had I been otherwise,' he replied, 'I should not have been permitted to appear to you.'

"'I may then infer that you are happy?'

"He smiled.

"'But how,' said I, 'when morning comes, shall I know that your appearance to me has been real, and not the mere representation of my own imagination?'

"'Will not the news of my death be sufficient to convince you?'

"'No,' I returned; 'I might have had such a dream, and that dream accidentally come to pass. I will have some stronger proof of its reality.'

"'You shall,' said he; and, waving his hand, the bed-curtains, which were crimson velvet, were instantly drawn up through a large iron hoop by which the tester of the bed was suspended. 'In that sign,' continued he, 'you cannot be mistaken; no mortal arm could have performed this.'

"'True,' said I; 'but sleeping we are often possessed of far more strength than when awake; though waking I could not have done it, asleep I might, and I shall still doubt.'

"'Here is a pocket-book. In this,' he said, 'I will write my name; you know my hand-writing?' I replied, 'Yes.'

"He wrote with a pencil on one side of the leaves.

"'Still,' said I, 'in the morning I may doubt; though waking I could not imitate your hand, asleep I might.'

"'You are hard of belief,' he rejoined. 'I might, by a single touch, leave a mark in your flesh that would forbid the possibility of further doubt; but it would injure you irreparably; it is not for spirits to touch mortal flesh.'

"'I do not,' said I, 'regard a slight blemish.'

"'You are a woman of courage,' replied he; 'hold out you hand.'

"I did so; he grasped my wrist; his hand was cold as that of death; in a moment the sinews shrunk up, every nerve withered.

"'Now,' said he, 'while you live let no mortal eye behold that wrist. To see it were sacrilege!' He stopped—I turned to him again—he was gone.

"During the time I had conversed with him my thoughts were perfectly calm and collected, but the moment he was gone I felt chilled with horror; the very bed moved under me.

"I endeavored, but in vain, to wake Sir Martin; all my efforts were ineffectual, and in this state of agitation and terror I lay for some time, when a shower of tears came to my relief, and I dropped asleep. In the morning Sir Martin arose and dressed himself as usual, without perceiving the state the curtains remained in."

After a long pause, Lady Beresford resumed her narrative in the following manner:

"When I awoke I found that Sir Martin had gone down. I arose, and, having put on my clothes, went to the gallery adjoining the apartment and took from thence a long broom (such as cornices are swept with); by the help of this I took down, with some difficulty, the curtains, as I imagined their extraordinary position might excite suspicion in the family.

"I then went to my work-box and bound a piece of black ribbon round my wrist. When I came down, the agitation of my mind had left an impression on my countenance too visible to pass unobserved by my husband.

"He instantly remarked it, and asked the cause. I informed him that Lord Tyrone was no more; that he died at the hour of 4 on the preceding Tuesday, and desired him never to question me more respecting the black ribbon, which he kindly desisted from doing. You, my son, as had been foretold, I afterward brought into the world, and in little more than four years after your birth your lamented father expired in my arms.

"After this melancholy event I determined, as the only probable chance to avoid the sequel of the prediction, forever to abandon all society—to give up every pleasure resulting from it, and to pass the rest of my days in solitude and retirement.

"But few can long endure to exist in a state of perfect sequestration; I began an intimacy with a family—with one alone; nor could I then foresee the fatal consequences which afterward resulted from it.

"Little did I think that their son, their only son, at the time a mere youth, would be the person destined by fate to prove my destruction.

"In a very few years I ceased to regard him with indifference; I endeavored by every possible way to conquer a passion the fatal effects of which I too well knew. I had fondly imagined that I had overcome its influence, when the evening of one fatal day terminated my fortitude, and plunged me in a moment down that abyss which I had been so long meditating how to shun.

"He had often solicited his parents for leave to go into the army; and, at last obtaining permission, he came to bid me farewell before his departure. The instant he entered the room he sank upon his knees at my feet, told me that he was miserable, and that I alone was the cause.

"At that moment my fortitude forsook me—I gave myself up for lost—and, regarding my fate as inevitable, without further hesitation I consented to a union, the immediate result of which I knew to be misery, and its end death! The conduct of my husband, after a few years, amply justified a separation, and I hoped by this means to avoid the fatal sequel of the prophecy; but, won over by his reiterated entreaties, I was prevailed upon to pardon, and once more to reside with him, though not until I had, as I thought, passed my 47th year. Alas! alas! I have this day heard, from indisputable authority, that I have hitherto labored under a mistake with regard to my age, and that I am but 47 to-day!

"Of the near approach of my death I therefore entertain not the slightest doubt. No—I cannot doubt! When I am dead, as the necessity of concealment closes with my life, I could wish that you, Lady Betty, would unbind my wrist, take from thence the black ribbon, and let my son, with yourself, behold it."

Lady Beresford here paused for some time; but, resuming the conversation, she entreated that her son would behave himself so as to merit the high honor he would in future receive from a union with the daughter of the late Lord Tyrone.

She then expressed a wish to lie down on the bed and endeavor to compose herself to sleep. Lady Betty Cobb and her son immediately called her domestics, and quitted the room, having first desired them to watch their mistress attentively, and, if they observed the smallest change in her, to call them instantly.

An hour passed, and all was quiet in the room. They listened at the door, and everything remained still, but in half an hour more a bell rang violently.

They flew to her apartment; but, before they reached the door, they heard the maid exclaim, "Oh, she is dead!"

Lady Betty then bade the servants quit the room, and herself, with Lady Beresford's son, approached the bed of his mother.

They knelt down by the side of it; Lady Betty then lifted her hand and untied the ribbon.

The wrist was found exactly as Lady Beresford had described it; every sinew shrunk, every nerve withered.

The black ribbon and pocket-book were formerly in the possession of Lady Betty Cobb, Marlborough buildings, Bath, who, during her long life, was ever ready to attest the truth of this narrative.

The whole of the Tyrone and Beresford families also have ever done the same; and their representatives, at the present day, would themselves regard with wonder any person who should express a doubt concerning such well-authenticated facts.

Need we add that the black ribbon which bound the withered wrist, and the pocket-book wherein the apparition inscribed his name, are treasured as sacred yet awful relics by the senior members of one of these families.

The Sorrows of Genius.

The night is waning, and the hush of inspiration makes the sanctum solemn. The news editor had just written himself a New York dispatch telling all about the sea serpent. The political editor is just closing a crusher full of blood and thunder, and winding up with a terrific exposure. The proof-reader is opening a new case of pencils for the purpose of marking all the errors in six lines of proof. The funny man, from the tearful expression of his sorrowful countenance, is known to be in the throes of a joke. The joke is born, and this is its name:

"A man died in Atchison, Kas., last week, from eating diseased buffalo meat. A clear case of suicide from cold bison."

Enter the intelligent compositor. "This Atchison item, what is the last word?"

To him, the funny man—"Bison."

Intelligent compositor—"B i s-o n?"

Funny man—"Yes."

The intelligent compositor demands to be informed what it means, and the painstaking funny man, with many tears, explains the joke, and, with great elaboration, shows forth how it is a play on "cold pisen."

"Oh, yes," says the intelligent compositor, and retires. Sets it up "cold poison."

Funny man groans, takes the proof, seeks the intelligent compositor, and explains that he wishes not only to make a play on the word "pisen," but also on the word "bison."

"And what is that?" asks the intelligent compositor.

The funny man patiently explains that it means "buffalo."

"Oh, yes!" shouts the intelligent compositor; "now I understand."

Mortified funny man retires, and goes home in tranquil confidence and growing fame.

Paper comes out in the morning "cold buffalo."

Two Smart Young Men.

Two smart young men got on a Burlington and Cedar Rapids train and laid themselves out to amuse and instruct the passengers. Very many funny things said and very many funny things did these two brilliant young men, and it did seem as though Providence had been just too kind to the other passengers to let them ride on the train with such smart young men. But presently there loomed up for them a colossal opportunity, when a lady, attended by a little girl and a little dog, came into the car. The two young men vied with each other in saying funny things about the pup. Presently the funniest young man said, in tones of perplexity, "Well, let me see, they make dogs pay on this train, don't they?" And then the lady turned around, and said, in just the dryest tones you ever heard a lady say anything, "Then you'd better get off before the conductor comes in." There was a great deal of talking and a great deal of laughter in the car between the place where the accident occurred and Burlington, but the men who were killed at the siege of Jerusalem were noisy, roaring, howling bacchanalians a week ago in comparison with those two young men for the rest of trip.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

Speaker Kerr's Disease.

The late Speaker Kerr's illness was something like Mr. William D. Kelley's, the member from Philadelphia. Mr. Kelley can neither smell nor taste. He can't discern the difference in taste between coffee and tea, though he drinks them. Mr. Kerr had an affection of the mucous membrane, which kept him spitting a good deal, though he never spat blood. He was called to Washington to a conference of the Democratic party leaders somewhere about 1872, and they met at Walker's restaurant and dined together. Mr. Kerr walked home in his dress coat, considerably heated, in the night air. He took a cold, and the mucous membrane of his whole body became inflamed. He consulted Dr. Rogers as soon as it became serious, and was told he could not live a year. But he survived the doctor, and lived more than two years, and was elected Speaker, a mortally-stricken man.

Birds, Flies and Apples.

A French paper, earnestly deprecating birdnesting, says: "A bird's nest contains, on an average, five eggs, which would, in the natural course, become five little birds. Each little one eats daily fifty flies or other insects, and this consumption extends over four or five weeks. Taking it at an average of thirty days, we shall find the number of flies destroyed by each nest of birds to be 7,500. Now, every fly eats daily a quantity of flowers, leaves, etc., equivalent to its weight, until it attains its maximum of growth; in thirty days it will have eaten a flower a day—a flower which would have become fruit. Each fly—the term is used, we presume, for insects generally—having, we will say, eaten thirty fruits in thirty days, the 7,500 flies which a nest of birds would have consumed cause a loss to us of 225,000 apples, pears, apricots and peaches. We commend this view of the matter to the parents of marauding children."

Mining Prospects in the Black Hills.

The heavy snow and rain storms have done much damage to the mines and mining interests throughout the entire camp. The high waters took before them all the bridges, dams and flumes in the several gulches, filling all the shafts, both quartz and placer, with water and debris, which threw many of the miners out of employment for several weeks. Placer digging, as a paying business, is about played out. It is true there are a few claims that pay working, but very few. Much money has been expended, and is still being expended, in digging ditches and fluming for the purpose of carrying water to the hydraulic hill of dry diggings. Along the sides of the several gulches these are considered rich, but have yet to be proven so. The quartz mines will certainly prove a success when the proper appliances are obtained and attached to the several mills by which they can divide and save the various kinds of rich minerals, consisting of gold, silver, platinum, etc., but not before. When this is arrived at, which will be accomplished within a year, mines that, under the present process of crushing ore, do not pay over $5 to $8 per ton, will certainly yield a clear profit of from $30 to $60 per ton.—Deadwood letter.

Lorenzo Dow.

Everybody has heard or read of this famous revival preacher, and a great many anecdotes are related of him. He was living at one time in a hilly and rocky place in Connecticut, when a very comical joke was played on Mr. Dow by some unruly boys.

"I don't suppose," said our informant, "that there's a prominent spot round the place that the old man has not preached and prayed on more than a half-dozen times. That is the right kind of a country," the speaker continued, cynically, with a sweep of the hand toward its stony fields and pastures, thatched with briers and bayberry bushes, "to produce a religion hard enough for anybody. No wonder that the preachers were tough. No nonsense at all about 'em. There's material enough lying round loose there to turn out a hell without any very great strain of imagination. The old man got his religion and his mission to preach direct from there and from the Bible. He didn't belong to no denomination, but set out on his own hook. He didn't take no pay, and went about as the apostles of old, wherever the spirit called him. Lord, how he used to sail into preachers that got salaries! He had ideas of his own, and was independent of every one and everything—'specially fashion. He always wore his beard long when everybody else shaved theirs off, and he wore an old straw hat, summer and winter, with the brim half tore off.

"Everybody went to hear him, and when it was known that 'Old Dow' was going to preach all the other meetings were deserted. The boys sometimes put up jobs on him, though. I recollect once that he was going to preach in an orchard, and a big crowd gathered to hear him. Well, just before the meeting began the fellows got him a great hogshead to stand on, and filled it about two-thirds full of water. They put in the head rather loosely, and waited for fun. Dow mounted on the barrel, gave out his text, got fired up, and was prancing and thumping around on that barrel-head in lively style, and suddenly in she went, splash, slush, boards, Dow, straw hat and all. The water was about up to his neck, and he scrambled out, dripping all over. Jerusalem! how the people laughed, and how Dow—well, he went right on preaching on the ground, but (significantly) he had commenced on grace, mercy and peace, but he wound up on hell-fire and eternal damnation."

The Wandering Jew from a Hebrew Point of View.

The legend of the Jew, says a Jewish paper, ever wandering and never dying, even from the crucifixion of Jesus to the present day, is spread over many European countries. The accounts, however, as in all fables, do not agree. One version is this: When Jesus was led to death, oppressed by the weight of the cross, he wished to rest himself near the gate at the house of Ahasuerus. This man, however, sallied forth and thrust him away. Jesus turned toward him, saying:

"I shall rest, but thou shalt move on till I return."

And from that time he has had no rest, and is obliged incessantly to wander about. Another version is that given by Matthew, of Paris, a monk of the thirteenth century: When Jesus was led from the tribunal of Pilate, to death, the doorkeeper, named Cartaffilous, pushed him from behind with his foot, saying:

"Walk on, Jesus, quickly; why dost thou tarry?"

Jesus looked at him gravely, and said: "I walk on, but thou shalt tarry till I come."

And this man, still alive, wanders from place to place in constant dread of the wrath to come. A third legend adds that this wandering Jew falls sick every hundred years, but recovers and renews his strength; hence it is that, after so many centuries, he does not look much older than a septuagenarian. Thus much for the legends. Not one of the ancient authors alludes to this wanderer. The first who reports such a thing is a monk of the thirteenth century, when, as is known, the world was full of pious frauds, even to disgust. However, the story has spread far and wide, so that it has become a proverb, "He runs about like a wandering Jew."

BORDER LANDS.

Oh, good the air of border lands;
Oh, dangerous dear their subtle spell;
Where thralldoms stretch uncertain hands
And careless, happy outlaws dwell.
'Twixt dawn and day, 'twixt day and nigh
In blissful, shadowy realms they lie;
Sweeter than dark, sweeter than light,
Too swift the moments hurry by.
'Twixt hearts that wait and hearts that love
Their sunny, vague horizons round—
Who would not journey back to prove
Once more the joys within that bound
'Twixt life and life, 'twixt death and death,
Rise this life's narrow, viewless strands;
Who knows how much it entereth
Our joy that they are border lands!

A BEAUTIFUL WOMAN.

In a little white house on a hillside green
Lives a beautiful woman as ever was seen;
In the sixty-five years that she's lived, I may say,
She's been growing more beautiful every day.
You do not believe it? Ask Susie, my sister,
She's the very first person that ever had kissed her.
And if she'd not nursed her by night and by day
Poor Sue would have been in a very bad way.
I can bring other witnesses whom you may face,
They will tell you the same—they were in the same case.
"Has she lovers?" Yes, surely! No less than eleven!
She has seven on earth, and four more up in heaven.
Her hair is so beautiful—faded and thin.
There are beautiful wrinkles, from forehead to chin,
Her eyes are as charming as charming can be,
When she looks o'er her glasses so fondly at me,
And I know by her life, which has beautiful been,
She is like "the King's daughter"—"all glorious within."
Ah, you've guessed who it is! It could be no other,
I'm sure, than my beautiful, darling old mother.

A Snake's Tongue.

The peculiarity of form and position in the tongue of a snake leads to the use of the word "exsertion" in speaking of that organ. Being, when at rest, inclosed within a sheath, the tongue can not move within the mouth like the tongues of other animals, but only when thrust forth or exserted. Of quadrupeds one might affirm (though the expression would be rather strained) that they "exsert" their tongues when putting forth their power, say to remove food from their teeth, or to lick the palate, both actions being possible with a closed mouth. But a snake can not do either of these things. With the reptile, to "exert" is also to exsert the tongue, for its motion can be but in one direction, viz., forward and beyond the mouth. A slight chink in the upper lip gives egress to this long, thin, and highly sensitive organ, while the mouth can remain closed. Thus exserted, the tongue appears to be constantly engaged, like the antennæ of insects, in exploring and investigating. No other word conveys the idea of the tongue's motion and direction like exsertion—the opposite to insertion; while exertion, the opposite to inertion, may be applied to activity which does not necessarily imply exsertion or thrusting forth. The two words have sometimes been confounded.

SABBATH READING.

The Oldest Christian Hymn.

In Book III. of Clement of Alexandria is given (in Greek) the most ancient hymn of the primitive church. It is there [illegible] years after the Apostles) asserted to be of much earlier origin. The following version will give some imperfect idea of the spirit:]

Shepherd of tender youth,
Guiding in love and truth,
Through devious ways;
Christ, our triumphant King,
We come Thy name to sing,
And here our children bring
To shout Thy praise.

Thou art our holy Lord!
The all subduing Word,
Healer of strife!
Thou didst Thyself abase!
That from sin's deep disgrace
Thou mightest save our race,
And give us life.

Thou art wisdom's High Priest;
Thou hast prepared the feast
Of holy love.
And in our mortal pain
None call on Thee in vain;
Help Thou dost not disdain—
Help from above.

Ever be Thou our Guide,
Our Shepherd and our pride,
Our staff and song.
Jesus, Thou Christ of God!
By the perennial word,
Lead us where Thou hast trod,
Make our faith strong.

So now, and till we die,
Sound we our praise on high,
And joyful sing.
Infants, and the glad throng,
Who to Thy church belong
Unite and swell the song
To Christ our King.

Work and Wisdom.

How may the Christian teacher learn to adapt his instructions to those whom he is called upon to guide? Let him be instructed by the diligence and care of the husbandman. No wise farmer would think of sowing all his lands with the same kind of seed. Before he began his labors he would study the nature and capabilities of every field, to discover whether it were fit for pasture, for cereal crops or for an orchard, and act according to the best of his judgment. Nor by doing this would he be disregarding the power of the Lord of providence. After all his care the same sunlight, rain and dew would need to descend upon every part to make it fruitful, and only by the blessing of Heaven could his work be crowned with success.

The Comforter.

We all like comfort. But what kind of comfort do we not merely like but need? Merely to be comfortable? To be free from pain, anxiety, sorrow? To have only pleasant faces round us, and pleasant things said to us? If we want that comfort, we shall very seldom find it. It will be very seldom good for us to have it. The comfort which poor human beings want in such a world as this is not the comfort of ease, but the comfort of strength. The comforter whom we need is not one who will merely say kind things, but give help—help to the weary and heavy laden heart which has no time to rest. We need not the sunny and smiling face, but the strong and helping arm. For we may be in that state that smiles are shocking to us, and mere kindness—though we may be grateful for it—of no more comfort to us than sweet music to a drowning man. We may be miserable, and unable to help being miserable, and unwilling to help it, too. We do not wish to flee from our sorrow. We dare not, it is so awful, so heartrending, so plain spoken, that God, the master and tutor of our hearts, must wish us to face it and endure it. Our Father has given us the cup—shall we not drink it? But who will help us to drink the bitter cup? Who will be the comforter, and give us not mere kind words, but strength? Who will give us the faith to say with Job, "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him?" Who will give us the firm reason to look steadily at our grief, and learn the lesson it was meant to teach? Who will give us the temperate will, to keep sober and calm amid the shocks and changes of mortal life? Above all, I may say—who will lead us into all truth? How much is our sorrow increased—how much of it is caused by simple ignorance? Why has our anxiety come? how are we to look at it? What are we to do? Oh, that we had a comforter who would lead us unto all truth; not make us infallible, or all-knowing, but lead us unto truth; at least, put us in the way of truth; put things in their true light to us, and give us sound and rational views of life and duty. Oh, for a comforter who would give us the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and ghostly strength, the spirit of knowledge and true godliness, and fill us with that spirit of God's holy fear which would make us not superstitious, not slavish, not anxious, but simply obedient, loyal, and resigned.—Charles Kingsley.

The Bible.

When we rise to the higher realm of thought, and ask whence we came and whither we are going; what life means; what are its relations, if any, to an after state; what God is, and what is His character; what He requires of us as the subjects of His moral government; how He proposes to deal with us as sinners; how we are to be forgiven and stand justified in God's sight—in a word, when we seek for religious truth as the foundation on which to rest our faith, erect our hopes, and die in peace, then the Bible comes to us as the Book of books, with answers to the deepest and most universal questions of the soul, and with directions and promises to pilot that soul across the sea of life and assure its safety and good in the spirit land. Here it is the imperial volume. Here it has no equal. The peasant and the sage here alike need its light. We do well to give prominence in our thoughts to the fact that religion—considered as a body of truths revealed and apprehended, as a body of resulting experiences felt, and, in both aspects, as a preparatory preliminary to a larger and grander scene beyond the boundaries of time, as the garb and covering of the soul for its habitation in the skies—is the sun and the center of the Bible system. It thinks not of what men are here, except in connection with what they are to be hereafter; and it thinks of the what here chiefly on account of another what there. All other ideas, in the comparison are inferior, subordinate, but not secondary. Everything in the Bible—its history, its miracles, its prophecy, its Christ, its atonement, its pardon, its salvation, its promise, its heaven and its hell—converges at this one point. Every ray of light, in the practical effect sought, terminates here.—Dr. Samuel T. Spear, in the Princeton Review.

Betrayed by his Own Curiosity.

During the festival of the Bairam an inhabitant of the village of Funduckli had dressed his child, about 2 years old, in a shawl and a cap, ornamented with pieces of gold, and intrusted it to a slave, who left it for a moment seated in the court of the house. On his return the child was gone, and every search for it proved useless. The father applied to the Chief of Police at Bagdad, entreating him to inquire into the circumstances. This officer reflected that the child could not be carried far, on account of his cries, and, therefore, must have been taken by one of the neighbors. He did not communicate this idea to anybody, but directed one of his messengers to go to the village of Funduckli at the hour of prayer, to enter the mosque and summon the iman (or priest) to come immediately to his mavaur. When the iman came into the presence of the Chief of Police, he received a positive injunction to come to him again on the morrow, and give him the name of the person who first came to inquire of him the cause of his being sent for to the police office. The Turks in general pay little attention to the affairs of others, not even in those of their priests; consequently, on returning to the mosque one man only came to him to ask the cause of the sudden summons. The iman replied that it was only in relation to a firman (decree) which he was to have read, but which was withdrawn. However, on being informed by the iman of what had passed, the Chief of Police caused the inquisitive man to be arrested, and discovered the body of the child concealed under the staircase of his house, and thus proved that it was he who carried it off. He was sentenced to be instantly beheaded.

EARTHQUAKE.

A South American Town Destroyed and 300 Lives Lost.

A gentleman who recently arrived in New York from Puerto Cabello, in South America, gives some details of the great earthquake in Venezuela last month. This gentleman was in Valencia at the time, and says that, although severe shocks were felt everywhere, no loss of life was reported except in the valley of the River Tuy. This valley lies between two ranges of mountains near the coast of the Caribbean sea, and is very fertile, being used chiefly for growing sugar. The town of Cua, about thirty-five miles southwest of Caracas, was entirely destroyed. A terrible shock was suddenly felt at about 8:30 in the evening. The ground seemed to roll like sea waves, throwing down the walls of the houses, crushing many, and entangling others in the debris. The roofs were made of light material, which caught fire from the lamps which were overturned, and a general conflagration ensued. In vain the poor unfortunates who had escaped the falling walls endeavored to gain the open ground. The flames spread rapidly, and the people on the outskirts of the village were unable to offer any assistance. The shrieks of the dying were to be heard for a long time above the crackling of the flames. Fully 300 lives were lost at Cua that night. Repetitions of the earthquake were looked for, and those who had escaped were in a constant state of terror for a number of days. The town of Ocumare, about twenty miles east of Cua, and in the same valley, suffered extremely, the houses being wrecked and a number of serious accidents occurring, but the number of the persons killed or injured had not been ascertained when the bark left. The business of the country was at a stand-still, and the greatest terror prevailed whenever telegrams prophesying the approach of a heavy shock were received. The people in the towns on such occasions would remain in the streets during the greater part of the night. The shocks have severely damaged the industries of the whole country. Workmen had not the heart to work in the sugar factories, many of which had fallen in. The losses will be very large, but cannot yet be estimated. The earthquake was the severest experienced in Venezuela for years, it being considered much heavier than that of 1812.

Cheap Living.

How to cook so as to make clean, savory dishes is quite as important as to know what food to purchase, and in what manner it is to be cooked so as to secure the greatest amount of sustenance for the least money; but that is chiefly to be learned by experience. The bill of fare which Miss Corson, the New York philanthropist, publishes in her pamphlet on this subject will, undoubtedly, show something new to many people now pinched for want of sufficient food. One direction is as follows, for a family of five:

"Monday there is boiled rice and milk for breakfast, corned beef and cabbage for dinner, and peas boiled in stock for supper. That day's food costs 35 cents. Tuesday, broth and bread for breakfast, costing 10 cents; for dinner, baked beans; supper, macaroni and cheese. Wednesday there is toasted bread and scalded milk for breakfast, stewed tripe for dinner, and polenta for supper. Thursday, rice panada for breakfast, salt potaufeu for dinner, and lentils stewed in stock for supper. Friday, broth and bread for breakfast, mutton and turnips for dinner, and barley boiled in broth for supper. Saturday, mutton broth and bread for breakfast, beef and potatoes for dinner, and beans boiled in broth for supper. Sunday's fare costs 61 cents, and includes breakfast of cocoa, bread and fried lentils, dinner of bean broth, haslet stew and suet roly-poly pudding, and supper of cheese pudding. For the week, that makes a total expense of $2.53, and leaves a balance, on my estimate, of 62 cents for extra bread, milk and butter."

Population of Great Britain.

The Registrar General of Great Britain estimates the resident population of England and Wales in the middle of 1878 at 24,854,397—307,088 more than in the middle of last year; that of Scotland at 3,593,729, an increase of 33,212; and that of Ireland at 5,433,640, an increase of 97,245. The total population of the United Kingdom is stated at 33,881,966, or 437,547 more than at the corresponding period last year.

THE EXCHANGE MENAGERIE.

Some Interesting Animals Found in the Newspapers.

The goose with four wings at Natchez, Miss.

The lamb at Round Prairie, Ill., which has two perfectly-formed heads.

The cow at Fergus, Ont., in whose stomach a stick two feet long and half an inch thick was found on butchering her.

The dog (Newfoundland) of Mr. Mulford, of Jersey City, who, when its companion died, refused food and speedily perished of grief.

The game-cock at Nelson Furnace, Ky., which attacked Minnie Saunders, aged 11, and, driving its spur into her head, killed her on the spot.

The swan at Mount Auburn, N. Y., that knocked down Mrs. William Greenough, an old lady of 80, nearly plucked out one of her eyes, and left her insensible.

The canary bird of Mrs. A. F. Bush, of Medina, N. Y., which has just returned home after an absence of eight months, sought his old cage, and taken to singing.

The chicken of Mr. James Harney, North Norwich, Ont., who remained buried under a hay-mow two weeks, without food or water, but was taken out lively and well.

The dog at Union Hill, N. J., the late Mr. Martin Singer tried to kill. The gun missed fire, so he hit the dog with the stock, discharging the piece into his own thigh and severing an artery.

The sick pet dog at New Orleans which died in its mistress' arms. Exhausted by sitting up with it so many nights, and to allay her sorrow, she took a dose of laudanum, and came within an ace of dying.

The turkey about which two neighbors in Bloomfield, Ct., quarreled evoking the decision by Judge Calhoun that turkeys are not animals (not being mentioned in the Pound laws), though geese are.

The sparrows which have taken possession of Manhattan Market, New York, an unoccupied building covering four acres of ground, and turned it into a huge nest, from which three efforts have been made to drive them, but ineffectually.

The bees Mr. Morris Ellis, of Georgetown, Ill., undertook to drive to market. They didn't like the jolting of the wagon, and so the inmates of all eight hives sallied out, stung the two horses to death, and left Mr. Ellis in a critical condition.

The turkey and partridge at Chelsea, Vt., that are sharing the same nest. The turkey continues to deposit her egg daily, although the partridge began to sit after laying thirteen. During the occupation of the nest by the turkey the partridge attends to feeding.

The two dogs of the Messrs. Bills, of Amherst, N. H., who, after living peacefully together for years, got into a quarrel over a rabbit they had run down, fought, and were found lying dying, facing each other, utterly exhausted by loss of blood. They were buried in one grave.

The dog at No. 14 Cortlandt street, New York, which, when the house took fire, although almost suffocated, caught his master by the leg of his pants, and awakened him, after he was overcome by the smoke, by dragging him to the floor from off the table where he was sleeping.

Who Was Casabianca?

Owen Casabianca, the young hero of Mrs. Hemans' poem beginning, "The boy stood on the burning deck," so familiar to every schoolboy, was a native of Corsica, the island on which Napoleon was born. His father, Louis Casabianca, was a French politician and naval commander of some note. Owen was born in 1788. His mother dying while he was quite young, he was taken upon a man-of-war, and studied seamanship under the eye of his father. He was a favorite with every one on the ship, as he was a handsome boy, good humored and intelligent, and noted for his ready obedience to the rules of strict naval discipline. At only 10 years of age he was a midshipman under his father, who at that time commanded the Orient, one of the largest vessels in the French navy, carrying 120 guns and 500 seamen. In the celebrated Battle of the Nile, in 1798, the boy was set to help work a battery. In the midst of the action, the Orient took fire. Almost immediately after Capt. Casabianca was wounded by a musket ball, and then by a splinter which laid him insensible. The ship was soon enveloped in smoke and flames, and the crew began to desert her, but the boy, unconscious of his father's condition, refused to leave his post and still clung to his battery. At last, when the ship was a mass of flames, and he knew that his father, if alive, could not reach him, he leaped overboard and tried to save himself. But it was too late. Instantly, with a terrific explosion, the Orient was blown into fragments. The sky was filled with flame and smoke and fiery timbers, and the boy was seen no more until the next day, when his mangled corpse was found among the fragments of the wreck.

Battle on a Ball Ground.

A game of base-ball was played near Passaic on Sunday afternoon by young men from Passaic and Paterson. A dispute arose, which ended in a fight between a Passaic and a Paterson man. There were 300 spectators, who formed a ring, and the fight was continued until one of the men struck the other a blow that was considered foul. Then the respective friends of the fighters pitched in, and the fight became general. The Passaic men had the bats, and that gave them the advantage. They vanquished the Patersonians and drove them from the field in confusion, with several broken noses.—New York Sun.

HORRID! Yes, it is, that our habits will produce disease; but it is a certain fact that our style of eating and working will sometimes produce Heart Disease, and we must buy some remedy for its cure. We can recommend to you Dr. Graves' HEART REGULATOR as a reliable remedy, one which has been sold for twenty years, and whose merits are conceded by those who know of its use. Try it, and our word for it you will thank us for the recommendation. Among the many forms of Heart Disease are Palpitation, Enlargement, Spasms of the Heart, Stoppage of the Action of the Heart, Trembling all over and about the Heart, Ossification or Bony Formation of the Heart, Rheumatism, General Debility and Sinking of the Spirits. Send for a pamphlet of testimonials of cures to F. E. INGALLS, Concord, N. H.

The HEART REGULATOR is for sale by druggists at 50 cents and $1 per bottle.

Geo. P. Rowell & Co.'s Newspaper Advertising Bureau, New York.

THE OBJECT OF OUR ESTABLISHMENT.

Our Newspaper Advertising Bureau, No. 10 Spruce street, New York, is an establishment intended to facilitate the convenient and systematic placing of advertisements in newspapers. It is conducted upon the principles which we conceive to be the right ones for securing the best results to the advertiser, the publisher, and ourselves.

We undertake to represent American newspapers, not only the newspapers of the city of New York and of all other American cities, religious, agricultural and other class newspapers, but also the small country journals. We receive regularly and keep on file the newspapers of every description throughout the land, whether issued daily, weekly, or monthly.

CONFINED STRICTLY TO NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING AND TO AMERICAN NEWSPAPERS.

We confine our transactions to newspapers, and do not accept or undertake the management of other classes of advertising, such as books, sign boards, posters, or job printing.

It is our hope that by adhering to one branch of advertising we may make ourselves masters of it.

We also restrict our dealings to newspapers published within the geographical limits of the United States and Dominion of Canada.

THE SYSTEM OF ARRANGEMENT FOR NEWSPAPER FILES.

We have a system of filing newspapers by an arrangement of shelving and partitions, separate space being accorded to each, and labeled with the printed name of the paper it is intended to accommodate, by means of which arrangement a stranger can find any paper he wishes to examine with something like the readiness with which he would a word in a dictionary, a name in a directory, or a book in a library catalogue.

THE NATURE OF THE SERVICE WHICH IT IS OUR BUSINESS TO RENDER TO THE ADVERTISER.

We undertake to maintain an established credit with every newspaper, and to have at hand a schedule of the charges adopted by the publisher of each for advertising space in its columns; to be able to quote those rates to an advertiser who wishes to insert an advertisement in one or several, and to procure the prompt insertion of the advertisement without any extra charge for the service rendered, which service consists of quoting the price, printing or writing as many duplicates of the advertisement as may be required to furnish one to each paper to be used, forwarding the copy for insertion at our own expense for postage or messenger service, examining the papers to see that the advertisement appears when and in a manner that it ought to, checking each subsequent issue of the advertisement in each paper in a book kept for that purpose, at all times subject to the inspection of the advertiser, and marking plainly in each paper the advertisement as it appears, so when the advertiser comes (or sends) for the purpose of having the files examined (to see that the service for which his money pays has been actually rendered), the eye may light promptly upon his announcement, without the labor of searching a whole paper or page.

If errors or omissions occur, it is our duty to notify publishers, at our own expense for labor, postage or messenger, and to see to it that the publisher of the paper actually does the specified service for which the advertiser contracted.

THE AMOUNT OF MONEY TO BE EXPENDED.

Persons who have had little experience as advertisers often have a pretty clear understanding of what they would like to do, but are entirely ignorant of the probable cost.

We have made out for such a person a plan of advertising calling for an investment of $5,000, and on submitting it for approval found our customer dismayed at the magnitude of the expense, he not having contemplated an expenditure exceeding $200 or $300. In such a case labor would have been saved, if at the commencement of the negotiation the question had been asked: "How much money are you prepared to devote to this advertising?"

THE CONFIDENCE OF OUR PATRONS A MATTER OF PRIME IMPORTANCE.

It is a matter of prime importance to us, for the purpose of maintaining our influence with publishers, that it shall come to be understood among them that our statements about the advertising to be done, or not to be done, are to be relied upon; and to this end our dealing with our advertising patrons must be upon a basis of mutual confidence and respect.

OUR CUSTOMERS ENTITLED TO OUR BEST SERVICE.

Whenever we are doing the advertising for any individual or firm, we consider them entitled to our best services. If they suggest using a paper which we know to be not the best for the purpose, we say so and give the reasons. We often expend a good deal of time for very small advertisers, much more than the profits on their patronage would warrant; but as they intrust to us what they have to disburse, and influence in our direction the patronage of their friends and acquaintances, we are content.

OUR PROMISE.

We promise those advertisers who intrust their advertising patronage to our management that we will not allow them to be charged in any instance any more than the publishers' schedule rates; that we will procure for them the acceptance of any advantageous offer made to them definitely by any newspaper publisher, advertising agent, or canvasser of responsibility. Although we are unwilling to do work without a profit, and never offer to do so, yet in conformity with the promise made above, we sometimes find it advisable. Competitors, anxious to gain a hearing and secure attention, occasionally make offers which it would advance the true interests of our customers to accept. In such cases we hold ourselv bound to secure the bargain offered.

Extract from the New York Times, June 14, 1875.

Ten years ago Messrs. Geo. P. Rowell & Co. established their advertising agency in New York city. Five years ago they absorbed the business conducted by Mr. John Hooper, who was the first to go into this kind of enterprise. Now they have the satisfaction of controlling the most extensive and complete advertising connection which has ever been secured, and one which would be hardly possible in any other country but this. They have succeeded in working down a complex business into so thoroughly a systematic method that no change in the newspaper system of America can escape notice, while the widest information upon all topics interesting to advertisers is placed readily at the disposal of the public.

Imperial Indorsement.

Owing to the perfect purity of DOOLEY'S YEAST POWDER, and its superior excellence in every respect over all other preparations, it has been adopted and used in the Royal households of the following countries, viz.: Germany, England, Spain, Russia, Denmark, Sweden, Italy and Brazil. It was long ago adopted and is to-day used by thousands of royal American households scattered all over the Western world, and the high esteem in which it is held in this country fully justifies its introduction and use as above stated.

WILHOFT'S TONIC.—THE GREAT FAVORITE!—The popular Chill Cure of the age! Composed of pure and simple drugs. At this season of the year the human system is liable to become disordered from the insufficient efforts of the liver to discharge the excess of bile. If nature is not assisted in her efforts, severe bilious attacks or prostrating fevers necessarily follow, causing great suffering and even death. A little timely precaution, however, will prevent all this, and may be found in that favorite household remedy SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR.

SIMMONS
REGULATOR

SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR has been in use for half a century, and there is not one single instance on record where it has failed to effect a cure when taken in time according to the directions. It is, without doubt, the greatest LIVER MEDICINE in the world; is perfectly harmless, being carefully compounded from rare roots and herbs, containing no mercury or any injurious mineral substance. It takes the place of quinine and calomel, and has superseded these medicines in places where they have heretofore been extensively used. Procure a bottle at once from your druggist. Do not delay. Give it a fair trial, and you will be more than satisfied with the result obtained.

CAUTION.

As there are a number of imitations offered to the public, we would caution the community to buy no Powders or Prepared SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR unless in our Engraved Wrapper, with Trade-Mark, Stamp and Signature unbroken. None other is genuine.

J. R. LANNING, CHAIRMAN
DeKalb Co. Dem Cen. Com.

If this new revolution is going to break out, isn't it about time for it to begin? Why are not the frightened Republicans making preparations to put it down, or do they expect to frown it down.

Eastern Democrats are quiet about Presidental candidates. They have so far offered but two, S. J. Tilden and George B. McClellan. The west will make it a stand-off, presenting Hendricks and Thurman.

Geo. H. K. Moss, Capt. Hartman, H. S. Morse, R. M. Lockhart, J. D. Leighty, J. A. Provines, W. L. Penfield, W. J. Austin, J. V. Hazzard and C. K. Baxter, attended the tamest Convention ever held in the State last week.

Now, that the Potter Committee is showing up the fraud conspiracy of counting in a President, the Republican papers are quite disgusted with the way Democrats are running things. It makes them squeal terribly to see their tricks uncovered.

Ben. Harrison and the Indianapolis Journal take special pains to insult all those favoring the greenback. Nine-tenths of the citizens of Indiana favor it, and will they not resent the insult? Will the meekly bow to being called idiots, maniacs, repudiators and Communists or show that they are men? We shall see.—Richmond Independant.

If Edison had only had a phonograph down in Louisiana while Noyes and Sherman and Stoughton were discussing the situation with Jim Anderson, how pleasant it would be now to sit on the steps of the Capitol and turn the crank and listen to the conversation of these great and good men!

With Anderson and Levisee testifying how the Radicals captured the Presidency in 1876, and Brother Orville telling how they expected to seize it again in 1880, it would probably not be in the nature of using incendiary language if we should remark that that party is in a fair way to loose something of the implicit confidence of the country.

A Pittsburg paper, in noticing the visit of General Belknap to that city, says he is "a gentleman of manners, and one of the men still destined to make his mark on the history of his country." The paper seems to forget that the General has already made his mark on the history of his country, and a very dirty mark it is, too.

The Bannock Indians have taken up the hatchet, and are now on the war path against whites and Indians. The cause assigned for their being so naughty is the Fort Wayne Gazette. Through that paper they learned that Gen. Banning had abolished the army and they immediately resolved on a circus of their own. Bannock is the Indian for Banning, and it is now hinted that the General is more than a first cousin to the bounding Bannocks.

The Indiana Republicans really look for a revolution. Read their resolution:

> "We solemnly pledge ourselves to support and maintain President Hayes and the lawfully constituted authorities of the Government in resisting the revolution."

The only revolution the Republicans have to fear is that of public opinion, and all the resolutions they can pass will not stem it.—Sentinel.

The New York Times, the leading Republican paper of the country says of Anderson's testimony: "Injudicious republicans imagine that the bad character of the witness justifies them in ignoring evidence which does not depend upon his character, and in picking flaws in his statement as a demonstration of the innocence of the accused. They would conduct the case as a sharp lawyer would defend his client in a police court, caring very little for the methods that secure acquital provided only that result be effected.

The testimony of James E. Anderson before the Potter investigating committee, is very damaging to Secretary Sherman and Stanley Mathews, but Anderson is a perjured villian and his testimony is good for nothing unless strongly corroborated.—Warsaw Republican.

Certainly he is a perjured villian, but he counted Hays in all the same, villian or not. Had it not been for just such villians, a Democratic President would be in the White House. We don't care whether any more testimony is ever taken on the subject of this great fraud upon the people, we have all along been convinced that by the treachery and conniving of the Republican leaders the people were swindled out of their choice.

It is reliably reported that the Republican State Convention last week, at Indianapolis, was a very tame affair, and that with some difficulty they finally succeeded in getting a ticket in the field, as this and that gentleman declined as soon as his name was announced. There were several counties not represented. There was no enthusiasm, no interest, none of the old-timed spirit which gave animation to the party in the days of Gov. Morton. Gen. Ben. Harrison was made Chairman and delivered a short speech in which he intimated that the next Legislature should make provisions for an asylum for idiots of the greenback persuasion. It is our opinion that Ben. put that in for the benefit of Charley Baxter, who was in attendance, and is now gloating over his victory. He is now trying to ease them down a little by saying he published their State platform last week. Harrison demonstrated plainly that he could not fill the place of Morton, and there was considerable complaint against him on account of the insulting language he used toward the greenback element.

Here is the way those devils have been rewarded, who swore falsely and manipulated the returns in Florida to count in Hayes. Governor Stearns was appointed on the Hot Springs Commission; J. W. Howell, who got up Drigger's returns in Baker county, is now collector of customs at Fernandina, Fla. Jos. Bowers, election inspector charged with manipulating ballots in Leon Co., is in the treasury at Washington; William H. Vance, clerk at Archer precinct No. 2, has a federal clerkship in Philadelphia; Bell, inspector in Jefferson county, had received a federal appointment but was since removed; George W. Leon, inspector in Leon county, is a clerk in the treasury at Washington; Dennis, of Alachua county, had, recently, a position in the treasury; Moses J. Taylor, one of the returning board of Jefferson county, is in the land office at Washington. Pending the close of the labors of the state canvassing board Governor Stearns said to witness he thought it of some importance that the first reading before the board of the face of the returns should show that Hayes was elected.

The Potter Investigation.

The Committee has been at work, and as a result some very startling revelations have been made. James E. Anderson was the first witness called, and his testimony in brief was to the effect that, he refused to protest against the peaceable election in the parish of which he was Supervisor. It was necessary, in order to carry the State for the Hayes and Wheeler electors, that the vote of the parish (which gave 1,743 democratic majority) should be thrown out. Anderson was besought by his party friends to make the protests. He refused, but did sign a piece of paper, but which he refused to swear to, and some one else wrote the protest, and that the protest filed with the Returning Board was not the protest he signed. The letters before the election, which were exhibited, go to show plainly that Kellogg had endeavored to arrange a deliberate plan whereby five parishes were thrown out. The following letter from John Sherman was submitted:

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 20, 1876.

MESSRS. D. A. WEBER AND JAMES E. ANDERSON:

GENTLEMEN—Your note of even date has just been received. Neither Mr. Hayes, myself, the gentlemen who accompany me, or the country at large can ever forget the obligations under which you have placed us. Should you stand firm in the position you have taken, from a long and intimate acquaintance with Governor Hayes, I am justified in assuming the responsibility for the promises made, and will guarantee that you will be provided for as soon after the fourth of March as may be practicable, and in such a manner as will enable you both to leave Louisiana should you deem it necessary.

Very truly yours,

[Signed] JOHN SHERMAN.

It is seldom that John Sherman shows signs of nerverousness. He was unmistakably embarrassed to-day when he came to the Committee-room. He was pale, and looked haggard. When handed the letter, he began to look at it. Then he remembered that he had forgotten his spectacles. Judge Cox, who sat by him, loaned him his pair. Again he scanned the letter. For full five minutes he read it. Then he re-read it. Ten thousand memories of what inspired it evidently flashed through his mind. 'Did you write that letter, Secretary, Sherman?" asked Mr. McMahon. His answer was evasive; "I have no recollection of it. I do not think I did. At the same time there are things in it that I would have written." "That will do," said chairman Potter, and Sherman left the room as soon as he could get out of it.

The investigation has created great excitement, and other prominent men will no doubt be implicated. The Republican journals are doing all they can to stem the tide by denouncing the Committee.

Ben. Harrison.

Terre Haute Express (rep.)

Gen. Ben. Harrison is the chosen leader of the Indiana republicans. He is their candidate for the Senate. He presided over their convention yesterday. He sounded the key-note of their campaign, and this is one of his utterances:

> "Demagogues says that a species of money called fiat money is the money of the poor man. We have no asylum for idiots in Indiana, but I think it would be well for the next legislature to turn its attention in that direction."

We quote this for the greenback men of Indiana to read. We want them to remember it. It would be well to cut it out and show it around, and keep it for reference. Bear in mind that it is the first duty of the greenback men of Indiana to see that Gen. Harrison is beaten for the United States Senate. Charles Sumner once said that Stephen A Douglas could not be president because he pronounced negro nigger. Let it be understood that the man who travels out of the way to insult the greenback men of Indiana can never be elected to the United States senate from this State. Harrison was the last republican candidate for governor. He had a good deal of prestige when he started, and very little when he ended. He undertook the discussion of the financial question, and he demonstrated that he had never given one days study on the subject.

Democratic papers are now beginning to trot out the almost forgotten platform adopted by the party at the state convention held so long ago that the issues embodied in it have all been settled. It is now published as a curiosity. There can be no other object in view.—Warsaw Republican.

Well, now let us see whether the issues in the Democratic State platform have all been settled. The platform demands that the national bank notes shall be vetured. Is that settled? 2nd. It demands that the greenback be made a full legal tender. Is that settled yet? 3rd. It demands that the United States notes shall be taxed. Is that settled yet? 4th. It demands that the legal rate of interest shall be six per cent. Is that settled yet? 5th. It demands the unconditional repeal of the Resumption Act. Is that settled yet? 6th. It demands a redistricting of the State, so that the people may be represented as they vote. Is that settled yet? 7th. It demands that the soldiers of the Mexican war be given a pension. Is that settled yet? The editor of the Republican has either not read the Democratic platform, or has purposely stated an untruth. With the exception of the demand for the silver dollar, the demands of the Democratic State platform are still the demands of the people, and all demogogical attempts to ignore them will have no avail.

MR. EDITOR:—I see no name, nor do I hear one announced as a candidate by the democracy for the Legislature. In these troublous times, while there is much talk and fear of Mexicanizing our Government of revolution, of frauds, perjuries and thieving in high places, it behoves us to call to our aid in the councils of the State, our purest, wisest, experienced and reliable honest men. There is one man in our county who combines all these essential qualities, one who has done more for his country and party, more for the material interests of the people of this county than any other one in it, and who never served his party, or any person amiss. One who has not asked the suffrage of the people for twenty three years, and one who will not long be permitted to serve his country with his age, ability and wisdom, and would bestow an honor upon us, if we would call him from his privacy. That man's name is Major S. W. Sprott. We place him in nomination.

The elevator of the B. & O. R. R. at Albion, was destroyed by fire Tuesday morning of last week. The New Era says that as the passenger train going east had passed but a short time previous to the fire, many think that it originated from sparks from the engine, while others feel confident that it was an incendiary's work.

Ryan Glutter, Esq., of Waterloo placed a fine basket of splendid cherries on our table last Monday. If there is any fruit in this world that reminds us of boyhood it is cherries and red apples—how we used to climb trees with empty stomachs, and get down with—the colic. Our friend will please accept our thanks for his kindness.

We regret to say that the Essay read by Mrs. Brown at the Conference here last week, does not appear this week from the fact that they have refused to furnish the manuscript. The fact that the COURIER has a general circulation, and that a critical eye might discover something not original, might have had some influence in the matter.

The Hawkeye says the woman's hotel in New York "busted up" because no men were allowed thereat. The women could not endure the absence of all that makes life bright and happy. And so their splendid hotel had to shut up. Too bad, too bad! We are such fascinating fellows, but we can't help it, dog gone our handsome pictures, can we?

A letter from T. B. Totten, now at Huntsville, Kansas, reports the crops in splendid shape. He says: Stahl went out on the prairie one night and got lost, and it rained all night. He yelled like a Comanche, but it was no good until morning. Its an ordinary thing for a man to get lost on his own farm out here. Get up a party and come out here, next fall on a hunt—lots of game. Have broke forty acres, have 37 in corn.

Notice to Litigants.

Notice is hereby given that an adjourned term of the DeKalb Circuit Court will be held at the Court House in Auburn, commencing on Monday, August 5th, 1878, for the purpose of disposing of business pending in said Court at the May term 1878. The petit jurors called at the May term are required to be in attendance on said day.

By order of court.

GEO. H. K. MOSS, Clerk.

Tom. C. Mays, editor of the Auburn COURIER, got a terrible caning at Pleasant Lake a few days ago; and now by way of revenge, is abusing the innocent babies of Steuben county. Tom., of you want to be elected County Clerk you must kiss every baby (or its mother) in the county.—Col City Post.

Ah, Brown, it was not the babies nor their mothers we said aught against, but we did think their daddies were awful. They ought not to be displeased at that, as did they not give us a cane on the same ground.

We regret to announce the sudden death of Mr. Frank Cool, son of Isaac Cool, of this place. About a week before he was taken down with lung fever, and, although every effort was made for his relief, death claimed him as its victim. He was 32 years of age, and leaves a wife and two children. Frank was a quiet industrious young man, attentive and prompt in his business, and was esteemed by all who knew him. His mother died but a few months ago, and a general sympathy is felt towards the bereaved family.

In passing the farm of Mr J. D. Kelly the other day, we were struck with the admirable appearance it presents. His residence is a handsome brick, neat and commodious, and admirably arranged for comfort. His extensive stables are built after the most approved pattern, and are not surpassed in the county. His fields show that Mr. Kelly is a model farmer, being well under-drained and surrounded by good fences. He takes great pride in raising good stock, and his cattle, sheep and hogs will rate with the best in the neighborhood. He has a clear well defined method of farming, and his system of rotating the crops of his fields might be imitated to great advantage by others. The whole appearance indicates the thrift and enterprise of the master, and he may well be called the Golden farmer.

St. Joe Items.

Any one wishing to improve their breed of hogs, should inquire of O. H., as he has a new breed, the name of which has not been ascertained.

—Parties from Huntertown, Ind., have purchased the saw mill owned by John Sommerlot, and are already deep in the timber business.

—Rhodabech, who has been living apart from his wife for the past eight months, has again taken Jane to his arms, and all is serene. Rhody says, let come what will, he must live with Jane, as it is very essential that a man have some one to mend his pantaloons when they are about played out.

—Judging from appearances we would say that Ed. White, Johnny Jenkins, Thad Meese, J. Koch, enjoyed themselves better at a game of cards, than any other four men in the county.

—The first nine of Coburn town played a game of base ball with the first nine of Newville on Saturday, the score standing 15 for Newville and 14 for Coburn, Newville winning back the bat and ball lost two weeks ago.

—We noticed a new dwelling being erected in the ancient town of Orange, the property of M. E. Donaldson. Gentlemen, its a shame to tear down the old land marks to build a new. We believe that to be the first building erected in Orange since the flood.

—King's Corners has some new additions this spring. Byron W. has a bran new pig pen, and Marion Dermot a part of a barn, and the man that lives with Chester, a fine new carriage. We presume the buggy is to pay for the choking the old man got a short time ago. DUROC.

—The Rev. E. W. Errick, P. Bishop and Miss M. Case attended the Sabbath School Convention at North Manchester, last week.

—J. A. Provines attended the Republican State Convention at Indianapolis.

—Married, on Thursday evening, Mr. David Wasson to Miss Sarah Foltz. Dave has at last assumed the pressure.

—The spring term of school closes Saturday.

—Mr. Hamilton Emanuel has returned from Chicago, where he has been pursuing his medical studies for some time.

—Ella, youngest daughter of J. A. Provines, is dangeriously ill with whooping cough.

—A resort to the courts is likely to grow out of a conflict of interest in the Victory Churn manufactured at this place. We would advise the parties to compromise their difficulties and stay out of the courts, if they regard their best interests.

Preparations for the Fourth!

A GRAND CELEBRATION!

OLD SETTLERS' MEETING.

We are able to announce this week that our citizens have determined to celebrate the Fourth in grand style. In connection therewith a meeting of the old settlers' will take place, and music, speeches, sham battle, fire works, cannonading with a battery of artillery, a delegation of Indians fresh from Sitting Bull, and everything else to make the occasion an enjoyable one, will be introduced. Everybody should make arrangements to attend. The following committees have been appointed:

Committee of arrangements.—G. W. Gardon, R. H. Weamer, Henry Bashelier, John Leasure, L. J. Hopkins and T. Mills.

Old Settlers' Committe.—Butler, Peter Simons; Jackson, Alex Provines, Henry Faegler; Concord, J. F. Coburn; Newville, B. F. Blair; Stafford, Henry Dickerhoof; Wilmington, Samuel Headley; Union, John Butt, S. Bassett, S. W. Ralston, Maj. S. W. Sprott, D. Altenburg, J. O. P. Sherlock, Geo. Ensley; Richland, Jas. Goetschius; Fairfield, Geo. Emerick; Smithfield, E. R. Shoemaker; Franklin, Geo. P. Firestone; Troy, Samuel Learned; Keyser, O. C. Clark; T. D. Gross Superintendant.

President, Dr. Ford. Assistant Vice Presidents, the same as committee of old settlers.

Officer of the day, T C. Mays. Assistant officer of the day, John Otto.

Corunna Items.

—The Corunna Cornet Band is preparing to do some blowing the coming season.

—Mrs. Knauer has returned from Michigan where she has been visiting her relations, and is much pleased with what she saw of the woolverine state.

—Lafe got beat and he and his partner had to carry out the stove. Do better next time Lafe, and you will laugh at the other fellows instead of them laughing at you.

—There will be a meeting at the Center school house in this township Saturday, June 15, for the purpose of selecting delegates to attend the county convention held by the democrats of DeKalb June 22nd.

—An infant son of Mr. Lewis Hossler died last Saturday after a short illness, and was buried Sunday in the burying grounds two and a half miles south of town. The bereaved friends have the sympathy of their many friends and neighbors.

—There is a gentleman in the town of Corunna who gives instructions in the art of swimming, and one night last week in endeavoring to restrain the ardor of one of his pupils, went out of the boat into the lake a couple of times without any of the trouble or inconvenience experienced by disrobing himself.

—Our grain and produce buyers are beginning to feel somewhat better. The slight advance in prices is calculated to have an upward tendency for a few days at least. Our buyers are paying for wheat, white, $1.00; corn, 30c.; shelled corn, 36c.; white oats, 24c.; Michigan oats, 22c.; Butter, 8c.; eggs, 8c.; Lard, 7c.; wool, 20 to 33c.

Summit Items.

—Sheep shearing is now in vogue, and a little warm weather would not come amiss.

—Everyone is in good cheer and have hopes of better times, unless the bugs entirely destroy the cabbage crop.

—Our district school, under the supervision of Miss Nettie Coonrad, is a decided success with a fair attendance.

—Our townsman, Richard Gramling, is converting his land into brick as fast as possible, his orders being far in excess of his facility for making.

—Edward Boyer, residing a short distance from town, has lost about twenty fine hogs by cholera, but we understand the plague is somewhat abating.

—We are having a little too much cold wet weather for corn and oats Our soil being yellow sand (of a hard nature) does not seem to make a rapid growth of the last named cereals.

—We claim for this community nothing of any vast importance or note, except an honest, industrious people, a good coming wheat crop and the largest woodpile on the Ft. W., J. & S. R. R.

—There is to be a concert at Barker's church Saturday evening, June 15th, under the auspecies of the Sabbath school. They are making arrangements for a fine time, and we hope to see a large turn out.

—EDITOR COURIER.—Having lately taken up my abode in this place and being a reader of the COURIER since here, I have failed to see any items from the village of Summit, and hoping these few lines may be acceptable, I proceed:

—We sometimes hear a few remarks on the greenback question, but as yet they are scattering. Agents for agricultural implements, and office seekers have been quite numerous of late. We wish them all good luck, especially Jim Boozer, of Waterloo.

—The roads have been worked in this vicinity and are now in good condition and when you start from Auburn this way, please give us a call.

NEW COMER.

Garrett Items.

—A terrible accident occurred on the B. & O. Railroad last Sunday. As engine No. 308 was taking the freight train No. 17 from here to Chicago Junction, was within about a mile and a half of Atica, the draw bar broke, which connects the engine and the tank and as the engine was working with a heavy train it started off with increased speed when it broke, and threw the fireman on the track in front of the tank, and the tank with thirty-five loaded cars and caboose all passed over him, mutilating the body in a manner beyond description. The conductor, Mr. Thos. Ferrell, at the time who describes it as follows: "They looked at their watches and it was 6:20 p. m., and made the remark that they had three minutes to make the side track at Atica to let the passenger train No. 8 pass them coming this way. He had no more than replaced his watch than he heard the bar crack and the engine almost jumped from under them. He looked back quick and down in the kitchen of the tank (as 308 is a camel engine) and saw Mr. E. W. Wing, the fireman, falling backward toward the tank, which was already left about eight feet behind. In an instant the train was on him. The head breakman was setting in the kitchen of the tank who also saw the unfortunate man launched into eternity in an instant. When the train was checked up his remains were found on the track about eight car lengths behind the caboose in the condition above mentioned. We are thankful to Mr. Shipley for our information, who was formerly traveling engineer for the B. & O. Railroad. He thinks there was not one bone left unbroken. One of his boots was found hanging to a break about four car lengths behind the tank which had been taken off as the train passed over him. He leaves a wife and one child. She left here Monday morning for Adrian, Michigan, via Avilla and Sturgis to meet the remains of her husband at his father's, which was brought to Auburn Junction on Monday and sent via of the Ft W., J. & S. R. R. Mr. C. W. Wing was a good citizen, much respected by every person who knew him He came to Garrett in the fall of 1875 and he and his brother in-law, Thos. Maloney, published the first paper ever printed in Garrett, (The Garrett News), which they sold the following spring to Dr. Parker. All who knew him sympathize with the family in their sad misfortune.

—There is considerable amusement here with a telephone which extends between J. L. Davis' hardware store and Bicknell's drug store. It is a complete success and there appears to be considerable interest manifested with it in the evenings. Your correspondent has not had the pleasure of testing its merit yet, as he cannot get near it on account of Bicknell at one end and Robbins at the other, keep it entirely monopolized. They almost exhausted it the other evening.

—The town board met in regular session Monday evening and approved the marshal's bond, and on motion of J. W. Wagner, Mr. F. Sembower was elected school trustee. This is a good selection and one we trust gives entire satisfaction.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

THE Philadelphia Commercial Exchange has petitioned Congress to increase the standing army....There were ninety-five failures in May in New York city, with total liabilities of $5,898,395, and assets $955,492. The aggregate liabilities were $2,000,000 less than the total of the previous month.

BURGLARS entered the house of the President of the Canton (Pa.) Bank a few nights ago, and compelled him to accompany them to the bank and open the doors. They then commanded him to open the safe, threatening to murder him if he refused. As he did not know the combination he was unable to do so. They then commenced beating him, which aroused some young men who were sleeping in the building. The latter arose, armed themselves with clubs, sallied out, and boldly attacked the brigands, who in turn commenced firing at their assailants. Nobody was hurt, but the whole town was aroused, and greatly frightened at the hubbub. In the excitement the robbers escaped with $2,500 in bonds which they picked up in the bank.

COLGATE & CO.'s soap factory, in Jersey City, has been destroyed by fire, throwing 300 men out of employment. Loss, $150,000.

THE WEST.

A PARTY of four masked men boarded a passenger train on the Union Pacific railroad, near Percy station, Utah, entered one of the sleeping cars and robbed the passengers. They fired three shots in the sleeper without injury to the passengers. They struck one passenger with a [illegible], cutting the scalp some....On the farm of [illegible]bert Lynn, four miles from Hillsboro, O., a portable saw-mill engine exploded, the other day, killing three and severely scalding several others. One man was thrown completely over a tall tree. The boiler was found 300 yards distant....Edward Webb, a black desperado, was executed at Mansfield, Ohio, on the 30th ult., for the murder of an old gentleman named Wm. S. Finney in December last....While a charivari was being given a new-married couple at Wallace, Ohio county, Ind., the bride, Miss Sowers, was shot and instantly killed by a paper wad fired from a musket.

A TERRIBLY destructive tornado visited the town of Richmond, Mo., a few days ago, causing a distressing loss of life and property. The storm leveled everything in its path, a breadth of at least 800 yards, demolishing buildings to their foundations, stripping trees of their bark and foliage, and leveling everything as if swept by a torrent. Over 100 houses in the town and vicinity were swept away. Twelve persons were killed outright, and upward of 100 injured, many of them beyond hope of recovery. The cyclone was the color of steam, and at times the funnel-shaped cloud would break open in places and emit what appeared like black smoke, then gather together again, and, with increased force, continue on its march of destruction. At first it approached slowly—not faster, perhaps, than a man could walk. Then it moved faster, leveling everything in its path with the ground, and producing almost complete devastation. The sound it produced was infernal, resembling that of a great cataract. Amid the wails of women and children and the groans of the dying, strong men shed tears to witness the general destruction, and the death and suffering of relatives and friends.

A SHOCKING tragedy is reported from Springfield, Mo. A Mrs. Thompson, while laboring under a temporary fit of insanity, arose from her bed during the night, went to the room of her 17-year-old daughter, and cut her throat from ear to ear. She then ended her own life in the same manner.

ADVICES from Idaho Territory report an uprising of the Bannock Indians. Gen. McDowell has ordered a detachment of troops to the scene of the disturbances....The four desperadoes who recently robbed the passengers of a train on the Union Pacific railroad have been captured by a party of eleven men from Rawlins, who went in pursuit of the robbers. The stolen valuables have been recovered.

MAJ. GEN. McDOWELL, commanding the Division of the Pacific, telegraphs Gen. Sheridan at Chicago that Gen. Howard reports that the Bannocks are raiding the overland stage road seventy-five miles south of Camas prairie. They have destroyed King Hill station and several ranche buildings. Families are fleeing.

THE SOUTH.

A SLEEPING-COACH on the Louisville and Nashville railroad ran off the track at Bolio, Ky., a few days ago, killing two persons and injuring five others.

A BLOOD-CURDLING tragedy was recently enacted near Americus, Ga. A man named Caldwell, while laboring under a fit of insanity, seized a smoothing iron and slew his entire family, consisting of wife, three children, and wife's sister. He then committed suicide by jumping from the top of his cotton gin-house....Half of the business part of Rock Hill, in York county, S. C., has been burned. Loss, $100,000; insurance, $60,000.

THE Andrew Johnson monument was unveiled at Greenville, Tenn., on the 5th inst., in the presence of a large concourse of people.

POLITICAL.

THE Democrats of Alabama have nominated R. W. Cobb for Governor....James G. Blaine has been re-elected Chairman of the Maine Republican State Committee.

THE Republicans of Indiana met in State Convention at Indianapolis on the 5th inst. and nominated the following ticket: Secretary of State, Isaac S. Moore; Auditor, A. O. Miller; State Treasurer, George F. Herriott; Attorney General, D. P. Baldwin. A platform was reported and unanimously adopted, making the following declaration of principles: No abandonment or depreciation of the greenback currency; a sound and stable currency of gold, silver and paper of the same value; national legislation authorizing the receipt of greenbacks at par for the payment of customs, and in the purchase of Government bonds; opposition to further financial agitation, stability in our financial system being essential to business prosperity; equal rights before the law, and equal position under the law, without regard to race, creed, condition or occupation; no exclusive privileges to individuals or classes, opposition to all subsidies. The platform denounces any attempt to oust the President from office as revolutionary resistance to law, and pledges the Republicans of Indiana to support and maintain President Hayes and the lawfully constituted authorities of the Government in resisting the revolution at this the first opportunity presented.

THE National Greenback party of Michigan held their State Convention at Grand Rapids on the 5th inst. The following ticket was nominated: Governor, Henry S. Smith; Lieutenant Governor, Lysander Woodward; Secretary of State, George H. Bruce; Auditor General, Levi Sparks; Treasurer, Herman F. Goeschel; Attorney General, Frank Dumon; Commissioner of the Land Office, John A. Elder; Superintendent of Public Instruction, David Parsons; Member of the State Board of Education, Arvine A. Sapp. The platform demands the unconditional repeal of the Resumption act, the issue of all paper money by the General Government, that no more interest-bearing bonds be issued, the repeal of the National Banking law, and that all Government lands be reserved for actual settlers only....The Maine National Greenback Convention met at Lewiston, on June 5, 887 delegates being in attendance. James W. Smith was nominated for Governor. The resolutions indorse the Toledo platform, and denounce "the red flag of Communism imported from Europe."

THE Tammany Hall Democracy of New York have issued an address approving the Presidential investigation, but opposing any attack on the Presidential title as dangerous to the peace of the country.

THE Treasury Department finds it very difficult to get the new silver dollar into circulation, there being but little demand for them. Another effort is to be made to get them into circulation by the Government paying the expense of their transportation in bulk from the mints to the sub-treasuries....The subject of Indian troubles is the source of great attention at the War Department. Secretary McCrary regards the situation as very serious, and army officers coincide with him.

MAJ. WILLIAM J. McDONALD, Chief Clerk of the Senate for the past twelve years, died last week.

GENERAL.

DURING the month of May 3,560,000 silver dollars were coined at the various mints. Most of the mints will suspend work for about thirty days, on the 15th of the present month, to make the annual settlement and repair their machinery....Visible supply of grain in the States and Canada: 7,508,000 bushels of wheat; 8,902,000 bushels of corn; 2,301,000 bushels of oats; 508,000 bushels of rye, and 1,158,000 bushels of barley.

FOREIGN NEWS.

A TERRIBLE marine disaster occurred in the English channel on the morning of the 31st ult. The German squadron, consisting of the ironclads Prussen, Grosser Kurfurst and Konig Wilhelm, were steaming down the channel, en route for Plymouth. When opposite Ludgate, England, about five miles from the shore, the Konig Wilhelm ran into the Grosser Kurfurst. The shock was terrific, the latter vessel filling and sinking within five minutes after the collision. To add to the horrors of the situation, the boilers of the vessel exploded, scattering death and destruction in every direction. The ill-fated vessel had on board 600 persons, about 400 of whom were lost. The Grosser Kurfurst was built in 1874, and was one of the most powerful ironclads in the German navy.

A SECOND and more serious attempt has been made upon the life of the German Emperor. While the aged sovereign was driving in the avenue Unter der Linden, the assassin fired two charges of a double-barrel shot-gun at him from a window of his apartments. The Emperor was wounded in one arm and on the cheek by buckshot and small shot. The would-be assassin is a Dr. Nobeling. When his door was forced open he fired upon and wounded the hotel-keeper, and tried to commit suicide, but was secured. The Emperor's personal attendant jumped into the carriage and supported him until the carriage reached the palace. The Emperor was conveyed to bed and several grains of shot extracted, causing great loss of blood. He suffered great pain, but never lost consciousness.

THE steamship Idaho, of the Williams & Guion line, went on the rocks on the coast of Ireland, during a heavy fog, and in twenty minutes after striking foundered in deep water. Through the coolness and courage of the officers every passenger and the entire crew were saved. The ship and cargo are a total loss. The passengers and crew lost all their baggage, the passengers saving only what they had on their persons.

A CABLE dispatch says the Berlin congress for the discussion of the San Stefano treaty is composed as follows: Bismark and Count Von Bulow, for Germany; Lords Beaconsfield, Salisbury, and Odo Russell, for Great Britain; Count Schouvaloff and M. D. Outril, Russian Ambassador at Berlin, for Russia; Count Andrassy and Von Haymerle, for Austria; M. Waddington and De St. Vallier, for France; Count Corti and Count De Launay, for Italy. The Turkish representatives are not announced as yet....Berlin dispatches deny that Nobling is either a Socialist or an ultramontane. They say he is a Protestant of good family and fortune. He had accomplices, who had been plotting the assassination of the Emperor for six months.

THE late attempt upon the life of the Emperor of Germany was attended with quite a chapter of fatalities. When the enraged populace broke into the assassin Nobling's apartment he fired upon them, severely wounding Holtfeur, an inn-keeper. The crowd, seeing him bleeding, supposed he was the assassin, and fell upon him, and he was so roughly handled before the people discovered their mistake that he will probably die. Nobling, before he was seized, fired two bullets into his head, producing a mortal wound. He was immediately seized and placed in a prison van. While the van was passing rapidly through an archway at the entrance of the house, the driver struck his head against the arch with such violence that his neck was dislocated, producing instant death. The Emperor, at last accounts, was recovering from his wounds, nearly all the shot having been extracted.

EMPEROR WILLIAM of Germany has issued a decree proclaiming a regency, and naming his son Frederick William as Regent of the empire....Thirty-seven persons have been arrested in Berlin for speaking disrespectfully of the Emperor in the streets. One was sentenced to two and a half years' imprisonment for bewailing Dr. Nobeling's failure. A. Posen, a printer, has been sentenced to four years' imprisonment for using offensive observations with regard to the Emperor.

A BUCHAREST dispatch says the execution of the Topola rioters was a cold-blooded murder intended to terrorize the Servian people, and it succeeded in producing that effect. The rioters were not revolutionists. They only made some noisy public demonstrations against the Cabinet's policy in going to war without summoning the Skuptschina.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS.

FRIDAY, May 31.—SENATE.—The bill authorizing the President to appoint an additional Judge for the Seventh United States Judicial Circuit, embracing Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin, was passed....The Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill was passed.

HOUSE.—The bill appropriating $20,000 to defray the expenses of the Presidential investigating committee was passed....The Senate bill for the relief of settlers on public lands, under the pre-emption laws, in reference to the computation of time for perfecting titles, was also passed....A larger number of private bills were disposed of.

SATURDAY, June 1.—SENATE.—The House resolution fixing June 17 as the day for the final adjournment was concurred in....The Senate devoted the entire day to the discussion of the Halifax fishery award question. Nearly every Senator spoke. [illegible] part of the country to terminate that clause of the treaty of Washington which gives our fishermen the right to the Canadian fisheries and gives the Canadian fishermen the right to bring fish into our market was passed, as was the resolution, thus amended.

HOUSE.—The following bills were passed: Authorizing the Solicitor of the Treasury, with the consent of the Secretary of War, to cancel certain contracts for the sale of land made at Harper's Ferry in 1869, to resell the same, and to sell, or lease, all other real estate or riparian rights owned by the United States at Harper's Ferry; giving Circuit Courts supervisory jurisdiction in certain criminal cases....The bill appropriating $800,000 for the construction of a fresh-water basin for iron-clad vessels near the Norfolk Navy Yard was referred to the committee of the whole, after which the House discussed the bill amending the internal-revenue laws.

MONDAY, June 3.—SENATE.—Mr. Edmunds moved to take up the bill relating to Presidential elections, and to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice President and the decision of questions arising thereon. After a lively discussion the motion was defeated by a vote of 14 yeas to 27 nays....The House joint resolution providing for the issue of arms to the Territories was passed....The Post-Route bill was under consideration in the Senate. The amendment of Mr. Hamlin restoring the franking privilege was rejected by a tie vote—29 to 29.

HOUSE.—Bills were introduced and referred: By Mr. McMahon, enlarging the powers of the accounting officers of the United States in regard to bounty claims; by Mr. Bland, authorizing the issue of $50,000,000 in United States treasury notes for the improvement of the Mississippi river, from St. Louis to the Gulf of Mexico; by Mr. Culberson, to restrain the Secretary of the Treasury from paying outstanding 5-20 bonds except in legal-tender treasury notes; by Mr. Wright, of Pennsylvania, authorizing the issue of $400,000,000 United States notes, to be known as "national money;" by Mr. Ellis, levying a tax of 15 cents per pound on tea....The bill amending the internal-revenue laws was discussed....An evening session was held for the consideration of the Life-Saving bill.

TUESDAY, June 4.—SENATE.—The select committee to inquire into and report on the condition of affairs between the United States and Mexico was continued until the next session, and authorized to sit during the vacation. The House bill supplementary to the act of March 3, 1859, to carry into effect the convention between the United States and China, concluded at Shanghai on the 8th of November, 1858, and to give the Court of Claims jurisdiction in certain cases, was passed....The Senate bill to provide for the construction, maintenance and operation of a military telegraph in Dakota and Montana Territories passed....The Senate insisted upon its amendments to the Legislative, Judicial and Executive Appropriation bill, and a conference with the House was requested....The Post-Route bill was discussed.

HOUSE.—The Senate amendments to the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill were concurred in....Mr. Knott, the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, reported a bill for the relief of the purchasers of land sold for direct taxes in the insurrectionary States. Referred....The following bills were passed: Fixing the election for Representatives to the next Congress from Colorado for the Tuesday after the first Monday in November; exempting municipal and county buildings, used as such, from levy and sale; providing for the appointment of a District Judge for the Western District of Tennessee, and for a division of the district; providing for holding terms of the United States District and Circuit Courts at Fort Wayne, Ind., and Toledo, Ohio; attaching the Assistant Attorney General for the Postoffice Department to the Department of Justice; exempting employes in the postal service from military and jury duty; providing that the election for Representatives to the Forty-sixth Congress from West Virginia be held on the second Tuesday of October; fixing the election for Representatives in Congress in North Carolina on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November; reorganizing the life-saving service....The Tariff bill and the Mexican Award bill were debated.

WEDNESDAY, June 5.—SENATE.—Mr. Matthews, of Ohio, arose to a question of privilege, and made a personal explanation. He recited the testimony of James E. Anderson before the Potter committee, and said that it affected not only his own reputation, but that of the Senate. He knew of no frauds practiced in Louisiana, and no wrongs, except the one committed by Anderson, which Anderson acknowledged to him and professed repentance. Anderson, in confessing a wrong act done, placed in his (Matthews') hands certain papers as an evidence of his repentance, which he (Matthews) held, in order to prevent a public scandal. He said he had interested himself in Anderson's appointment, because he (Anderson) had devoted his time to advancing the Republican cause in Louisiana, and had incurred the hostility of the Democratic party. In conclusion Mr. Matthews moved the appointment of a special committee of seven, to take testimony touching the election held in Louisiana in 1876. The motion was agreed to....Mr. Thurman, from the Judiciary Committee, reported a bill creating a sinking fund for the Kansas Pacific Railroad Company....The Post Route bill was then taken up, and there was a long debate on the amendments restoring the franking privilege and granting a subsidy for Brazilian mail service. Both amendments were finally adopted and the bill passed.

HOUSE.—The Wood Tariff bill came up in the House, and a motion to strike out the enacting clause was carried by a vote of 134 yeas to 120 nays. This virtually kills the measure....The Mexican Award bill was passed as it came from the Senate....The bill amending the revenue laws was taken up, and an amendment adopted reducing the tax on tobacco to 16 cents per pound.

THURSDAY, June 6.—SENATE.—Mr. Voorhees addressed the Senate in favor of the early consideration of the bill to repeal the Specie Resumption act....The Army Appropriation bill occupied the attention of the Senate during the greater portion of the day. The House clause fixing the strength of the army at 20,000 men was stricken out, and 25,000 substituted. The section in regard to the reorganization of the army was also stricken out, and an amendment adopted referring the question of reorganization to a commission of Senators, Representatives and army officers.

HOUSE.—Mr. Tipton introduced a bill authorizing Ohio, Illinois and Indiana to prosecute suits against the United States in the Supreme Court....The Senate amendments to the bill for printing the agricultural report of 1877 were concurred in, and the bill passed....Conference committees were appointed on the Legislative and Postoffice Appropriation bills....The bills amending the Internal Revenue laws and the General Deficiency bill were discussed.

Elopement and Murder.

Col. John Budd, aged 70, was not too old to fall in love with Ida Bruhniell; and she, although only 20, returned his passion with ardor. Budd was formerly a leading politician in Alabama, but has of late lived in Walhalla, S. C., which is the home of the Bruhniells. The girl's father forbade her to receive the attentions of her aged lover, but she was disobedient and readily assented to a proposal to elope. At night the pair mounted horses and fled. Ida's maid proved unfaithful, however, and informed the father of the flight. He armed himself with a gun and started in hot pursuit, overtaking the lovers at a creek which they were about to ford, and commending them to surrender. The Colonel refused, and was mortally shot by Bruhniell, who at last accounts was a fugitive.

A BAG of hops as large as the two fists, placed in a bin or store of grain, will, it is said, kill or eradicate all grubs and insects from the grain.

THE VIRGINIA CAMPAIGN.

An Interesting Interview with Gen. Grant.

[Paris Cor. New York Herald.]

Gen. Grant arrived in this city from Italy on the 7th of May. Your correspondent took occasion to bring to the General's attention the publication in the North American Review from Gen. Richard Taylor, saying in effect that Gen. Grant had fought his campaign in Virginia against his own judgment, and in doing so had thrown away the lives of 100,000 men. Your correspondent also called the attention of the General to the article in the Atlantic Monthly from the pen of the late Gideon Welles, in which Mr. Welles arraigned Gen. Grant, upon the authority of Gen. Taylor, for having insulted Lincoln's memory by attempting to throw upon Lincoln his own fault in the Wilderness and other campaigns. The result of this was an interesting conversation with Gen. Grant, some of the points of which I will rescue from oblivion for their historical value.

"So far as Mr. Welles is concerned," said the General, "he is dead, and any resentment one might feel at his extraordinary misstatements would now be out of place. It is unfortunate for Mr. Welles' fame that he should have spent his last years in striving to belittle the very administration in which he held a prominent place.

"As to Gen. Taylor's assault on Mr. Lincoln I am not surprised. Gen. Taylor fought on the other side, drew pay on the other side, and writes on the other side. So far as Taylor and I are concerned we are friends, and have maintained the best relations. I am quite sure he would not do me any unkindness, as I would not do him. Taylor is one of the most agreeable of men, who talks well and talks a great deal, and, like men of that kind, often gets his facts blended with fiction. I mean by that that if Taylor said about me a positive untruth, as he does in this article, it would be on his part an inadvertence—not any willful error. He would speak in all seriousness without knowing any better."

"Then," said your correspondent, "this article is not altogether true?"

"I have no doubt," said the General, "there are some true things in the article; but the part which refers to me is wholly false, utterly false, without a shadow of foundation. Gen. Taylor says that in a conference between President Lincoln, Secretary Stanton and myself, in 1864, the approaching campaign in Virginia was discussed. No such conference was ever held, and no such campaign was ever discussed. Gen. Taylor says that I insisted upon advancing my whole army upon Richmond by the James river. I never said a word to the President or Secretary of War, or any one else in authority, as to how I would advance. Gen. Taylor reports Mr. Lincoln as saying that the Government required the interposition of an army between Lee and Washington. Mr. Lincoln never said a word resembling this, or anything at all, on the subject. Gen. Taylor reports me as saying that any change of route from my own by the James to another would cost 100,000 men. This is pure fiction, as, indeed, the whole story is a pure fiction. Gen. Taylor says that the whole story comes to him well authenticated, and he has no doubt of his correctness. There are only three persons who could authenticate such a story—Mr. Lincoln, Mr. Stanton and myself. Lincoln and Stanton are dead, and I say the whole story is a fabrication, and whoever vouched for it to Gen. Taylor vouched for a fiction. I feel it due to the memory of these great men, apart from any sentiment of self-vindication, to make this denial as emphatic and clear as possible."

This denial of Gen. Grant led to an interesting resume on his part. "I remember," he said, "very well my first interview with Stanton. You know I did not come to Washington until I came in relation to an order to assume command of the armies. I had once been there as a young man, but otherwise it was my first trip. I found Stanton cordial and willing to do anything, so we suppressed the rebellion. Nothing could have been more earnest and hearty than his treatment of me. 'Now,' says he, 'General, I do not want to know your plans. Tell me what you need to carry them out. That is all I care to know. And, when you go to see Mr. Lincoln, you will do well to observe the same discretion. Mr. Lincoln may not want to know any more of your plans than I do, but I can understand how you might naturally seek the confidence of the President. Now, Mr. Lincoln is of a gentle and tender nature, apt to confide in many people, and what you tell him about military movements he may tell to the next Senator with whom he has an intimate conversation.' I saw Lincoln. He was as cordial and hearty as Stanton, if possible more so, because he was a man of more affable and gracious manners. When Lincoln and I were alone the President began the conversation by repeating a story from an article by Orpheus C. Kerr—a comic article satirizing the conduct of the war. It was, as I remember, a story about Capt. Bob Shorty and the Mackerel Brigade, and the anaconda policy, something about Generals in the field being hampered by a flood of orders. When he had finished, Lincoln said very much what Stanton had said—that he did not care to know what I was to do, only to know what I wanted; that I should have all I required. He wished me to beat Lee; how I did it was my own duty. He said he did not wish to know my plans, or to exercise any scrutiny over my plans; so long as I beat the rebel army he was satisfied. He spoke of a plan he had long thought over, and took down a map. He drew an imaginary line between two of the Virginia creeks or rivers, the names of which have escaped me, and said that I might move on that line and have the streams for supplies. I looked at the plan and saw in a moment that, if I put my army on such a line, I would be in much the same position as the Army of the James. I would be powerless; I could do no good to our side and no harm to the other. I would be locked up. I told Mr. Lincoln I would consider the plan, and that was the last of it. The route was an impossible route, and was never mentioned again by Mr. Lincoln. That is, as far as I remember, the exact story of the conference between Mr. Lincoln, Mr. Stanton, and myself when I took command of the army. The question of my plans and their wisdom or unwisdom was never afterward a subject of conversation or correspondence. If there were blunders in that campaign they were blunders of mine, and not those of Lincoln or Stanton. They did everything in the world to assure my success. Upon me and upon me alone must the whole responsibility fall."

Gold Lace.

Gold lace is not gold lace. It does not deserve this title, for the gold is applied as a surface to silver. It is not even silver lace, for the silver is applied to a foundation of silk. The silken threads for making this material are wound round with gold wire, so thickly as to conceal the silk; and the making of this gold wire is one of the most singular mechanical operations imaginable. In the first place, the refiner prepares a solid rod of silver about an inch in thickness; he heats this rod, applies upon the surface a sheet of gold leaf, burnishes this down, applies another coating, burnishes this down, and so on, until the gold is about one-hundredth part the thickness of the silver. Then the rod is subjected to a train of processes which brings it down to the state of fine wire; it is passed through holes in a steel plate lessening step by step in diameter. The gold never deserts the silver, but adheres closely to it, and shares all its mutations; it is one-hundredth part the thickness of the silver at the beginning, and it maintains the same ratio to the end. As to the thinness to which the gold-coated rod of silver can be brought, the limit depends on the delicacy of human skill; but the most remarkable example ever known was brought forward by Dr. Wollaston. This was an example of solid gold wire without any silver. He procured a small rod of silver, bored a hole through it from end to end, and inserted in this hole the smallest gold wire he could procure; he subjected the silver to the usual wire-drawing process, until he had brought it to the finest attainable state—being, in fact, a silver wire as fine as a hair, with a gold wire in its center. To isolate this gold wire, he subjected it to warm nitrous acid, by which the silver was dissolved, leaving a gold wire one-thirty-thousandth of an inch in thickness—perhaps the thinnest round wire that the hand of man has yet produced. But the wire, though beyond all comparison finer than any employed in manufactories, does not approach in thinness the film of gold on the surface of silver and gold lace. It has been calculated that the gold on the very finest silver wire for gold lace is not more than one-third of one-millionth of an inch in thickness—that is, not above one-tenth thickness of ordinary gold leaf.—Coventry Standard.

Uncle Pete Objects to the 'Possum Hunt.

"Now, look-a-here, Mahar Tom, and you all; you all wouldn't a-ketched me out on this yere hunt ef I a-knowed ye was a-gwine to hunt 'possums. 'Taint no luck to hunt 'possums; eberybody knows dat. De debbil gits after a man as will go a-chasin' 'possums wid dogs when he kin cotch 'em a heap man comfortabler in a trap. 'Tain't so much diff'rence 'bout 'coons, but de debbil he takes care o' 'possums. An' I 'spect de debbil know'd 'bout dis yere hunt, fur de oder ebenin' I was a-goin' down to de rock-spring, wid a gourd to git a drink, and dar on de rock, wid his legs a-danglin' down to de water, sat de debbil hisself a-chawing' green terbacker!" "Green terbacker?" says I. "Why, Uncle Pete, ain't the debbil got no better sense than that?" "Now, look-a-here, Mahar Martin," says he, "de debbil knows what he's about, an' ef green terbacker was good fur anybody to chaw he wouldn't chaw it, and' he says to me, 'Uncle Pete, been a huntin' any 'possums?' And says I, 'No, Mahar, I neb[illegible] dat.' An' den he look at me aw[illegible]or I seed he didn't furgit nothin', an' he was a sottin' dar, a-shinen as ef he was all polished all over wid shoe-blackin', an' he says, 'Now, look-a-here, Uncle Pete, don't you eber do it; an' w'at's dat bout dis yere Baptis' church at de cross-roads, dat was sot afire?' An' I tole him dat I didn't know nuffin' 'bout dat—not one single word in dis whole world. Den he wink, an' he says, 'Dem bruders in dat church hunt too many 'possums. Dey is allus a huntin' 'possums, and dat's de way dey lose der church. I sot dat church afire meself. D'y' hear dat, Uncle Pete?' An' I was glad enough to hear it, too, for der was bruders in dat church dat said Yeller Joe an' me sot it afire, cos we wasn't 'lected trustees, but dey can't say dat now, fur it's all plain as daylight, an' ef dey don't bleab it, I kin show 'em de berry gourd I tuk down to de rock-spring when I seed de debbil. An' it don't do to hunt no more 'possums, fur de debbil 'd jist as leab scratch de end ob his tail agin a white man's church as agin a black man's church."—*"That Same Old 'Coon," by F. R. A Polish Robinson Crusoe.

Fifty-odd years ago a schooner, out on a fishing expedition, and driven from her course by an adverse gale, made for St. Paul's, an island in the South Indian ocean. The Captain, a Frenchman, from Bourbon, effected a landing, and was surprised to find there a Pole, a brother of the illustrious Kosciusko, in quiet possession of the island, which he had occupied since the year 1819. How he came there, whether placed in exile, forced or voluntary, is unknown. The Frenchman, a busy, energetic man of the world, turned his discovery to some account, and, seeing the capabilities of the island, he made for Port Louis, Mauritius, freighted his schooner with tools, seeds, stores and poultry, and returned to St. Paul's, determined to establish there a permanent fishing station. He found the Pole still the sole occupier of the island. Setting vigorously to work with two blacks and a white man, whom he had brought with him, they commenced the process of civilization by digging up the ground and sowing their seeds. They built also two small wooden houses and a shed for their stores, constructed a landing-place, and made every preparation within their power for establishing a quiet, snug fishing harbor. Seeing things thus in progress, the Frenchman, loading his craft with fish, returned to Port Louis to sell his cargo. In 1830 the Pole left the island, on receiving from the Frenchman $2,000 by way of compensation.

Henry Clay.

No American, probably, ever possessed the secret of personal influence over men, and knew so well how to use it, as did Henry Clay.

His secret lay in his warm heart and remarkable memory. He never forgot a favor or a face. His journeys to Washington were performed slowly on horseback, or in the leather-hung stages which crossed the mountains. Every shopkeeper or negro hostler on the way claimed "old Henry Clay" as his personal friend. An old gentleman gives us the following reminiscence of him:

"I lived in a little village on the National road. One evening, when I was a boy of 14, I was closing father's store for the night, when a tall, ungainly, keen-eyed man entered hurriedly. I had seen his picture. The blood fairly stopped in my veins.

"'Is Mr. Neel in?'

"'No, sir, he is out of town.'

"He turned away with great annoyance.

"'I am his son, Mr. Clay,' I said. 'What can I do for you? Anything in the world.'

"He laughed. 'I am on my way home, and find myself out of money.'

"I flung open my desk.

"'I would like to borrow $100,' he said, making out a due bill to my father.

"In a day or two the money came back. Four years afterwards I was in a town which was preparing to receive Clay as the candidate for President. There was to be a barbecue, an illumination, etc. A procession of citizens and soldiers went out to meet him. I was an awkward country lad and I followed in the crowd. The leading politicians, all the great men of the town, were in front.

"On reaching the little roadside inn, a muddy hack outside showed that Mr. Clay had arrived. The next moment he came out on the porch. There was a deafening cheer. His eye swept over the crowd, and he singled me out. He held out his hand.

"'Ha! my friend Neel!' he said.

"That was the proudest moment of my life! Clay had his faults, but the man who could remember to give pleasure to a poor lout of a boy, at such a time, had a noble humanity."

The Nail in the Head.

There is a story told in English greenrooms, to the effect that a certain carpenter, a long, long time ago, murdered his wife by driving a nail into her skull. He fled, and, the better to conceal his identity, became an actor. He rose to eminence, and the whirligig of time and the wheel of chance brought him to the very village in which, years before, he had killed his wife, whose murder, however—so the story runs—had not been suspected, her long, thick, black hair concealing the cruel wound from which no blood had flowed.

The part was Hamlet. Whatever memories the place evoked he had sufficient mastery over his feelings to keep them hidden. The first scene of the fifth act came on. The theater stood on what had formerly been a burial-ground, and the property man had not to go far for skulls, but just dug a little and bought up a dozen or more, and at night tossed them into the trap for the grave-digger to shovel on the stage. He handed a skull to the Hamlet, saying:

"Here's a skull now hath lain you in the earth for three-and-twenty years."

Hamlet—"Whose was it?"

Grave-digger—"This same skull, sir, was Yorick's skull, the King's jester."

Hamlet took the skull, saying:

"This—"

He turned pale and staggered, for the skull had left on it one long lock of black hair. Handed to him upside down the lock fell back, revealing a nail in the skull. The actor recognized it as that of the woman whom he had murdered twenty-three years before. At this mute evidence of his guilt, coming from the grave to confront him, the actor lost presence of mind and his senses.

In his insane utterances he revealed his terrible secret, and was only saved from punishment by his fellow-actors hushing him up and hurrying him away. He never recovered his reason, and died in a mad-house, raving of the nail in the skull.

THE FINANCES.

Speech of Hon. D. W. Voorhees in the Senate Upon Resumption Repeal.

The Debt System at the Bottom of Our Difficulties.

A Powerful and Telling Argument.

From the Congressional Record.

Mr. President: It is not my intention to detain the senate on this occasion at any great length. There are some circumstances, however, connected with the subject before us which cannot fail to arrest general attention. When congress convened in October last, now more than six months ago, the public mind was in a state of anxious hope and expectation. For nearly five years the course of business and the interests of labor had been rapidly declining. From time to time it had been announced by those who assume superior wisdom upon this subject that the bottom, as they are pleased to call it, had just been reached. There can be no doubt at least that great financial depression and distress had been fastened upon the country. No channel of active business and no branch of industry had escaped.

It was natural, therefore, when the representatives of the people, having entire control over the finances of the country, met in the discharge of their official duties, that relief should be expected from their action. All eyes were turned upon them. Every ear listened for the sounds that emanated from here; and every heart beat high with hope of redress. Let us inquire how far these expectations and hopes have been fulfilled. Two measures of overwhelming importance to the interests of the people were at once introduced in the house of representatives and promptly passed.

It was determined by that body without delay that the coinage of the American silver dollar, known in the history of this government from its foundation, should be restored, in quantities limited only by the amount of bullion which could be procured. The struggle over that question and the result which followed have passed into history. Another question, however, of far greater magnitude was acted upon by the house at the same time. The repeal of the act of January 14, 1875, known as an act to provide for the resumption of specie payments, has been a prominent issue in the American mind almost from the day of its passage. Its influences upon every element of prosperity were soon discovered to be pernicious. A paralysis immediately fell upon all the great and active industries of the country. The object of the law was soon found to be, not the impossible task of procuring a sufficient amount of the precious metals to form the basis of specie resumption, but simply to reduce, retire, cut down and destroy the amount of money in circulation in the hands of the people until it approximated the comparatively small amount of gold which we have in our possession or which it was possible for us to obtain. In pursuing this purpose the amount of human misery, of individual wretchedness, of destitution, of crime, of vice, of the destruction of property values, of the overthrow of wealth producing establishments of industry is simply beyond the power of language to describe. It is conceded on all hands that in this attempt to reduce the volume of our circulation in order to reach what is called a specie basis the shrinkage in the values of property—that is to say the absolute destruction of values—has reached the enormous and appalling sum of over ten thousand millions of dollars. One-fourth, at least, of the property of the United States has been absolutely confiscated.

It is not wonderful, therefore, that from the highest to the lowest intelligences the victims of this vast national crime should have very quickly discovered the source of their calamities, nor is it wonderful that they should make such calamities a paramount issue in their judgment upon public men and public measures. Indeed this issue has become far higher than parties; it is an issue in which the interests of the people are so vividly involved that party lines are almost invisible in the gloom of a common distress. It is nevertheless true, however, that parties have spoken in their highest organized capacity on this subject. It will not be forgotten by the American people that in June 1, 1876, at the city of St. Louis, the Democratic party in national convention, with authorized delegates from every state and congressional district in the union, declared in favor of the repeal of this odious and crushing measure.

The house of representatives, therefore, recorded the popular will ascertained in many ways and by the highest authority, when on the 23d day of November last, it passed the act repealing the act of January, 14, 1875, and for which the finance committee of the senate has recently reported a substitute. Since the passage of that act by the house public expectation has been turned on this body. From that time to this the responsibility has rested here. Had there been a prompt and immediate concurrence on the part of the senate with the action of the house, how much loss, bankruptcy and suffering would have been averted during the last five dreadful business months can, of course, never be estimated. During the protracted debate which took place here on the silver bill it was a striking feature of the enormous number of petitions that were presented in this body that they invariably coupled two prayers together, one for the restoration of the silver dollar and the other for the repeal of the resumption act. Not a day passed that these two prayers were not heard here at our desk from the highest business interests and the most intelligent people in the United States. Their cry was unceasing and for immediate relief. They did not obtain it. The opponents of the repeal of the resumption act have pleaded for delay and dealt in assurances that soon all occasion for such repeal would pass away.

They have dealt in pleasing prophecies in regard to the revival of business and the employment of idle, starving laborers which have all failed to come true. Their newspaper organs have sought to delude the country by constant proclamations of healthy reactions in business which have not taken place. They have persistently declared that the worst was over; that, having sounded all the sounds and shoals of financial disaster, and there being no new bottoms in the great deep of universal ruin for us to fathom, the tendency hereafter must necessarily be upward. These false prophets are also opposed to all discussion. They are now deploring the fact that this great question of the people's rights has been again brought up in the senate. They represent the only class in the United States that is now filled with comfort, that lives without toil and draws its sustenance from the hard-earned stores of others. Of course the members of this class do not wish to be disturbed. Why should they?

The drone of the hive, living on the honey accumulated by the laboring bee, never desires the manner of his life inquired into or the question of his support agitated. Those who live in violation of the rights of others have, in all ages and countries, been the fiercest opponents of free speech and the principal sufferers by its fearless exercise.

Let us see, however, whether the worst is over as we are so loudly assured. Let us see whether while we have been delaying action, the business interests of the country have been improving or not. Let us hold a brief consultation and determine whether, while we have been waiting with wise looks and vain auguries for the patient to revive, that patient has not been actually bleeding to death before our eyes. Within the last few days I have examined the report of the mercantile agency of New York, keeping a record of the business failures of the United States for the first three months of the present year. It contains an appalling exhibition. During the three months of January, February and March the number of failures is put at 3,355 and the amount of the liabilities at the startling sum of $84,076,426. If we compare that report with the same period of time during the last year we find the liabilities growing out of bankruptcies to be $27,54[illegible],066 greater in the first quarter of 1878 than in the first quarter of 1877. A similar comparison with the first quarter of the year 1876 shows the bankrupt liabilities of the country to have increased $17,464,470 from that time to the present. If we should carry this comparison back to the period when our volume of circulation was at its very greatest, during the inflated years of 1862, 1864 and 1866, we will find that during those entire three years the aggregate amount of liabilities for all the commercial failures in the United States reached only the sum of $34,108,0[illegible], but little more than one-third of the amount growing out of the same cause in the last three months.

In the mad and determined effort to reach what is denominated a specie basis do senators pause to reflect on the awful penalty which the people have been forced to suffer in order to attain that object? However desirable an object may be, however much the human heart may long for what it conceives to be a great good, yet there may be sacrifices so horrible required in its pursuit that they would render that good an unmixed evil. The resumption of specie payments has been declared the height of American statesmanship; and yet to attain it the prosperity of the country has been trodden into the dust and battered out of all shape and recognition. Within the last three months, as I have shown, the pursuit of this policy has rendered impossible the payment of nearly a hundred millions of debts. The poverty, the desolation, the indescribable private sorrow of families which these failures have cost can never be expiated; nor will the policy which caused them, with its track of ruined lives, ever be forgotten or forgiven by the American people.

The servile castes of the East Indies, with a blind and ignorant fate, worship the Juggernaut, and feel no resentment when mangled and crushed by their hideous deity. It is not so, nor will it ever be, with the American people. They will not worship at a cruel, heartless shrine. They will rather teach their children and their children's children to execrate the authors of their misfortunes. Heretofore there has been a strong traditionary sentiment in the American mind in favor of a circulation based on gold and silver, but henceforward that idea will be so deeply and painfully associated with bankruptcy, poverty, unemployed labor and begging tramps that it will take fifty years of the most favorable experience to restore the former belief on this subject. An education on the subject of finances has been impressed upon the American people during the last five years as frightful in the memory which it has left as the embraces of a nightmare.

Men and women think fast and take long and rapid strides in opinion when crowded by the spur of starvation. Such circumstances engender revolutions, and breed the fierce disorders of the world unless they are controlled by measures of relief and pacification.

We are met, however, at this time by those who oppose the repeal of the resumption act with the fact that our paper circulation is quoted in the money markets at only a small fraction below par in gold. This is held up to us as practical resumption. The money power, turning its back upon the ruin it has wrought, and ignoring the wide spread suffering it has inflicted, now calls out exultantly that it has [illegible] the institutions for which it has caused so many millions to water their bread with tears. It is true that the legal tender United States note, known as the greenback dollar, partly by reason of the contraction in amount, and far more by reason of the confidence which the people have in it as money, has forced itself, in the face of calumny and fiend hostility on the part of the government, to a substantial equality with gold. This is not the result of any financial statesmanship.

It has taken place in spite of a policy directly adverse to it. It is simply the result of a public opinion upholding a currency which this government has assailed with discredit from the hour of its creation. Its quoted value to-day, in that little den of gamblers known as the gold room, in wall street, rests to no extent at all upon the fact, or supposed fact, that the holders of it are able or desire to obtain specie in exchange. Does that noisy mob in a room in New York, where gold is never seen, where money of any kind is purely an imaginary article, and where the jargon of puts and calls signifies only words and not things—does this mob fix the value of our legal tender currency as it is circulating now from hand to hand among the plain farmers, mechanics, merchants and traders of the entire country? It is well known by the people that its functions and services as money in their midst do not depend upon the ability of the government to redeem it with coin, nor do they want it redeemed. Of the $378,000,000 of legal tender note circulation, this government could not redeem $50,000,000 within a week's notice. What, then, has brought a paper currency for which there is now practically no specie basis up to par with specie? I can answer. It is because public opinion has forced this government, step by step, to treat its own currency with respect, with fairness, and with honor. It is owing to that public sentiment which has been for years past, urging, and at last with the promise of success, that the government shall receive the money it has authorized to circulate among the people for all its own debts, dues and obligations, except in the face of an express stipulation to the contrary.

Sir, in point of fact there never was the slightest reason in justice why the paper circulation of this country should have become depreciated. When the legal tender note was first authorized as money, if we had said it was good money, and by our acts convinced the world of our sincerity, it would have maintained an equality with the precious metals from the beginning. This has been the history of other governments, and it would have been our history if capital had been capable of a single throb of patriotism when it was called on to assist in the preservation of the union. If money had volunteered as the soldier did, or if tempting bribes in the shape of gigantic speculation, had not been necessary to win its support, the evils which have since befallen us would never have been known. Had the act of February, 1862, which authorized the first issue of bonds and legal tender notes, become a law, in the form in which it passed the house of representatives, the depreciation of American currency never would have taken place. It has been in our power to cure this evil.

There has not been a day from the creation of the United States note as a circulating medium to this hour when that note would not have been placed at par by a law requiring the government to receive it for government dues. All this was pointed out with overwhelming force by Thaddeus Stevens, then chairman of ways and means in the house. Sir, a curious spectacle is presented in this connection. With what a clamorous outcry the great capitalists have assailed a depreciated currency! No language has been sufficiently bitter or contemptuous with which to stigmatize and cover it with shame. No wholesale slaughter of popular interests has been too great in order to get rid of it. And yet the very men who now vex the air with their loud and incessant complaints and demand such crushing sacrifices of the people are solely and exclusively responsible for the fact that we have had a depreciated currency at all. They alone of all the world demanded that this government should dishonor its own currency. When in 1862 the act creating our bonded system of debt and the means to pay it had passed the house, making principal and interest payable in legal tender notes, and had been returned with the senate amendment fixing the payment of the interest in coin, Mr. Stevens at once fastened the responsibility and its consequences where they belonged, and drew a picture of unhallowed greed which has never been disputed. On that occasion he said:

"I have a melancholy foreboding that we are about to consummate a cunningly devised scheme which will carry great injury and great loss to all classes of people throughout the union, except one. With my colleague, I believe no act of legislation of the government was hailed with as much delight throughout the whole length and breadth of this union by the very class of people, without any exception, as the bill which was passed and sent to the senate. Congratulations from all classes, merchants, traders, manufacturers, mechanics and laborers, poured upon us from all quarters. The boards of trade from Boston, New York, St. Louis, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Louisville, Chicago and Milwaukee, approved its provisions and urged its passage as it was. I have a dispatch from the chamber of commerce of Cincinnati, sent to the secretary of the treasury, and by him to me, urging the speedy passage of the bill as it passed the house. It is true there was a doleful sound came up from the caverns of the bullion brokers, and from the saloon of associated bankers. Their cashiers and agents were soon on the ground, and persuaded the senate with but little deliberation to mangle and destroy what it had cost the house months to digest, consider and pass. They fell upon the bill in hot haste, and so disfigured and deformed it that its very father would not know it. Instead of being a beneficent and invigorating measure it is now positively mischievous. It has all the bad qualities which its enemies charged on the original bill, and none of its benefits. It now creates a money, and by its very terms declares it a depreciated currency. It makes two classes of money; one for the bankers and brokers and another for the people. It discriminates between the rights of different classes of creditors, allowing the rich capitalists to demand gold, and compelling the ordinary lender of money on individual security to receive notes which the government has purposely discredited."

And again in the same debate Mr. Stevens said:

"The first purchase of gold by the government will fix the value of these notes which we issue and declare to be a legal tender. The sale will fix their value at 10, 15 or 25 per cent. discount, and then every poor man when he buys his beef, his pork and his supplies must submit to this 15 or 25 per cent. discount, because you have said that shall be the value of the very notes which you have made a legal tender to him, but not a legal tender to those who fix the value of these very notes."

I have quoted these utterances of a very able and distinguished man not merely because of the weight given to them by his name, nor because they are now as authority on this subject but simply because they declare a great historical fact from which all our financial miseries have sprung and which cannot be too often repeated and pressed home upon the minds and consciences of American tax-payers. I quote them also to expose the hypocritical lamentations of those who having effected the depreciation of the currency for their own selfish ends, then denounced it as unworthy and dishonest. The organized capital of the country having contrived to fix legal tender United States notes at a discount of from 25 to 40 per cent, then used them at their face with which to buy into, the pockets of the people, and every bond now paid or hereafter to be paid is simply a redemption by the people, dollar for dollar, in coin, of the depreciated paper originally invested in bonds. A system of finance that discredited its own money at the bidding of the "bullion brokers and associated bankers," in order that the capitalists of the country might so invest that discredited money as to compel the laboring classes to redeem it at par in gold and silver, was indeed, as it was so forcibly described, "a cunningly devised scheme, and fraught with great injury and great loss to all classes of people throughout this union except one."

These, however, are not the only historical circumstances which cause the people to listen with impatience to the complaints urged against the evils of a depreciated currency. They do not overlook the fact that these complaints were made except in the interest of capital. They were never heard in behalf of the laboring masses to whom this currency has at all times been a legal tender; nor were they ever heard in behalf of that class of American citizens whose services and whose claims are paramount to all others. When the muster of millions took place for the preservation of the union; when the young, the strong, the brave and the hopeful came from their homes from one ocean to the other and formed in legions under the flag, not a whisper was ever heard to emanate from the money centers, from the cold, hard lips of capitalists, that a depreciated and dishonored currency was not good enough to pay them for their blood and their lives. This money then paid the most sacred obligations ever contracted by a government in all the expanded realms of history. It paid the soldier and the sailor for all the perils and horrors of war. It paid their widows and orphans for all the sorrows of bereavement. Even, therefore, if the authors of the original depreciation were compelled, as the soldiers of the union and the tax-paying laborers of the country were, to reap some of the fruits of their own cunningly devised scheme, it would still be less than an act of even-handed justice toward them. But no such result will follow the repeal of the resumption act, especially if its repeal is accompanied by the proper and necessary legislation for which bills are now pending in this body.

The repeal of the resumption act, and a law compelling the secretary of the treasury to receive without delay United States notes for duties on imports, will at once equalize all our currencies and bring immediate relief to all useful classes. The existence of the act of January 14, 1875, on the statute books is a standing warning not only to the government to contract its circulation, but also to every bank in the United States to do the same, in order to be ready for the demand that will be made upon them for specie in redemption of their notes on and after the 1st of January, 1879. It is a threat that whosoever has an obligation out to pay money on that day, whether it is the government responsible for its legal tender notes or the banks responsible for bank note circulation, or the citizen liable on his promissory note, shall be subject to a call for payment in coin. It requires but a moment's reflection to perceive the inevitable consequence of such a law. From that day [illegible] time, the government is making preparation to meet its requirements by diminishing as far as possible the currency it will have to redeem.

At this very hour this work is going on. An announcement appears in the public press that legal tender notes to the amount of $1,167,[illegible] have just been destroyed by order of the secretary of the treasury, that being eighty per cent. of the additional bank note circulation issued during the month of April. The banks have been and continue to be systematically hoarding their circulation, in order that they may be as well prepared as possible to meet the runs for specie redemption that will be made upon them. Private parties who have money to lend in the ordinary way withhold it, except upon such securities and under such circumstances as render them doubly safe, fearing, as they reasonably may, that few debtors will be able to meet their obligations less than a year hence in coin. The result is that contraction has prevailed in every quarter, and sent forth its deadly influences in every direction. While there is perhaps something over six hundred millions of a paper currency in existence at this time, there are scarcely three hundred millions this hour in the hands of the people aiding the business and labor of the country. Nor will this condition of affairs cease when we have a nominal resumption of specie payments, whether that be now or at the opening of the coming year. To say that we have resumed specie payments because paper money and gold and silver money are quoted as equal in value, is an easy solution to superficial minds. To maintain resumption when specie payments become widely and generally demanded, and of daily occurrence in every branch of business, and in discharge of all obligations, old as well as new, is quite another thing. The secretary of the treasury in his recent interview with the house committee on banking and currency admitted that to maintain specie payments it would be necessary to maintain contraction. He admitted in substance that the hoarding system by which the government and banks have already taken the life out of the active business of the country, will have to be continued. This is the absolute and actual prospect held up to the American people as long as the present law for the resumption of specie payments stands unrepealed. It makes certain a dark, perilous and unhappy future, linking itself to the present and the past, which have already far too heavily taxed the endurance of the people.

Sir, in addition, however, to the great sum of evils which the financial policy of the government has fastened on the American people, and which are seen and known of all in their daily contact with them, there is another which has grown up more silently and unnoticed, but which has already reached the most dangerous proportions.

The insufficiency of money in circulation among the people with which to transact business and employ labor has led the farming classes throughout the country, and especially in the west, to adopt the most perilous and desperate expedients to relieve themselves. They have been driven to mortgage their homes to obtain money at usurious rates of interest in order to meet their debts and the ordinary obligations of business. It has been estimated that the loaning associations of the east hold mortgages on western farms to the amount of $350,000,000. On this enormous sum of borrowed money the interest account will average $35,000,000 per annum. Such tribute was hardly ever before in the history of the world paid by one class of citizens to another class in the same government. It could not take place anywhere on the globe except in a land cursed by the most flagrant and wicked class of legislation. It could not have fallen like a deadly blight on the agriculture and producing interests of this country but for the fact that all the great powers of the government have for years past been exerted to foster the gains and swell the profits of idle wealth at the expense of labor. Instead of furnishing to the people a circulating medium equal to their business wants, a policy has prevailed which has driven them to the tender mercies of the money changers, and to lay the title deeds to their homes on the counters of the broker and the usurer in pawn for a currency that could be obtained in no other way.

And now, with contraction and hoarding still to continue on the part of the government and the banks, these titles are to be redeemed after the 1st day of January next in coin or be forfeited. In this fact is to be found the meaning of those threats now often made by the organs of the money power that the ownership of the soil will change, and a system of great landlords and a numerous tenantry be established in our midst after European models. It means that thousands and hundreds of thousands of the present owners of their farms shall either be dispossessed under the decrees of foreclosures, or remain as tenants and pay rent to non-resident landlords. It means that a landed aristocracy shall be built up in connection with the moneyed aristocracy which already exists, and that the entire spirit of this government shall be subverted. It means that those who have always thought the British system of government a better one than our own have successfully laid the foundations and already taken gigantic steps toward the accomplishment of their ideas.

A permanent national debt is their opportunity, and they have embraced it with eager zeal to advance their purposes. In their eyes it is a national blessing, and we never hear from their lips a desire for its liquidation. It is their source of power and of income. In 1688, almost two hundred years ago, the national debt of Great Britain commenced from small beginnings to run its terrible career of oppression, pillage and pauperism. It has swollen to the awful dimensions of nearly $4,000,000,000. No one contemplates its payment. In the shape of consols, funds and bonds it presents a refuge in which capital, retired from business, escapes taxation, and at the same time silently but unceasingly sucks the life blood of the toiling masses. Some of the results which have followed in connection with the ownership of the soil, are worthy the consideration of the American people at this time. The population of England is estimated at a fraction over 18,000,000. She contains 29,179,622 acres of land that are owned by her citizens. In the last publication of the financial reform association of England the amazing fact appears that 16,352,666 acres of these lands, being largely more than one-half the entire landed property of the country, are owned by the insignificant number of 4,736 individuals. The rental incomes arising from these vast possessions amount to $472,212,345 per annum, thus showing an average ownership on the part of less than 5,000 persons of over 350,000 acres and an average income to each of them of about $95,000.

The population of Wales is placed at 1,217,135 souls. The lands held by private ownership amount to 3,833,963 acres; and of these 2,344,912 acres are owned by 672 individuals, with an annual rental income, arising from the labor of a peasantry in a state of semi-starvation, amounting to $12,247,600.

Scotland has a population of 3,336,867 inhabitants. Her lands are estimated at 18,946,694 acres. How incredible it appears to the American mind that 1,758 individuals own 17,584,628 of these acres, nearly all of the land of the entire country; and yet such is the fact. The lords and barons of these broad domains draw from the porridge-fed tenantry who cultivate them, the sum of $36,463,990 per annum.

The population of Ireland is computed to be 5,409,400. Her lands measure 20,159,678 acres, and 15,804,762 are owned by 3,722 individuals, who each year collect a rental income of $37,763,080 from the toiling men and women who inhabit that oppressed and impoverished island. The murder of a landlord a few days ago in Ireland attracted the attention of the civilized world. I have had the curiosity to examine the extent of his possessions, and consequently the extent of his power to oppress the landless poor. The earl of Leitrim at the time of his death owned in county Donegal, 56,184 acres; in county Leitrim, 31,170 acres; in county Galway, 18,208 acres; and in county Kildare, 58 acres, making a landed estate of 95,619 acres. A general summary of the landholders of the United kingdom of England, Wales, Scotland and Ireland, therefore shows that, while the whole extent of lands reached 72,119,961 acres, and the entire population is 28,227,066, yet the meager number of 10,888 individuals own 51,885,118 acres, more than two-thirds of the lands of the entire kingdom.

Sir, these statistical facts are overwhelming in their significance. They reveal every feature of human servitude and light up all the ghastly lineaments of degradation, famine and woe. They explain the exodus of the last thirty-five years from Great Britain, during which time seven millions of her subjects have exiled themselves from her shores. I have cited them, however, at this time, not for the purpose of dwelling on them, but simply to show to American land owners who have been forced to mortgage their lands to the money power a condensed and comprehensive view of the end of that career on which they have entered. I desire them to see that the policy of their government in withholding an adequate supply of money in circulation has forced them into the clutches of a power which to-day holds mortgages on more acres of American farmers than the entire lands within the boundaries of England; and I desire in their behalf to appeal to the American congress to promptly undo, as far as possible, the ruin that has been inflicted, and to inaugurate a financial reformation which will secure to the toiling farmer his imperiled home and to the industrious mechanic living wages.

It is customary, however, at this time for the supporters of the present financial policy of the government to charge the misfortunes of the people on the people themselves. The extravagance of the people, their reckless expenditures, and their prodigal mode of living are now favorite themes on the tongues of those who recline in the soft lap of wealth and fare sumptuously every day. The hard-handed, sunburnt millions who rise to their daily tasks while the morning star is yet in the sky, and toil for a subsistence until the evening star appears, are constantly lectured on the virtues of economy by the dwellers in palaces, by the inmates of gilded mansions, by the masters of liveried attendants, by the lords of millions, by all such as derive their incomes and their luxuries from the labor and privations of others. These modern teachers of self-denial on the part of the laborer have given the meaning of this world instead of the spiritual meaning its sublime author intended to the parable of ten talents: "For unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance; but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath."

The poor are exhorted to give up luxuries which they have not, in order that the rich may add to their already great abundance. Go to the homes of those who eat their bread in the sweat of their faces and ascertain, if you can, the extravagances in which they indulge. Do they maintain costly equipages, splendid carriages, and richly comparisoned horses? Are their humble dwellings adorned with expensive furniture? Do you see pier-glasses on their walls and feel velvet carpets beneath your feet on their floors? Take a seat with them at their frugal, but hospitable tables. Do you find extravagance there? Where is the solid silverware, the long succession of delicate dishes, the various brands of high priced wines? None of these things are found to tempt the epicurean taste of those who, while preaching economy to the industrial classes, sit down each day to banquets such as Dives presided over when Lazarus lay by his gates begging bread. Have the farmers and mechanics of the country brought calamity on themselves by extravagance in dress?

Where one indulges in broadcloth a hundred are glad to be comfortable and appear decent in homespun. Do their wives and daughters wear velvets and expensive silks? Must they, too, economize and put on plainer attire in order that the votaries of fashion and wealth may increase their demands? Sir, the laboring men and women of this country have not been extravagant in their lives, nor do their present embarrassments and suffering arise from that cause. It is enough that they should be weary with care and toil, and filled with anxiety for the still darkening future. They should at least be spared reproachful calumny. They constitute the only economizing, self-denying class of citizens in all this broad land. With what force and justice could they turn upon their accusers and fasten on them the crimes of profligacy and shameless extravagance. The federal government itself has been administered for many years past on a scale of the most stupendous expenditures. It has rioted with the public moneys and set an evil example. States, counties, cities and corporations have too generally defied all the principles of economy in their management. But of all who commit extravagance and practice self-indulgence, the most conspicuous is that class which holds the bonds of the government and the mortgages of the people, and loudly urges its oppressed debtors to the most rigid economy for its own benefit. To those who compose this favored class the pleasures and luxuries of every land and clime are accessible. To them nothing can be denied which money will command. As they travel over oceans and continents in quest of new enjoyments, they are assailed by no anxious fears in regard to their pecuniary resources. They know that the plowman in the furrow, the mechanic in his shop, the American laborer of every kind, and wherever he may be, pays daily tribute and makes their income secure.

Far be it from me to incite the people, even if in my power, to disregard their financial obligations. No such purpose inspires my conduct, but I shall at all times vindicate them against the aspersions of those who first oppress and then denounce them. And I shall also always maintain that the entire financial policy of the government should be revised, changed, and reformed in their interests and for their relief.

Are there those upon this floor who regard the financial question a temporary one? To my mind it is not so. Its different phases may be met and for the time being disposed of, but in my judgment, it will remain the paramount question in our public affairs long after every eye that now sparkles in this chamber shall be closed in eternal sleep. Debt is a merciless master, and gives its victims little time and less inclination to consider anything except its ceaseless demands. The American people at this time, aside from their private debts to each other, are indebted to the federal and state governments, to counties, cities and corporations, in the almost incalculable sums of more than $5,000,000,000. The bondage of such a debt can not be a short one. Generations will come and go before emancipation day for the American tax payer arrives.

One form of slavery has been swept from American soil. Another form has followed it, not to last so long, let us hope, but equally remorseless and unsparing in its exactions upon labor. It is the slavery of debt. It is upheld by the sanctions of law, but the greatest question for American statesmanship for the next fifty years or more will be its abolition without doing violence to our national honor. Year after year, in one form or another, that idea will press itself on us for solution. Legislative compromises will be made and declared final, but as long as debt continues to make its insatiate demands on the fruits of industry there will be no finality. Nor are the people to be silenced on this vital issue of their own interests by the meaningless, vapid and insolvent cry of communism hurled at them by the agents of the money power. Those who are doing most to engender and foster the spirit of communism in this country are the adherents of the extreme measures of financial contraction and a forced return to specie payments, regardless of shattered homes, despairing men, wailing women and outcast children. Revolutions are not created by those who plead for justice, but rather by such as work injustice and rivet the bolts of oppression.

The cry of the sheriff's sale and the flag of the auctioneer selling homes and their contents for debts are far more certain and powerful precursors to a dangerous public opinion than the most inflammatory discussions. Let liberality, justice, and forbearance toward a people in distress prevail, and the future will be calm and prosperous. Let the teachings and the warning words of Andrew Jackson be heeded and all will be well. Forty-five years ago he looked upon the United States bank with its capital of thirty millions as full of danger to the rights of the people. How insignificant was the power of organized capital at that time in comparison with its tremendous functions to-day! Yet on the 10th day of January, 1832, in his immortal veto message, these were the faithful words of the hero of New Orleans and the expounder of a true Democracy:

"It is to be regretted that the rich and powerful too often bend the acts of the government to their selfish purposes. Distinctions in society will always exist under every just government. Equality of talents, of education, or of wealth cannot be produced by human institutions. In the full enjoyment of the gifts of heaven and the fruits of superior industry, economy and virtue, every man is equally entitled to protection by law. But when the laws undertake to add to their natural and just advantages artificial distinctions; to grant titles, gratuities and exclusive privileges; to make the rich richer and the potent more powerful, the humble members of society, the farmers, mechanics and laborers, who have neither the time nor the means of securing like favors to themselves, have a right to complain of the injustice of their government.

"There are necessary evils in government. Its evils exist only in its abuses. If it would confine itself to equal protection and, as heaven does its rains, shower its favors alike on the high and the low, the rich and the poor, it would be an unqualified blessing. * * * Experience should teach us wisdom. Most of the difficulties our government now encounters, and most of the dangers which impend over our union, have sprung from an abandonment of the legitimate objects of government by our national legislation and the adoption of such principles as are embodied in this act. Many of our rich men have not been content with equal protection and equal benefits, but have besought us to make them richer by act of congress. By attempting to gratify their desires we have, in the results of our legislation, arrayed section against section, interest against interest, and man against man, in a fearful commotion which threatens to shake the foundations of our union? It is time to pause in our career, to review our principles, and, if possible, revive that devoted patriotism and spirit of compromise which distinguished the sages of the revolution and the fathers of our country.

"If we cannot at once, in justice to interests vested under improvident legislation, make our government what it ought to be, we can, at least, take a stand against all new grants of monopolies and exclusive privileges; against any prostitution of our government to the advancement of the few at the expense of the many, and in favor of a compromise and gradual reform in our code of laws and system of political economy."

The principles were enunciated nearly half a century ago. They were called forth by the first attempts of consolidated wealth to control the public affairs of this country. With them their great author confronted the incipient steps of the money power to seize upon the legislation of this government. One national bank with a moneyed influence of perhaps $100,000,000 then menaced the rights and interests of the people. Now over 2,000 national banks, with the control of more than two thousand millions of money, represent the gratuities and exclusive privileges which, in the language of Jackson, "make the rich richer and the potent more powerful." The evil which he sought to destroy at its birth has in our time become a colossal giant, dominant and absolute in every department of the government. He warned his countrymen against an infant in its cradle, now grown to be a monster, whose desolating hoof prints are to be found invading all the thresholds of industry and business from one ocean to the other. Jackson plead for reform in our financial system when the cloud of danger appeared no larger than a man's hand in our political sky.

The whole heavens are black, and nothing save the application of his doctrines will ever again give us a shining sun over our heads. Let us signalize our devotion to those doctrines by an act of legislation for the benefit of prostrate business and destitute labor. The repeal of the law compelling the payment of all debts in coin from and after the first of January next will bring light and hope to millions of darkened homes. It will cut the accursed ligatures of contraction, permit the money of the country, the arterial circulation of business life, to flow again in healthful currents and in natural channels. Paralysis will disappear, activity and prosperity will revive, the dead will come to life, and new sounds will be heard, the sounds of busy, cheerful, happy labor.

No act of this government since the advent of peace at Appomattox, thirteen years ago, has been hailed with such joy as will ring through the land over the repeal of this pernicious law—the deadly upas tree of American legislation. Nor will rejoicings be confined to any one section. A shout of gladness will ascend from every quarter, from the laboring masses of New England, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and the entire Atlantic seaboard, as well as from that mighty seat of present and future political and agricultural empire, the valley of the Mississippi. The coast of the Pacific, too, will respond, and the whole people will once more leap forward under natural laws, and not under artificial restraints imposed by the selfish greed of favored classes. A feeling of contentment and obedience to law will spring up in millions of hearts that are now sore, reckless and defiant under a sense of wrong. Popular relief will insure public tranquility, the turbulence of distress in the labor regions will cease, and even the money power itself will at last find that an act of justice to the people, though long delayed and reluctantly conceded, is a good investment.

MR. POTTER'S LETTER.

Showing How Nothing But Good Can Result from Inquiry—Republican Nonsense About Violence—Most Excellent Reasons for Ordering Investigation—The Results That Are Looked For.

The Hon. Clarkson N. Potter, having received a letter from a friend in New York containing certain inquiries in regard to the effect of his resolution, has prepared the following answer:

Washington, May 27, 1878.

My Dear Sir: I have your letter of the 25th. * * * You ask me why Mr. Stephens was "howled" down? The "howling" was by the newspapers. To interrupt the pending order of business by a motion or a statement requires unanimous consent, and every member has the absolute right to object to the interruption. This objection is expressed by the words, "I object," or a demand for "the regular order." Sometimes one person will prevent the interruption; sometimes the desire to prevent it is general, and then the cry of "regular order" will be from many persons. It so happened that there was a very general unwillingness to hear Mr. Stephens. He had suggested that we should receive and adopt the Hale amendment. It was reported that he had given the Republicans a list of twenty-two names who would follow him in any motion of his to prevent investigation. About this he was grossly mistaken, and this made our side especially unwilling to hear him. But you will observe that when I rose to make a proposition to Mr. Hale, and the Republican outcry prevented my being heard, it was announced by the press that "Mr. Potter's inquiry was interrupted," while Mr. Stephens was headlined as "the venerable statesman howled down by Potter's mob."

You ask me why we should not let the Hale amendment be attached to our resolution? Because it was not germane. An inquiry into frauds accomplished and which changed the electoral vote is proper to prevent their repetition, but an inquiry into mere attempts at fraud, which resulted in nothing, is not. First, because we understood it contained recitals to which we could not assent, and which would have forced us to vote against our own resolution. Second, because we offered Mr. Hale every opportunity to have his amendment adopted as a separate resolution. That it was not so offered shows it was really not desired. Third, because its incorporation into the resolution might have had the effect of preventing any report upon the resolution. As it is, the committee will have probably but one opportunity to report in this Congress, and this amendment could, if added to the resolution, be made to prevent the report at that time, and thus to deprive us of an opportunity to report at all. Just as we got ready to report we should be liable to be stopped to take further testimony in some of the added States brought forward for the very purpose of preventing a report.

But you suggest that to raise a question about the last Presidential election will bring on disturbance or revolution. Not at all. About that "possess yourself in peace." There is not the slightest chance of revolution or disturbance. When the whole country was at fever heat on the subject of the election, a way was found to establish a tribunal to pass upon the election, and everyone submitted to that determination. The President's title rests upon that. If now it should appear that there was fraud, which palpably affected the electoral vote, and which the commission did not notice, and if a legal remedy exists for correcting the error, you cannot believe that such a proceeding under the law could lead to disturbance. If there be no such legal remedy existing, and Congress should hereafter, by the approval of the President, or by two-thirds of both houses without that approval, provide one, why should the legal determination thereafter had any more produce disturbance than the decision of the Electoral Commission did? It is exactly because this is not Mexico, and because the people prefer determining questions by legal methods, and, if the legal methods have not been provided, to invent legal methods of determining them, and submit to the determination thus arrived at, that this country cannot be Mexicanized.

About the enumeration of electoral votes there could be no question. Eight and eight could only be counted as sixteen. Neither could there be question that the conceded vote of every State should be counted. To refuse that would be revolutionary. But when there were two bona fide returns from a State, each claiming to be its vote, it was a necessity to decide between these returns before either return could be counted. This determination could only be made by the Vice President, who opened the returns, or by the Congress in whose presence they were opened. I thought it clear from the nature of our Government, from the precedents, and from the opinions so many statesmen had expressed, that this grave power, upon which the last election did, and upon which any election might depend, could only be vested in Congress. If this power rested in Congress alone, then the action of Congress was necessary before a choice could be made between conflicting returns; and so whenever the two houses of Congress could not agree in their choice of a return—one house preferring one and the other the other—no choice could be had, and the vote of that State would be lost. Not because one house had any greater rights or powers than the other, not because either or both houses together had the right to reject arbitrarily or to refuse to reckon any certain electoral vote, but only because in case of bona fide conflicting returns from a State, each claiming to represent its electoral vote, it was a necessity to choose between the returns before the vote of the State could be counted. This was the view at last established, for the Electoral Commission to decide the disputed votes was created by Congress, and that was the only authority it possessed.

Now, it seemed to me in 1876 that this was so clear, and that the leading Republican Senators had so generally committed themselves to this view in previous discussions, that we ought to stand upon that ground—to declare that we would abide the action of Congress, would accept whomever the Congress found to be elected; and that if the two houses should fail to agree as to which of the returns from any State from which there were bona fide duplicate returns should be received, whereby the vote of the State was lost, and no election by the electors should thus result, we would then abide and maintain the choice of the House of Representatives, the body authorized by the constitution to elect the President where there is no choice by the Electoral College. Instead of doing this we drifted along until the Republicans, hewing all the while to the line, had got us where we were willing to accept the Electoral Commission. Having accepted it, of course we were bound to submit to its results; but we ought at least to be allowed to show—if such was the fact—that the returns upon which the commission passed were procured by fraud.

I admit that the Presidency is not worth a civil war, but I have not believed there was any danger of such a war. The generation who charged up the heights of Fredericksburg and defended the works at Petersburg will not go lightly into another civil struggle. We must get years further on before that will happen. I remember after the election remarking to Gen. McDowell that a great mine might be exploded by a spark. To which he answered, "Yes, if the train be inflammable, but this time the powder is wet." He was right. There never was a danger of civil war. The whole thing was, as I think, a gigantic game, in which we held the cards and the Republicans bluffed us. Years hence, when it is remembered that we needed only one electoral vote, and that your side could not get on without every one of the remaining seventeen—that we had 300,000 popular majority, that our majorities were around the Capitol, yours in New England, the Northwest and the Pacific coast—that the moral sense of the country was that our man was elected and yours not, that you had nothing on your side but the control of an army, of which 10,000 men could not be got together, the privates mostly in sympathy with us and commanded by officers educated to understand the supremacy of the civil over the military authority, officers who (excepting the leaders, Grant, Sherman and Sheridan) could, I believe, never have been generally used to resist the declaration of the House of Representatives (I am told this will appear certainly whenever the secret correspondence of the War Department is revealed)—and that you were laden down with the care of the national credit, the first shock to which would have arrayed against you all the moneyed institutions of the country—that under such conditions, I say, your leaders contrived and were able to carry through the capture of all those seventeen votes will be regarded as one of the greatest political performances of history. I admit the success of the Republican leaders. Having lain down when the law was on our side, and when we ought to have stood up, it is not for us now to stand up as long as the law remains against us.

But you will ask whether, if there be no danger to public order from legal proceedings, there may not be from action by Congress. No; no more than from the action of the courts. Congress represents the people of the country, but does not march before them. It expresses but does not anticipate their will. Should fraud connected with the electoral count appear so gross and palpable that you and all honorable men should unite in denouncing it, Congress might then take action. But, if so, what Congress might do, being the result of the action of men of all parties of the great body of the people, not of a party, would be effected quietly, certainly, and without violence or disturbance. In saying this I do not mean that I expect the investigation to be followed by either legal or Congressional action. What, if anything, should be done, because of the inquiry, must depend upon the results of the inquiry. But I do mean that whatever action, if any, should follow the investigation, such action can neither disturb the order nor the prosperity of the country. This cry of wolf, when there is no wolf, this effort to make it appear that there is danger to peace or order from this investigation, is a Republican pretence like the "bloody shirt" justification of carpet-bag government, like the "public danger" excuse advanced for the enforcement of Durell's infamous order, and the protection of the Returning Board by bayonets, like the cry set up after the election to prevent any agitation and to secure submission. We must have a very sorry sort of popular government if Congress cannot even inquire into frauds in the choice of the Executive without endangering the peace and prosperity of the country.

What, then, you ask, is the purpose of the investigation? I answer: To ascertain the facts, so that if frauds be established a repetition of such frauds may be prevented, and, if not, to clear up the general belief throughout the country that there were such frauds. It is true that not every allegation of wrong is to be inquired into by Congress, but when a large portion, if not a large majority, of the people believe that the last Presidential election was secured by organized fraud, surely an inquiry to ascertain the facts ought to be had. The feeling among many Republicans, after the election, was that while we had been cheated in the returns we had bulldozed the negroes as badly, so that the accounts of wrong were about equal.

This belief in the bulldozing of the negro was based mainly upon the fact that in certain districts in the South, which usually gave Republican majorities, there was not returned that year a single Republican vote. Now, the people of the North have never understood that this condition of things was fraudulently prepared by the Republicans. They ought to understand that, and, beyond that, they ought to understand that there never was anything so dangerous to a free government as a Returning Board. A delegation of persons vested with discretionary power to revise the votes cast become thus the body that elect. So long as they exercise their functions under the protection of the State alone the influence and indignation of the people will prevent them from any flagrant and enormous outrage. The public pressure will necessitate some excuse for subverting the choice of the people, some limitation upon the outrages they do to the popular wish. But separate them from the people by a cordon of Federal troops, under the pretence of preserving order; surround them with Federal bayonets, and they cease to be responsible to any one but the national administration which protects them. There need then be no limit to, as there is longer no check upon their abuses. To throw out the votes of one side and keep in the votes of the other without cause, to invent pretext for such wrongs, to accept after continued protests and manufactured objections as color for their action, to permit figures to be altered, returns to be forged, frauds to be perfected, and generally every means by which the will of the people may be frustrated and the popular voice stifled then becomes possible, and there may be thus a condition of things absolutely destructive of free government.

We believe that it was by such proceedings we were cheated out of the election.

Unless the proceedings be exposed the outrage will be repeated. If an administration can defraud its opponents out of the results of an election at which they had seventeen electoral and 300,000 popular majority and no effort is made even to inquire into the wrong, there is nothing the next time to prevent the same administration cheating their opponents even though the latter have forty electoral votes and a million popular majority. And this will go on time after time until the outrage becomes intolerable.

Let us rather, as Mr. Jefferson said, "have a jealous care of the right of election by the people, and seek a safe and mild corrective for abuses which, where no peaceable remedy is provided, are lopped by the sword of revolution." It has been said that there was nothing more cowardly than a million of dollars except two millions. This is natural. But it is the mistake of capital to magnify the dangers on the surface and overlook those that lie below. Just now your capitalists are troubling themselves about the Commune, and oppose the reduction of the army, which they would have kept up as a national police. And yet, in no great country of the world is there so little danger of Communism as in this, for nowhere is property so generally distributed. But capitalists stood by supinely when the army was used to protect Returning Boards in stifling the votes of States and frustrating the will of their people, and under the pretence of maintaining order to subvert the very principles of free government. Believe me in this, there was real danger. Governments are based upon principle. The theory of this Government is that the people of the States shall choose electors for themselves, and that by the aggregate voice of such electors the national Executive shall be selected. To let the party in power interfere by force of arms to protect local boards in falsifying the will of the localities is to subvert the theory of this Government, and lead surely to its destruction. Whatever may result from the proposed investigation, you may be sure that nothing can result that will disturb either your flocks or your balances. The trouble to capital, property, and freedom will come, not perhaps in your time or mine, but come at last, from refusing to inquire into frauds. To confront the evil if you may not right it, is to prevent its repetition. To shut your eyes to it supinely is to jeopard and not to preserve the future peace, safety, and prosperity of the country.

Faithfully yours, Clarkson N. Potter.

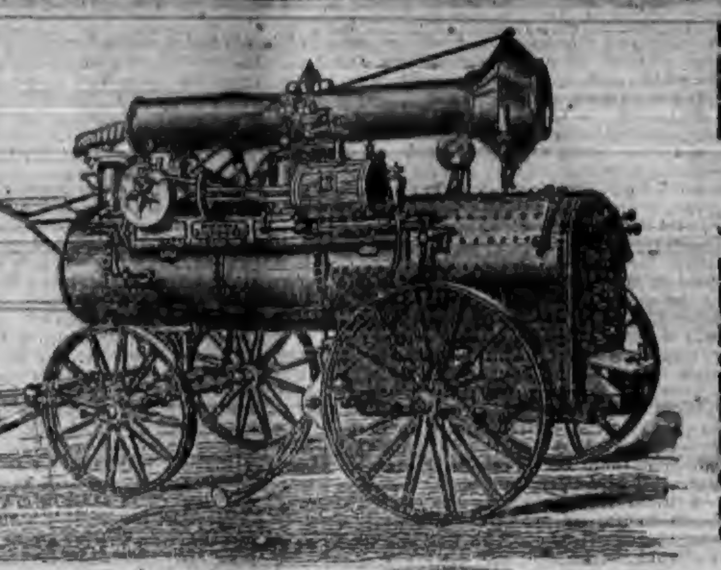
THRESHER



THE "VIBRATOR"

STEAM THRESHER ENGINE!

THE BEST IN THE MARKET.

This Thresher saves all the grain, cleans perfectly; no waste; threshes Flax, Timothy and all seeds; durable, light running and reliable.

THE THRESHER ENGINE, TEN HORSE POWER cannot be excelled. Perfect safety from explosion, and not the least danger from fire. Will pay a premium to any one who will tie a bundle of straw to the top of swoke stack and set it on fire from sparks therefrom. Mamufactured by NICHOLS, SHEPHERE & CO., Battle Creek, Michigan.

Call and see them. JOHN L. DAVIS, Agent.

BOSS HARNESS SHOP.

BIG GUN IN WORKING ORDER.

COMPETITOR STAND FROM UNDER.

SHILLING sells more Harness than his competitor simply because he uses none but the best Chestnut Oak Leather, manufactured in West Virginia. Employs none but the most experienced workmen. He has the largest stock of

Heavy Harness, Light, Single and Double Coach Harness,

In the Town of Auburn.

Extra Fine Plated Harness

Made to order, I keep on hand everything in my line of trade, such as Buffalo Robes, Lap Robes, Whips, Brushes, Curry Combs, Halters, Riding Bridles, all styles of Collars, Sweat Pads, Best Harness Oils, Axel Grease, Axel Oil for Carriages. I warrant all stock and work that goes out of my shop. Having been a resident of DeKalb county for 33 years, and knowing the wants of the farmers, I flatter myself that I will render satisfaction to all who may deal with me. No slaughtering prices. No shoddy harness. All first-class. Carriage Trimmings kept in stock and Trimming done to order. Repairing done with neatness and dispatch. Shop on corner of Jackson and Seventh streets, west of public square. Don't forget the place.

Jones' Fortunate Dream.

Thomas D. Jones' sudden leap from comparative poverty to the possession of a million is the talk of the town. He saw defects in the common process of grinding flour, and by a simple invention that has removed them has made, in less than ten months, $1,250,000. And, seemingly, this is just the beginning of what he is to make. The secret is the dressing of the millstone that grinds the wheat. He saw that, by the ordinary picking process, too much surface was made on the stones. The kernel was crushed; he wished it to be granulated. The stones became hot, destroying the strength and color of the grain and taking out the gluten. He saw that, by lessening the surface, these defects must be overcome, and he set himself to work to overcome them. He has succeeded.

Jones lives in a plain but elegantly furnished house at 32 Shonnard street. The Sun reporter, visiting him, found all the neighbors talking of his good luck, as they called it, and estimating his wealth at millions. He returned from Europe only a short time ago, and being modest and unassuming, had not proclaimed his great success, as some might have done. But the story would out, and as usual it took an exaggerated form. Mr. Jones himself opened the door. He is of medium height, portly, and with somewhat gray hair and whiskers. He was perfectly willing to tell what he had done and how it had been accomplished, and his story was narrated modestly and as though he were detailing the most ordinary of events.

"I am a Welchman," he began; "no Scotch about me, as has been said. I journeyed from Wales while only three years old. My father bought two farms near Bridgewater, in Oneida county, where he yet lives; and in early boyhood I was apprenticed as a miller to Thomas Roberts, who ground grists in Waterville. I have been trying to invent something all my life, and in lesser attempts have sometimes been successful. I saw that the old method of making flour by grinding it between two almost smooth stones destroyed the life of the wheat. The kernel was mashed to a powder. My notion was that I could improve it by granulating it. I must, therefore, invent some kind of stone that would not crush the wheat—that would save the middlings—a stone that would not get hot and bake the color out of the flour and take its strength and gluten from it; my mill stone must have less surface. While I was thinking it all over I moved to Ohio, and there I tried to work out the problem by changing the bolting cloths That improved it somewhat, but it wasn't the thing. I hadn't got rid of the friction between the stones. I don't own a mill, and so I had to work it along as best I could, as it was hard work to get any one to bear any of the expense. I worked on various mills in Ohio, and making some improvements on the old manner of dressing stone, I at length made an engagement with the Throop Grain Cleaner Company, now of Auburn, to travel. It gave me an opportunity to see many mills and mill-processes in the country. I studied and studied, and thought over the problem while I was traveling; thought it over night and day, even to worrying over it.

"The grand idea hit me in a dream. I put up at the St. Charles Hotel in Toledo to stay over Sunday. I went to bed as usual, studying and studying, and at length I went to sleep, and that night it came to me as clear as a bell. I thought it all out before I woke up, just as naturally as though I had been picking away at a millstone."

What did you do when you woke?"

"I said: 'I have it at last. I've something now that'll beat the friction. I've something that will make more furrow than land.' Millers will understand that expression. I went to Senator Isaac M. Barrett, of Green county O., a Quaker, and told him I had something that would give him all the middlings he wanted now, and would improve his flours from fifty cents to a dollar a barrel. He owned the Spring Valley Mills, and he told me to go to work and renovate his whole mill on my principle. I did so, and the first shipment of flour to Baltimore after that was of one hundred barrels, eighty of my new process and twenty of the old. They sold the new at $1 a barrel more than the old would bring.

"I wanted to get more indentation, more furrows. No, my process isn't cold blast on Minnesota flour, or any thing of that sort. I use diamond quartze in the face of the stone instead of the mill-pick. That's it in a nutshell. The rubbing of the sharp diamond quartz on the stone makes the indentations; and the middlings escapes through the indentations, instead of having its life crushed out. It costs nearly one-third less than the old method of picking, and it makes as good flour out of No. 2 wheat as can be made of No. 1 by the old way. The only secret about it is how the diamond quartz is applied. I have put my improvement in a few mills in this country. Penfield & Lyons and Darston & Royce and Doolittle, Ames & Co., Oswego, and a firm in Buffalo, and a few others have it. I took about $100,000 in this country before I met Mr. Appleby & Sons, of Blackburn England. He was visiting in this country, and heard of my process. He wanted me to go over and put it in for him. I did so last July, and that started the ball in the old country. I sold Lincolnshire to Marshall & Sons of Grimsby for £14,000, the neat little sum of $75,000—that is, I sold it as agent for my wife, Mrs Elizabeth Jones, who owns the whole thing. I sold town of Hull for £8,000; sold to David & Sons at Newcastle-on-Tyne four counties for $77,500. David & Sons turn out more flour than any firm in Great Britian, and they use my method. They paid me for the use of their Pheonix Mill alone £2,000. I sold Penance in Cornwall-on-the-Sea for £1,600. Three milling firms in Liverpool have it, and they have it in Fordingbridge and Dover, and Kent and Birkenhead, all to the tune of $1,250,000."

Here Mrs. Jones announced that the mail had come in. "Here's a letter for you from Glassgow,' she said.

"Glasgow!' said Mr Jones, "that's what I've been waiting for! It is from my agent,' and Mr. Jones read:

"26 QUEEN BUILDINGS, DALE STREET, LIVERPOOL, May 7.—Mr. ———, of Glasgow, offers $80,000, and I have accepted."

"That's a fair sum,' he added. "The last day I was in London I made one sale of £7,500. Yes. I went to Ireland and the Shackletons took it. Thos. Lester & Sons, Quaker millers, of Liverpool, say I am a benefactor to the human race, and they propose the very absurd thing of recting a monument in my honor."

"How about the future, Mr. Jones?"

"I don't propose to sell much in the United States now. I can't bother with this country! I am here to improve my patents, and the work is being mainly done in Utica and Rochester. The Munson Brothers, in the former city, are preparing my machinery, and I expect to sail for Liverpool a week from Saturday I shall go through France and Germany. I tell you, sir, there's millions more in it than I've yet got."

DRUMMING IN ARKANSAS.

The Experience of Mr. Bister.

A month or two ago. Mr. Alexander Bister was out in Aarkansas traveling as a salesmon for a Philadelphia house. One morning as he emerged from the door of his hotel he heard the report of a pistol, and a shot whizzed past his ear. He looked around and saw a man aiming at him with a revolver. He turned to fly just as another shot cut through his hat, but as he did so a second mand hit him upon the shoulder with his fist and nearly knocked him down. A moment later Mr. Bister clenched his new antagonist, and a rough-and-tumble fight began. The stranger removed a handful or two of Mr. Bister's hair; then he kicked his left leg three times with violence, and then put his elbow against Bister's third rib and scourged it with intense force.

Bister resisted, but as the man who shot at him would hit him on the head with the butt of his revolver whenever Bister happened to get on top, he had not really a first-class chance. Pretty soon the combatants rolled over in the gutter, with Bister underneath, lying in the mud. While he reclined there his antagonist took hold of Bister's nose with his teeth and chewed it as if noses were his favorite diet and he was seriously hungry. When he let go the other man tapped Bister's skull a few more times with his pistol, and then the two picked up their victim and soused him in the canal, from which they finished him, a few minutes later, by inserting a boat hood in the back of his coat. As they dragged him out, nearly dead, the man with the pistol picked up Bister's hat and after studying intently for a minute the name pasted upon the inside of the crown, said:

"Why, see here, Harry, there's some mistake! I'm afraid we've got the wrong man. I say—you, sir—is your name Alex. Bister?"

Mr. Bister gasped out that it was.

"Well, it's too bad," said the man. "Now, do you know that I mistook you for Judge McGrath, of Little Rock, who cheated us in a land claim."

"Do I look like him," asked Bister in a faint voice.

"You're as much alike as twins. It's a thundering shame. I hope you'll accept my apology for treating you so impolitely."

"It occurred to me that it was rather impolite," whispered Bister, "but don't mention it. How's your health and your family's?"

"And what makes it worse, is, that you're a stranger, said the man, not heeding the last injury. "I'm afraid you'll gather from what has occurred that we are wanting an affability out here."

"The thoughts perhaps might have entered my mind after I had time for reflection," said Bister, "because in the east, where I live, it is a very rare circumstance that a person indicates his affability by biting off the human nose. But I am a forgiving man, so we'll let it drop. Beautiful weather we are having now."

"I'm mortified about that nose," said the man, "but if you'll come into the drug store a minute I think I can make it hold together somehow with sticking plaster."

"Is it much hurt?" asked Bister, feeling it tenderly.

"It's a perfect nasal ruin," said the man, "Harry, I think you chewed it a little too hard. Why didn't you bite him somewhere else?"

"Perhaps you'd like to take another bite now," said Bister. "You may knaw away at the calf of my leg if you think it would make you feel better. The nose is of no consequence. Perhaps it is a good thing to have it changed a little, for then I won't look so much like Judge McGrath. This seems to be a fine farming country. How are the crops?"

"You appear to be a perfect gentleman," said the man. "If you'll come into the hotel I'll introduce you to some of my friends."

"Certainly," said Bister, "I'll go up right away if you'll get me a pair of crutches and a sling for my arm. I'd like to know them. Maybe they'd be glad to fire four or five shot into me or hold me under the pump? I want to oblige everybody. Do you often have these little laughable incidents in your town?

"most every day in some way or other. There are not eight whole noses in this place except the women's

"How charming! When the news gets around I should think the tide of immigration would flow right in. You say don't care to bite me again?"

"O, no.'

"Don't you want to empty the other barrels of your revolver into my back?"

"No, I think not.'

"Maybe you'd like to kick me, or roll me in the canal? No? Well just toss me in the canal a couple of times again as a kind of an expression of esteem.'

It's hardly worth while.'

"And you think you don't care to pound me with a brick or anything for five or ten minutes?'

"I rather think not.'

"Well, then,' said Bister, "I think I'll crawl home and fix up a little. Good-bye! If you ever come on east, stop and see me! Come and stay a week and bring your relatives. Good-bye!"

And Bister went to the hotel, packed up and fled on the first train. He wrote home that the Arkansas trade could probably be opened up more successfully by an iron-clad man and a salesman who was fond of war.

Never Known to Fail.

Dr. Morris' Syrup of Tar, Wild Cherry and Horehound has never been known to fail in permantly curing obstinate coughs, colds, croupe, whooping cough, nor any diseases of the respiratory organs, and it does it, too, at once. It is not necessary to take it for a long time before you can discover its beneficial effects. Its sale in this community is immense, and its popularity universal. It should not be classed with compounds put up by inexperienced hands. Do not fail to give this great and potent remedy a trial. It will not and cannot disappoint you. Try it once. EVERY YEAR.

BY ALBERT PIKE.

The spring has less of brightness
Every year,
And the snow a ghastlier whiteness
Every year;
Nor do summer's flowers quicken,
Nor autumn's fruitage thicken
As they once did, for we sicken
Every year.

It is growing darker, colder,
Every year,
As the heart and soul grow older,
Every year.
I care not now for dancing,
Or for eyes with passion glancing;
Love is less and less entrancing,
Every year.

Of the loves and sorrows blended,
Every year;
Of the joys of friendship ended,
Every year;
Of the ties that still might bind me
Until time to death resigned me,
My infirmities remind me,
Every year.

Oh! how sad to look before us,
Every year,
While the cloud grows darker o'er us
Every year!
When we see the blossoms faded,
That to bloom we might have aided,
And immortal garlands braided,
Every year.

To the past go more dead faces,
Every year;
Come no new ones in their places,
Every year.
Everywhere the sad eyes meet us;
In the evening's dusk they greet us,
And to come to them entreat us,
Every year.

"You are growing old," they tell us,
"Every year;
You are more alone," they tell us,
"Every year.
You can win no new affection;
You have only recollection,
Deeper sorrow and dejection,
Every year."

Thank God! no clouds are shifting,
Every year,
O'er the land to which we're drifting,
Every year.
No losses there will grieve us,
Nor loving faces leave us,
Nor death of friends bereave us,
Every year.

A FOOLISH DUEL.

The Sequel of a Students' Dinner.

Seventeen years ago I was a student at the University of Paris. We were a gay set, who frequented the restaurant of my esteemed friend Adolphe Bauleau, who has now been dead some five years.

Poor Adolphe! The politest of Frenchmen and most obliging of landlords; his wines were always good, and his dishes unexceptionable. Peace to his ashes! I well remember the last dinner I took at his house, not so much from the delicacy of the viands and the perfection of the cookery, which latter exceeded anything in the Quartier Latin, as from an occurrence of which I was an unwilling spectator, and to a certain extent a participant in.

It was the last day of my university life; and, in commemoration of three years of companionship with some of the noblest hearts I had ever met, I gave an entertainment to my intimates, and Bauleau's was the place selected for the meeting. Our party consisted of but twelve, myself included; and 6 o'clock was named for sitting down to the table.

At 5:30 o'clock we were mostly all assembled, as I had specially insisted on punctuality, and no one wished to disappoint me. The intervening moments passed away in pleasant chat concerning the manifold incidents of our student life—forever past on my part—until the hands of the clock proclaimed the hour appointed, at which instant the head waiter entered the apartment and announced dinner. Upon counting noses we found there was but one absentee, Victor Lemoyne; and, as he was generally behindhand in everything, I was not much surprised, although a little vexed.

"Well," said Jules Laroque, "are we to wait for Lemoyne until the soup gets cold?"

"By no means," replied Maurice Delavigne. "Victor Lemoyne merely stays away to be consistent. Were he to arrive in time his tardiness would be lost."

There was a general laugh at this sally, which, however, had hardly died away when the door opened, and in stalked Lemoyne, and with him a stranger, a young man of about his own age, whom he introduced as the Count de Vautrin. There was no necessity for further delay, and we immediately adjourned to the dinner-table, which I had ordered to be set in the second story back room overlooking the garden, where our festivity would not be interrupted by the noise and bustle of the street. We reached the room, and had all taken our seats, with the exception of Maurice Delavigne, who remained standing, and with good reason, too—every place was occupied.

"How now, waiter," exclaimed he, with mock gravity; "am I to eat on my feet?"

"A mistake of mine, monsieur," replied that worthy functionary; "I thought I had covers for twelve."

"So you did," answered Maurice, "but there are thirteen of us."

The fresh cover was brought. Delavigne ensconced himself snugly upon my left, and the dinner then proceeded.

Frenchmen are the most companionable fellows in the world, and by the time the second basket of champagne had been opened no happier party could have been found within the walls of Paris. As the liquor began to take effect, the fun became fast and furious.

At first we contented ourselves with singing and shouting; but gradually became more and more reckless; we threw the fruit, of which Adolphe had provided a plentiful supply, at the pictures which adorned the walls. Finally, Delavigne leaped upon the table with a champagne bottle in each hand, and commenced a wild, extravagant dance, in which he was joined by several others, while the rest indulged in the same fantastic gyrations on the floor, yelling all the time at the top of their voices.

It was at this moment that Bauleau (the landlord) entered. He said nothing about the destruction of his china and pictures, for which he knew he would be paid, but he besought us in the most heartrending tones to moderate our glee. The gendarmes, he said, would be in the house in five minutes, and, after arresting us, would revoke his license.

The poor fellow was actually pale with fright; and, heated as I was, I deemed it my duty to second his exhortation, and had already begun, when Maurice Delavigne, with an air of drunken gravity perfectly irresistible, advanced to the side of the trembling boniface, and, seizing him by the ear with a firm hand, led him to the door, and, having placed him outside, locked it and put the key in his pocket. Poor Adolphe piteously murmured something about his wife and children as he was being ejected, but it availed him nothing.

The little episode which I have just described had the effect of momentarily arresting our frenzy, and when Delavigne returned to the table and demanded our attention there was a profound silence.

"Gentlemen," said he, "are you aware of the superstition which attaches to a dinner party of thirteen?"

No one spoke, and he continued: "It is this, that before the year is out one of the number will die a violent death."

The silence seemed to grow more intense, and after a short pause he spoke again: "I propose that we adjourn from this apartment to the nearest billiard saloon, and there pair off in couples for the purpose of playing. At the end of the first series of games there will be six losers. Let them pair off and play again, and so continue in the same manner until only one is left, who shall play the final game with the odd man, and the loser, whoever he may be, shall challenge some stranger to fight him a duel this very night. By so doing we give destiny a chance to settle the affair at once; and if she fails to do so, why, it's her fault, not ours. What say you, gentlemen, to the proposition?"

"Agreed! agreed!" resounded on every side, and we sprung at once for our hats.

"Open the door, Maurice!" shouted a dozen voices; "you have the key!"

"Gentlemen," responded he, "have you no regard for the feelings of our host? What! would you rush down stairs helter-skelter, at the imminent risk of disturbing the virtuous slumbers of Madame Bauleau and her charming infant? For shame! Observe me, and profit by my example."

Even as he spoke, he rushed to one of the windows, tore down the curtains, threw up the sash, and leaped out fearlessly into the gloom. We all followed him, and in the twinkling of an eye found ourselves in the garden.

It was a clear fall of fourteen feet, but, the soil being moist and soft, luckily no one was hurt. We struggled on, still following the leadership of Maurice, over a wilderness of vines and flower-beds, until we reached the low wall upon our right; and, scrambling over it, we found ourselves in a narrow alley which led out into the thoroughfare upon which Bauleau's restaurant fronted.

"Select your partners!" exclaimed Maurice, in his clear, ringing tones; and each one locked arms with whoever chanced to be nearest to him.

Delavigne himself being my most immediate neighbor, I took his, and so reached the open street.

Once there, I bethought me of his great skill as a billiard player, which I had once or twice been a witness of, and regretted that I had not selected some one else; but it was too late to repent, and so I said nothing. On consulting our watches we found that it was half-past 11, being a full hour later than any of us had supposed.

A walk of ten minutes brought us to Toison d'Or, at that time one of the most elegant saloons in Paris. It was in the second story of the building, the floor above being occupied as a fencing gallery. Once inside, no time was lost in idle preparation, but, selecting six contiguous tables, we began our play at once. Delavigne, who knew that I was no match for him, insisted upon giving me odds; but, as I resolutely refused to accept of any, he was perforce obliged to play me even.

I was in that state of nervous excitement which, so far from diminishing my skill, actually assisted it, and I exceeded myself; while Maurice, although to all appearance playing with great care, counted very slowly. The consequence was that, much to my surprise, I won the game.

For his second trial he paired off with Laroque, who was even a worse player than myself; and yet, strange to say, Delavigne was again beaten. He experienced a similar fate at the hands of each of his antagonists, and finally was left alone to play the last game of the series with the "odd man," which unenviable position had been selected, from choice, by the young stranger whom Lemoyne had introduced as the Count de Vautrin.

The chances had narrowed down to two men. It was to be either the stranger or my friend, and a strong forboding as to the result took possession of me, when the Count, having taken off his coat and selected a cue, advanced to the head of the table and spoke thus:

"Monsieur Delavigne, I have narrowly observed your play, and feel convinced that to equalize the contest between us you should have the odds of at least one-half the game, which I beg you will allow me to give you."

He ceased, and there was a murmur of approbation among the students at this generosity—the more commendable when the stake which depended on the issue of the game was taken into consideration.

Maurice bowed, and replied: "Sir, I thank you for your courtesy, but I cannot accept of any odds, and, notwithstanding your estimate of my play, I think you will find that I need none."

Not a word more was spoken, but the balls were placed in position and the game began. It did not require half-a-dozen shots for me to perceive that the Count was one of the finest amateurs I had ever seen. His conception and execution were both excellent, and would have reflected no discredit upon the first professional in France.

But what positively astonished me was that in every respect Delavigne seemed to be his equal. His play was magnificent; and in a few moments the table was completely surrounded by spectators, attracted by the extraordinary skill displayed on both sides. As the contest progressed, it was impossible to decide which had the advantage; first one was ahead, then the other; and, finally, as the termination drew near, so evenly were they matched that the Count needed but one to complete his score, Maurice only wanted three.

It was the crisis of the game, and the excitement of the students was terrible. That of the other spectators seemed hardly less intense, although we alone knew of the terrible duty devolving on the final loser. It was plain to me that Delavigne—the generous fellow—had purposely allowed me to beat him, in order to take the whole burden upon his own shoulders.

I blamed myself deeply for not having discovered it in time for remonstration, which was now too late; and so I held my peace. It was the Count de Vautrin's play; and, as the balls were rather awkwardly placed, he did not attempt to add to his score, but played what is technically known as "safety," and left them in a position from which it is almost impossible to effect a count. Maurice looked anxious, but, after a long and careful survey of the table, seized his cue firmly, and, by one of the most brilliant shots I had ever seen, made a carom on the two reds, and so won the game.

The Count laid his cue upon the table, and said, smilingly, "Monsieur, I must congratulate you; I considered myself the first amateur player in Paris, but I find that I have, at least, one superior."

His opponent bowed, and attributed his success more to good fortune than any superiority of skill.

It was getting late, and the frequenters had mostly departed, so that a number scarcely greater than that of our own party was all that remained in the entire saloon.

De Vautrin replaced his coat, and having lit a cigar strayed leisurely round the room, and eventually halted in front of a cavalry Major, who sat dozing in an arm-chair with an expression of somniferous bliss upon his bronzed features positively touching.

"Sir!" said the Count. "Sir!" and he shook him violently by the shoulder.

The warrior opened his blood-shot eyes and glared fiercely upon his interrogator.

"I trust you will pardon me, sir," resumed Count de Vautrin, "for this unseemly interruption; but the fact of the matter is, I am under the necessity of fighting somebody, and attracted by the singular beauty of your features" (the Major was frightfully ugly) "I have made bold to disturb you in order that you become my opponent."

"Sir," responded the incensed cavalryman, "you are a fool!"

"Oh, I understand; you wish a reason," retorted the Count, in the most courteous of tones. "You shall have it."

And, without more ado, he reached forth his hand, and seizing the son of Mars by his nose, which was very prominent, gave it so vigorous a tweak that for a moment I verily believed he must have pulled a portion of it from his face. He immediately leaped to the further side of a billiard table; and it was well he did so, for the now thoroughly aroused soldier sprung to his feet, and, had not some half dozen of us interfered, he would certainly have throttled his insulter on the spot.

I never saw a man so enraged. He literally foamed at the mouth, and our united efforts were hardly sufficient to prevent his breaking away. Finally, seeing that his attempts to release himself were ineffectual, he gave his word to commit no immediate violence, and we loosened our hold.

Count de Vautrin, who had been regarding the whole scene with the utmost nonchalance, now advanced, and said, extending his card, "There, sir, you will find my name and address. You shall have satisfaction."

"Here, sir—here, on this spot!" hissed the Major, trembling all over with passion.

The proprietor of the establishment, attracted by the commotion, came up at this moment and interfered. He besought us to take our differences somewhere else, and informed us, besides, that if we persisted in making his saloon the scene of a duel he would be under the necessity of sending for the police.

During the harangue I noticed that Laroque spoke in an undertone to several of the students, who immediately went and posted themselves in front of the large double doors which constituted the only entrance to the place. At its conclusion he detained the landlord by the skirts of his coat, and thus addressed the spectators of this singular scene, who did not number more than twenty-five, our own party included:

"Messieurs," he said, "if a gentleman be insulted, is it not eminently just and proper that he should demand satisfaction upon the very spot of the affront?"

"Yes, yes!" shouted several voices.

"You see the sentiment of the company, landlord," continued Jules, "after which I trust your good taste will prevent your calling for the police. Should you persist in so doing we will be under the unpleasant necessity of gagging you. So make your choice."

The proprietor, seeing no other alternative, gracefully acquiesced, and took a chair to witness the proceedings.

"Now, lads," exclaimed Laroque, "no time is to be lost. Delavigne, in the fencing gallery above you will find plenty of foils. Take the two which are crossed on the eastern wall. They have no buttons, and will suit your purpose better."

Maurice sped away on his mission, while the rest of the students busied themselves closing the window curtains to prevent observation from the neighboring houses, and extinguishing all the gas jets except two very brilliant ones in the center of the room, distant from each other about twelve feet.

Then, still acting under the direction of Jules Laroque, they gathered round one of the billiard-tables, and, lifting it bodily from the floor, placed it midway between the two jets. It was not until that moment I comprehended his intention. They were to fight on the billiard-table.

Maurice by this time had returned with the foils, which he delivered into the hands of Laroque, who, after examining them, offered one to the Count. But he declined, saying in a low, clear voice, which every one heard, "No. Let the Major choose first. I always give beauty the preference."

The cavalryman ground his teeth, but said nothing, and, having selected one of the weapons, the other was handed to Count de Vautrin, who, after looking at it narrowly and bending it in various ways, threw off his coat, and, whispering a few words to Lemoyne—instructions, probably, in case of the affair terminating fatally for him—sprung lightly upon the table. The Major was in position equally as quickly, and, as the two opponents stood confronting each other, I could not help being struck at the immense disparity of size between them. The soldier was a tall, powerfully built fellow, certainly over six feet, with the arm and chest of a Hercules, while his antagonist was a slight, elegantly-shaped man of not more than five feet eight, with a face that would have been actually effeminate had not its softness of expression been redeemed by the firm set of the upper lip, and the bold, fearless expression of the eyes.

"Gentlemen, are you ready?" exclaimed Laroque.

A sharp, quick "Yes!" came from their lips simultaneously.

"Then," said he, "en garde!" And even as he spoke the two blades crossed with the rapidity of thought, and the contest began.

There was none of that graceful preliminary play, so common among swordsmen, for the purpose of ascertaining the strong and weak points of an adversary; but it was a duel to the death from the first thrust.

To my mind the Major seemed the better fencer, handling his weapon as if it had been a feather, and thrusting hither and thither at all parts of his opponent's body, with a fierceness of rapidity which I had never seen surpassed. I marveled, in fact, how they could be avoided; and they were—parried every one with a neatness and address that challenged the admiration of all.

The combat had been progressing some four or five minutes, when the Major, carried away in the ardor of his attempt to break through his antagonist's guard, for a moment threw himself out of position.

DeVautrin, who up to this moment had been acting principally on the defensive, now totally changed his tactics, and assaulted his huge antagonist with a vigor and ferocity more than equal to his own. His thrusts, which were principally for the face, were directed by a hand so strong and true that twice he broke the skin of the Major's cheek and once pricked his neck.

The moment was one of horrible interest to all. Suddenly, on returning from a lunge at tierce, the Count threw open his guard; whether designedly or not I never knew, but his opponent saw it, and, quick as thought, thrust for the undefended spot. De Vautrin did not attempt to parry, but, by a dexterous half-wheel of his body, received in his arm the point intended for his heart, and at the same moment struck his own hilt-deep through the cavalryman's broad breast. A convulsive shudder passed through the soldier's frame, and, straightening himself at his full height, he fell backward from the table into the gloom, which opened to receive him like a grave.

I shall never forget the dull, heavy thud of his body as it smote the floor. Lemoyne assisted the Count from the table, and bandaged his arm with his handkerchief.

Having hung his coat over his shoulders, Count de Vautrin advanced to the proprietor, and, putting his purse into his hand, desired him not to call the police for ten minutes; having done which, he politely bade us good morning, and quitted the saloon in company with Lemoyne. We examined the ill-fated Major, but he was stone-dead. The weapon had passed directly through his heart.

Two days afterward I left France, nor have I ever visited it since; but were I to live a thousand years I should never forget the awful solemnity of the scene associated with my last dinner in Paris.

Life in Russia.

The Russian "angel of assassination," Vera Sassulitch, absorbs all public attention in France, even to the exclusion of the Exhibition, the Oriental difficulty, and the advantages of Napoleon IV. over Dame Republique. The whirligig of time has brought round its revenge; Russia, in seeking the mote in the eye of Turkey, has forgotten the beam in her own. The gratification is general at the sudden Asmodean peep into Russian interiors, as revealed by the Sassulitch trial. In the realms of the Czar, the more a subject is legally acquitted the more he or she is certain to be officially kidnapped. "Where is Sassulitch?" is, just now, the "question" of all the toy questions brought out. The aristocratic young lady, instead of being the accused, suddenly becomes the accuser. Her victim, Gen. Trepoff, or "staircase," so called because a foundling child was discovered on his door-steps, received two balls as a protest against the brutal police system which he embodies, and that overrides the decrees of justice, in the present, as well as in other cases. After all the hosannahs chanted in favor of Russian liberalism, the French conclude it is simply a tyranny tempered with a gloss of liberty. But scratch the Russian and the Tartar appears. Under the late Czar, Russia was an immense prison hermetically sealed. His son had opened a few of the windows; some currents of civilization have entered, intoxicating the nation, and, in a measure, decomposing its institutions. The new wine has been poured into the old bottles. Russia is as absolute now as before her reforms; the secret police, the personal-will system, is as limitless and as without control, only the masses no longer fear, and still less respect, the police. Hence, the chronic revolutions and the permanent conspiracies, dubbed nihilism—for shortness perhaps, but that aims to turn manners, customs, and government like a glove. For such Utopia the nihilists suffer torture, Siberian exile, the mines and death. The French press say the worst tyrannies under their own right-divine Kings were feeble images of the autocracy now existing in Russia, where the individual as a citizen is unknown, and counts only as a factor on the police registers.—Paris Letter.

DUBLIN has a bad reputation for drunkenness, but it must be conceded that if its greatest brewers and distillers derive their vast wealth from sources which do harm, they are unexampled among men in this line of business for munificence. Sir B. Guinness' magnificent restoration of St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, has been surpassed by Mr. Roe, the distiller, who has spent $1,000,000 on the complete restoration of Christ Church, the other Protestant cathedral in that city.

LAFITTE, THE PIRATE.

His Career After He Left Louisiana for Galveston.

(From the Galveston (Texas) News.)

After the battle of New Orleans Lafitte returned to his old pursuits, and, being unable to remain at Grand Terre, removed to Galveston (then known as Campeachy) island in 1817. Here he built a small fort, having his quarters in a commodious house painted red, where he was visited in 1819 by Col. [illegible], who died here some years since, in the endeavor to secure his co-operation with Gen. Long in his expedition to Mexico, but without success.

Lafitte's person is thus described: He was a well-formed, handsome man, about six feet two inches in height, strongly built, with large, hazel eyes and black hair, and generally wore a mustache. He dressed in a green uniform and otter-skin cap. He was a man of polite and easy manners, of retired habits, generous disposition, and of such winning address that his influence over his followers was almost absolute. He located his town on the ruins of Aury's village, built a house which he painted red, and threw up around it a fort.

While Lafitte was located on the island, he had five or six armed vessels and a large number of followers. In 1819 the island was visited by a severe storm, and several of the vessels were driven ashore on the mainland. Shortly after the occupation, one of Lafitte's men stole a squaw from the Carancahua tribe of Indians, who often resorted to the west end of the island, and kept possession of her. This so enraged the Indians that they attacked a hunting party of the buccaneers, and killed two of them. In return the Indians were attacked by Lafitte with 200 men and two cannon, and a skirmish ensued which lasted two days, when the Indians were forced to flee to the mainland, after having thirty warriors slain.

While at Grand Terre Lafitte had dealt largely in negroes taken from Spanish slavers, and continued the business during his stay here, and it is not a great many years since there were living witnesses that the price of an able-bodied negro was at that period only $40. In 1819 a desperado named Brown plundered an American vessel, and was pursued to Galveston by the United States revenue cutter Lynx, Capt. Mason. Brown arrived before the cutter, and Lafitte getting wind of the affair had him hanged on a little island near the present Harbor Improvement Works, then known as "Little Campeachy," and separated from the larger island by a channel seven or eight feet in depth. He also hanged another of his men named Francois for engaging in a plot to rob and murder Mr. Kuykendall, who, it is quite probable, visited the island for the purpose of purchasing a few of Capt. Lafitte's likely Africans.

The United States, becoming tired of Lafitte's establishment, owing to the numerous complaints of depredations on American vessels, determined to break it up, and dispatched a naval force under Lieut. Kearney, with orders to see that Capt. Lafitte left. The pirate chief received the officer courteously, entertained him sumptuously at the Red House, and issued instructions to his followers to prepare to depart. The buccaneers having everything in readiness, Lafitte ordered the town to be set on fire, and, embarking on the Pride, sailed from the island on the 12th of May, 1820, never to return. After cruising in the Caribbean sea for several years he located on the island of Mugeres, off the coast of Yucatan, where, according to the traveler Stevens, he died in 1826, leaving a widow and a hecatomb of turtle shells to honor his memory.

The Devil's Fruit.

Potatoes were first introduced at Moscow by a Mr. Rowland, between eighty and ninety years ago. At first people would neither plant nor touch them, saying they were the devil's fruit, given to him on his complaint to God that he had no fruit, when he was told to search in the earth for some, which he did and found potatoes. A curious Berwickshire legend, which, however, is palpably anachronical, attributes the introduction of potatoes into Scotland to that famous wizard of the north, Sir Michael Scott. The wizard and the devil, being in partnership, took a lease of a farm on the Mertoun estate, called the Whitehouse. The wizard was to manage the farm; the devil managed the capital. The produce was to be divided as follows: The first year, Sir Michael was to have all that grew above the ground, and his partner all that grew below; the second year their shares were to be just the opposite way. His Satanic Majesty, as is usual in such cases, was fairly over-reached in his bargain; for the wizard cunningly sowed all the land in the first year with wheat, and planted it with potatoes the second; so that the devil got nothing for his share but wheat stubble and potato tops; and this scourging rotation Sir Michael continued until he had not only beggared his partner, but exhausted the soil. In spite of this legend, however, we must begin to give credit to Sir Walter Raleigh for having been the introducer of potatoes into this country. The first that tried them, we are told, fell into the very natural mistake of eating the apples, and disregarding the roots.—The Agricultural Magazine.

What Charley Ross Has Done for Homeless Boys.

Poor little Charley Ross did not suffer in vain, after all, for his misfortune has been the means of bringing good luck to very many little boys, who otherwise, in all probability, would have led lives of misery. In the course of his investigations Mr. Christian K. Ross has examined 497 boys, all of whom were supposed to be the missing Charley. All of these save three, who had been stolen, were friendless scraps of humanity, drifting homelessly over the face of the earth, and, through the publicity gained for them by being mistaken for the lost son of Mr. Ross, the great majority of them were provided by charitable people with comfortable homes. It should be some consolation to Mr. Ross that his quest, while useless to himself, has been so fraught with good to others.—Philadelphia Times.

THE GATHERED ROSE.

Only a rosebud sweet and fair,
Down by the road-side growing,
Of other flowers, rich and rare
And admired, little knowing;
Content its blushing face to hide
'Mong its own leaves, when straying
[illegible] wandering side by side
With zephyrs idly playing.

The rosebud blossomed out at last
Into the perfect flower,
And, plucked by one who sauntered past
Ere it had bloomed an hour,
Was tossed ere long aside, poor thing,
Which sweeter grew when dying,
And left, all crushed and withering,
Upon the road-side lying.

You understand, you say, with scorn,
While listening to my story?
You know which rose, one summer morn,
Was robbed of all its glory?
[illegible]
When so it served your pleasure,
My own, for many and many a day,
Had worshiped without measure.

[illegible]
The love you held so lightly;
But I could lift her from the earth,
The flower once blooming brightly—
[illegible]
Again to toy with—never!
But mine, to worship and to bless,
To keep and hold forever.

"HAVE you ever read "The Tale of a Bumble Bee?"" asked George of Sarah Jane. "No," said she, as she turned the color of real paint; "but I've felt e m."

A MISSISSIPPI Judge was just saying that no one but a coward would carry a pistol, when his own fell from his pocket, was discharged, and the bullet hit a lawyer in the leg.

"WHAT!" said one to a miser, "you have never written poetry?" "Never. In the first place I don't know how, and then think of the incomplete lines—such a waste of paper!"

A KANSAS schoolma'am has introduced a new feature in her school. When one of the girls misses a word, a boy who spells it gets permission to kiss her. As a result, the girls are becoming very poor spellers, while the boys are improving.

IN the following love couplet there is a great paucity of words, but as much meaning as there is in many most-moving love songs that have a fashionable run:

I looked and loved, and loved and looked, and looked and loved again;
But looked and loved, and loved and looked, and looked and loved in vain.

"ARE you trying to raise a mustache, my son?" kindly inquired a heavily-whiskered father, the other morning, observing the young man scraping his face "in the place where the hair ought to grow." "Yes, sir," replied the boy; "since you failed, its about all I can raise."

But as the season wears away,
The bee ecstatic hums,
And with his ordoriferous blasts
The squalid squashbug comes—
Aha, the squeamish squashbug squats
Or squirms upon the squill,
Or squirts his squibs at squabbling squibs,
That think to use him ill!
And so the squashbug comes and goes,
While nature seems to hold her nose.

"ENOUGH! enough! Take him off, gentlemen, take him off!" yelled the bottom man in a fight before the second blow was delivered. "What made you give up so soon? You could have licked him easy by holding out a little," said one of the bystanders to the man as he stood with trembling knees after being released from his antagonist. "What made you holler 'enough' so quick?" "Do you think I'm a darned glutton, and don't know when I've got enough?" said the defeated party as he limped away, holding his sore jaw.—Breakfast Table.

Ornamental Trees.

Mr. Geo. Ellwanger, at the late meeting of the Western New York Horticultural Society, gave the following as a list of deciduous ornamental trees possessing real merit for planting. For a small place he advocated: Birch, cut-leaved; yellow wood; thorn, Paul's double scarlet; Judas tree; beech, River's smooth-leaved purple; alder, imperial cut-leaved; Koelreuteria paniculata; magnolia soulangean; mountain ash, oak-leaved; willow, Kilmarnock. For larger places to the above he would add: Elm, Camperdown weeping and Blanchford; linden, white-leaved; oak, scarlet; birch, Young's weeping; beech, weeping and cut-leaved; maple, Norway and Wier's cut-leaved; horse chestnut, double flowering.

AUSTRIANS smoke more and more. In 1870 the whole amount paid for tobacco was 40,000,000 florins, against 58,000,000 last year. Increased taxation has had no effect in diminishing the consumption.

A SILENT CITY.

How the Romans Lived Two Thousand Years Ago.

[Naples Cor. St. Louis Post.]

Naples is now crowded with visitors, who are enjoying the balmy breezes of the Mediterranean, and the season has been one round of gayety. All the tourists "do" Pompeii, as the saying is. This city has been rendered familiar to Americans by the late novelist, Lord Lytton, in that incomparable work, "The Last Days of Pompeii." Eighteen hundred years ago the city was full of life. Nearly 30,000 people promenaded its streets, and it was a scene of Roman luxury and voluptuousness. Its situation on the sea made it a most fashionable place of resort for the wealthy Romans, and the Emperor Claudius had his pleasure-house there, and the great orator, Cicero, a residence. It was likewise a commercial seaport, and a lively traffic was carried on by the merchants. But in August, A. D. 79, Vesuvius belched forth a mass of burning lava, ashes, cinders, hot water and mud, and the town was totally buried. Since that period other eruptions have heaped up more volcanic matter on the site of the city, and for nearly seventeen centuries Pompeii remained dead to the world. About 100 years ago the intombed city was discovered, and immediate action was taken to excavate as much of the ruins as possible.

The work has been steadily going on, but not more than one-half of the city has yet been exhumed. Still many acres have been dug over, and miles of street have been brought to the light of day. The buried portion is still covered with tons upon tons of stones, ashes, cinders, and hardened mud, to a depth of from ten to twenty feet above the tops of the houses. Over this are two feet of rich soil, which is exceedingly productive, and covered with trees. The exhumed portion of the city lies open to the bright sun, and is somewhat elevated above the level of the surrounding country. This city is now a perfect picture of a Roman city 2,000 years ago. The streets, pavements, temples, images, theaters, dwellings, columns, household gods, baths, arches, fountains, forums, shops of various trades, musical instruments, weapons of war, implements of labor, marble and bronze statues, mosaics, frescoes, and drawings, dining-rooms, bedrooms, and kitchens, with their appropriate furniture; food for the hungry and medicine for the sick; glassware, vases, and pottery; gems, medals, and coins, and fruits, flowers, and shrubs, are all seen as they were on the terrible night when the city was doomed to a sudden destruction.

The streets are narrow, some not being more than eight feet across; but they are straight and regular. The pavement is composed of large flat stones or blocks of lava, and the deep ruts cut in them by the Roman chariots are clearly perceptible. At the crossings are large stepping-stones for the use of pedestrians, so as to keep their feet from the mud. Everything in the street was silent and deathlike; there were no human beings in the houses, no promenaders in the streets; all were deserted. The dwelling-houses are generally small and one-storied; they are built of stone and brick, plastered on the outside with mortar. An open court is in the center, and the different rooms are arranged around in Oriental style. Most of the roofs are destroyed, having been crushed down by the weight of the ashes. In the dining-rooms the tables are of stone, and many are covered with petrified food. Beds and couches are in the sleeping rooms.

In one of the kitchens was found a fowl put in the skillet, and a stew-pan containing a small pig for roasting, all prepared 1,800 years ago. Many beautiful mosaics were found on the floors, and elegant frescoes on the walls, and they look as bright and fresh as if they had only been finished a few years. The frescoes, pictures, mosaics and sculptures, and even jewelry, discovered in some of the houses, show a terrible depravity in morals. Many are so indecent that the public are not allowed to look at them. In the "House of the Vestals," upon the door-sill, is the word "Salve" (Welcome). A mosaic with the representation of a fierce dog, with the inscription, "Cave Canem" (Beware of the dog), is near the threshold of the "House of the Tragic Poet."

In the streets are many shops which still have the signs over the doorways. In one there is some marble partly sculptured, with the artist's tools lying around; in another, medicines and surgical instruments; in a third, a marble counter with stone liquor jars behind it and the stains made by the wet glasses on the counter prove that this was a drinking-saloon. Then there is an eating-house. Meats and delicacies are on the counter; fire-places to keep the soups and messes warm are still in the room. The same building contains a grist-mill and a bakery. In the baker's shop a batch of loaves was found which had been in the oven since the 24th of August, A. D. 79. The mill was turned by horse-power.

The various temples that have been exhumed contain idols made of marble, silver, and gold. The Temple of Isis is eighty-four feet long and seventy-five feet broad. The ashes of victims were found on its altars. The skeleton of a priest, sitting at a table on which was spread a meal, is here, while near the door was another priest holding in his skeleton hand a hatchet, with which he had tried to cut his way out of the temple. Three hundred skeletons were discovered in the Temple of Juno, all crowded together and burned beneath the ashes. At the very hour of their destruction the priestess was offering sacrifice to the Queen of the Gods. The forum occupies the central portion of the city. On each side are rows of columns and long porticoes, which show the outline of this spot. Pedestals on which formerly stood famous statues are here and there. The public meetings were held in the forum, and a notice has been found of such a meeting called for the very night when the city was destroyed.

The amphitheater, which is about half a mile from the present excavations, is in a splendid state of preservation. It is built of stone, is in the form of the Colosseum at Rome, and was used for the gladiatorial shows. It is 430 feet long by 335 feet wide. The stone steps seat 15,000 spectators. Placards, with the announcement of theatrical performances, are still to be seen on the walls. The doors, seats, pillars, entrances, and caves for the wild animals are as perfect as they were 2,000 years ago.

The "Villa of Diomede"—so called because a tomb bearing that name was found near by, and for this reason it was supposed to have belonged to a Diomede—is the one that has been rendered famous by Bulwer's description of it. It stands just outside the "Herculaneum Gate;" and the supposed owner was discovered in his garden with a bunch of keys, and a purse well filled with gold and silver coin, in his hands. In the cellar of Diomede's house, huddled together in a corner, was found eighteen skeletons, mostly females, supposed to have been members of the family. All were incased in hardened mud and ashes. One was an infant, whose form still clung to the bony bosom of its mother. Some of the victims had rings and bracelets encircling their skeleton fingers and wrists, and gold ornaments on their necks. Over 300 human skeletons have already been exhumed, but, fortunately, most of the inhabitants managed to escape, having heeded the warning of the burning mountain. Only the bones remain of the victims, the flesh having mostly perished; but now and then a little tuft of moldy hair has been found clinging to the skull. The positions of the bones in every possible form of contortion all indicate a violent death—one of agony and suffering. A miser was found grasping a bag of gold in his bony hand.

In one room, a family-group embracing each other in death, in another, the bones of dancing-girls mingled with the broken instruments of music, can be seen; in another place, the skeleton of a cook at his place near the stove in the kitchen. One house contained bones scattered about bearing marks of being gnawed, while near by lay the skeleton of a dog, showing that the brute had survived and eaten his master. Here is a company of young and old fleeing to the sea; there the remains of a mother vainly trying to shelter her three little children from the fiery storm. Outside one of the gates in his sentry-box stands a Roman soldier, in complete armor, with the key of the city gate in his hand. After standing faithfully at his post for seventeen centuries, he was discovered, "clad in rusty armor, the helmet on his empty skull, and the spear in his bony fingers." In the city prison, not far distant, were found the prisoners, some with "their feet made fast in the stocks."

A Phenomenal Storm.

A correspondent, describing the effects of the late terrible cyclone that laid waste the town of Richmond, Ray county, Mo., killing eighteen people, says: The stories that are told of the force of the storm seem incredible. The trail of the cyclone was swept clean of trees and shrubs as well as buildings. Horses, cattle, and hogs were whirled away or left dead on the ground where the storm struck them. The streets of Richmond are still strewn with fragments of wagons, and the bodies of thirty horses have been hauled away from the town. In one instance a team of horses and a wagon were lifted from the ground and dropped into the branches of a large oak, which was not prostrated. Were it not so serious, there are features of the storm's fury which sound funny. Half a dozen country stores were destroyed and their contents scattered. Bolts of cloth, shoes, and such things have been found as far as fourteen miles northeast of Richmond. Trees were carried through the air. One of them struck a young medical student named Campbell, who had gone out of a building for safety, and killed him outright. Men were lifted up and carried through the air, and in one case a man was let down 100 feet from where he started. His shoes were torn from his feet, but he sustained no injury beyond a few bruises. The Baptist and Presbyterian churches were completely torn to pieces, and the large bell on the Presbyterian church, weighing 1,800 pounds, was carried across the street. An eye-witness of the formation and approach of the cyclone, who was just off the track of it, says that at a point seemingly about five miles southwest of the city he saw a little black spot about the size of a man's hand circling and waving furiously. It increased and took the shape of a large funnel, and seemed to rise from the earth until it had a circuit of about 150 yards. When it reached a point a mile from the town it stood on a hill, but continued to circle and roar furiously. At length it sped onward until it reached the southwest corner of the town. The havoc and desolation which then ensued are beyond description. Not a house is left to mark that once beautiful portion of the town. Houses were blown over houses. There is not a single foundation that was not swept away.

Millionaire Livingston in Florence.

Every afternoon there is a great tramping of hoofs heard on the pavements of the principal streets. Every one stops and turns to look. Then comes a great open wagon (a "break" is the proper name), drawn sometimes by twelve, sometimes by fourteen beautifully matched and superbly formed bright bay horses, tapering in size from the gigantic wheelers to the leaders, lithe and light as Arabians, glittering in gold-mounted harness, driven all in hand by one old, gray-haired, melancholy man, who sits alone on the lofty box and handles the great mass of reins with skill, although I observe he never drives faster that a walk, perhaps, because the streets are so narrow, winding and crowded. Two liveried servants sit behind and with folded arms, and jump down to hold the cavalcade whenever the driver stops to chastise unmercifully with a little riding-whip any unfortunate steed that does not go just to suit him. No companion ever drives out with him. He and his team are one of the institutions of Florence. He is an American, named Livingston, of New York; but he has lived in Florence nearly a score of years, and prefers to spend his money in this conspicuous manner.—Florence letter.

THERE died at Berlin last April a gentleman named Bersig, the greatest manufacturer of locomotives in Europe. His father began with a capital of $7,500, lent him by a Berlin tradesman, and the son left $15,000,000. Since 1837 the firm has turned out over 3,600 locomotives. They employ over 10,000 men.

DIFFICULT ADVERTISING.

How It Is Done in the London Times.

[London Cor. Chicago Tribune.]

I recently had occasion to insert an advertisement in the London Times, and I cannot say that the arrangements for accommodating the advertising public are based upon much regard for the advertiser. I was anxious to have my advertisement inserted in Friday's or Saturday's paper, so, about half-past 6 o'clock Thursday evening, I took a 'bus for Ludgate Circus, and walked thence to Printing-House Square. Here, to my astonishment, I found the office closed, and, after much trouble, I learned that no advertisements were taken after 6 o'clock in the evening. When I remembered that the Tribune will take "ads" up to midnight I could not feel in a good humor with a paper that closed its doors at the absurd hour of 6 o'clock; but there was nothing to be done but to go home and return next day. So, about 2 o'clock Friday afternoon, I again went to the Times office with my advertisement, and joined a throng of about thirty people in the handsome counting-room. There were just two clerks to attend to us, and so we waited our turns patiently. Now, if any one imagines that these two clerks attended the public with anything like the promptitude and rapidity shown in the Tribune's business office, he little knows the incapacity of the English clerk. If a reprint "ad" was handed in, the clerk would leisurely count the lines and then go through some abstruse mental calculation for about three minutes before announcing the amount to be paid. Then he would fill out a receipt, copy it upon the "stub" of the receipt book, and lazily make change for the advertiser. The charge per line was one shilling, and, to an ordinary observer, there would seem to be little difficulty in estimating the cost, when the reprint showed the number of lines; but, from the time taken, I felt convinced that the clerks had strict instructions to do all their multiplication by logarythms. But, when my manuscript copy was handed in, the clerk first glanced at me as if he thought I had intentionally given him a task beyond his powers; then he counted the words as if his existence depended upon the act; but, when he had gone over them twice, just as I was expecting him to tell me the number of lines and the price, he suddenly hurried off to one of the bookkeepers, or higher clerks, to get his opinion. And then the two of them wrestled with that advertisement as if it had been written in Sanscrit or Choctaw, until I began to think that perhaps the paper upon which it was written was not the right size or color, or that some other absurd rule of the office had not been observed in writing it. Finally he came back and said the price would be 13 shillings, and then he handed the paper back to me, as if he thought such a price would be too much for my finances.

"What am I to do with it?" I asked.

"Oh! take it to the Address and Inquiry Office, at the other side of the 'all, and get it registered."

So I crossed the hall and presented the advertisement to another clerk, and he made an entry in a book, wrote B 181 as the address to which answers were to be sent, gave me a ticket with that letter and number, and—charged me sixpence for each insertion of the advertisement. On returning to the first clerk I again had to wait my turn, and, when at last I succeeded in leaving the advertisement, paying the price asked and getting a receipt, I had spent just twenty-three minutes in the office, although my "ad" was written out when I arrived. The "Address and Inquiry Office" is simply a device to extort additional sixpences, and it is double-barreled in its method. In the first place, if you want letters to be sent to the Times office, you must pay sixpence for that privilege for each insertion of the "ad." Then, instead of being allowed to put simply the words, "Address B 181, Times Office," you must write out a formula like this, "Address B 181, Address and Inquiry Office, the Times Office, E. C., London." This long address makes just about a full line, and it is, therefore, nearly twice as long as necessary. Of course, it frequently makes an advertisement a line longer than it would be if a shorter address were used, and it, therefore, adds that much to the tax on advertisers.

Well, perhaps it may be imagined that my tribulations with regard to that advertisement were over; I confess that I thought so, and, although I had a strong suspicion that I had been overcharged, I knew I could get that rectified after it was published; but I little knew what manner of men I had to deal with. Saturday noon I searched the Times for my advertisement, but I found it not. When finally satisfied that it was not in the paper, I started off to the office in righteous indignation, and began to show my wrath to the clerk at once.

"I left an advertisement yesterday for to-day's Times," I remarked, "and it was not inserted—"

"Further desk on the left," was the reply, before I had stated my whole grievance.

To the further desk on the left I went, and presented my case to a very feeble-minded youth. He examined the number of my receipt, overhauled two books on a distant desk, and finally came back to me in triumph.

"Why, you didn't 'and your advertisement in until yesterday afternoon."

"Certainly not," I replied, "but I expected it to be printed in this morning's paper."

"Hoh! now, you can't get an advertisement in the next day, you know, unless it is left here before noon—and not always then."

Of course expostulation was useless, and I retired, convinced that the privilege of advertising in the London Times was evidently so highly regarded by the British public that they would submit to any kind of nonsensical regulations and inconvenience in return for the gracious concession on the part of the publishers that their advertisements be printed.

When my advertisement was taken I had a strong suspicion that it would not make more than twelve lines at the outside, and, when I found that it made only eleven—two less than the clerk's estimate—I felt naturally vexed at the necessity of going back to demand the two shillings which I had overpaid; but I soon found that this was another custom of the office—namely, to overestimate the length of all advertisements, in order to make certain that it shall not be underestimated; then, if the advertiser does not find it convenient to reclaim the one or two shillings overcharge, the office is the gainer to that amount. I say that it is a custom of the office, for I saw at least a dozen persons at the desk on the same errand as myself, and there was one clerk constantly busy in looking up these mistakes and refunding the small amounts overpaid. One man brought receipts for more than a dozen advertisements, on every one of which there had been an over-payment, and, simply laying down his receipts, he remarked, "Refund," in a matter-of-course way, which showed it to be a usual thing. Just imagine the "blessing" the Tribune counting-room clerks would receive if they habitually made overestimates in the length of advertisements!

GIANTS.

Pliny relates that in the time of Claudius Cæsar there was a man named Gobburna, brought by the Emperor from Arabia to Rome, who was nine feet four inches high, "the tallest man that has been seen in our times."

In the reign of Augustus Cæsar the tall forms of Basis and Secundilla might have been seen, whose bodies were preserved in a museum in the Sallustian Gardens, and each of whom measured ten feet three inches in height.

The Emperor Maximus was nine feet high, and was in the habit of using his wife's bracelet as a thumb-ring. His shoe was a foot longer than that of any other man, and he could draw a carriage which two oxen could not move. He ate usually forty pounds' weight of flesh and drank six gallons of wine daily.

Josephus tells of Elezer, a Jew, a giant over ten feet high, who was one of the hostages whom the King of Persia sent to Rome after peace.

Plot, in his "Oxfordshire," 1676, says that a skeleton seventeen feet high was then to be seen in the Town Hall in Lucerne. It had been found under an oak in Willison, near the village of Reyden.

THE Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company are organizing 140 policemen to guard the track. They are all to be armed, and will each have one mile of track under their supervision.

Dooley's Yeast Powder.

There is, probably, no other baking powder manufactured that has become so much of a household word as DOOLEY'S YEAST POWDER. For twenty years it has stood before the public, and the innumerable testimonials that have been called forth voluntarily testify fully to its merits.

WE still assert that Heart Disease can be cured, and ask you to read this:

I was afflicted for several years with Palpitation of the Heart, attended with dizziness and gradually increasing debility. For more than two years I was subject to severe darting pains through the heart, followed by a sense of suffocation and difficulty of breathing, threatening instant death. For eight months I was unable to lie down, but was obliged to sit bolstered up in bed, or in my chair, through the night. When asleep the motion of the heart would often stop, causing me to wake suddenly in great distress, and preventing me from getting necessary rest. I was very much reduced in flesh and strength, and had given up all hope of permanent relief, when I was induced by a friend to try the efficacy of the HEART REGULATOR. By the use of a few bottles I was restored to my usual health, and, for the last ten years, I have suffered no severe attacks. I cheerfully and gratefully recommend its use to all persons afflicted with Disease of the Heart.

AFTER you have read all of the important news in this paper read the advertisements, and the "DON'T FORGET IT" advertisement in particular.

MOTHERS! Mothers!! Mothers!!! Don't fail to procure Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for all diseases incident to the period of teething in children. It relieves the child from pain, cures wind colic, regulates the bowels, and, by giving relief and health to the child, gives rest to the mother. It is an old and well-tried remedy.

GREAT age carries with it a certain respectability whether it attaches to a person or thing. This is seen particularly in the case of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, which is the most marvelous internal and external remedy ever discovered. It ought to be kept in every house.

DON'T FORGET that the country is full of tramps and thieves, and that you ought to by provided with a weapon of defense. See advertisement in another column headed "DON'T FORGET IT."

IF farmers and others continue to buy dust and ashes put up in big packs and sold for condition powders it won't be our fault. We have exposed the swindle time and again. Sheridan's Powders are the only kind we know of worth carrying home.

FELLOWS'
Compound Syrup
is composed of Ingredients identical with those which constitute Healthy Blood, Muscle, Nerve and Brain Substance, whilst Life itself is directly dependent upon some of them.

Dr. Howe's Testimony.

During the past two years I have given Fellows' Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites a fair though somewhat severe trial in my practice. In restoring persons suffering from emaciation and the debility following diphtheria, it has done wonders. I confidently recommend its use in all affections of the throat and lungs. In several cases considered hopeless it has given relief, and the patients are fast recovering. Among these are consumptive and old bronchial subjects, whose diseases have resisted other modes of treatment. For impaired digestion, and in fact for debility from any cause, I know of nothing equal to it.

Democratic County Convention

TO BE HELD

SATURDAY, JUNE 22nd, 1878.

The Democrats of DeKalb county are requested to meet in convention at Auburn, on Saturday, June 22, 1878, for the purpose of nominating candidates for the several offices to be voted for the coming fall election, and for the transaction of other business before the convention.

By direction of the Democratic County Central Committee the Democrats of the several townships are requested to select, on June 15, 1878, their proportion of delegates to meet at Auburn on said 22nd day of June, 1878, as at a delegate convention. Each township is entitled to the following number of delegates, to-wit:

J. R. LANNING, CHAIRMAN
DeKalb Co. Dem. Cen. Com.

—The ticket nominated by the republicans of this State, last week, is composed of the following gentlemen: For Secretary of the State, Judge Isaac S. Moore, of Warric county; for Treasurer, Major George F. Harriott, of Johnson county; for Attorney-General, Lyman Walter, of Miami county; for Superintendent of Public Instruction, James T. Merril, of Tippecanoe county.

—It is significant that when Anderson was lying for the republicans he had no corroborating documents or witnesses to support his testimony, but now that he is telling the truth for the democrats there is ample confirmation, written and oral, to sustain his veracity. Of course he is not a man to be believed without corroboration, and it is high time the republicans explained why they permitted the vote of Louisiana to hinge upon his unsupported oath.

—We suppose it will be considered entirely impertinent to inform the democracy that their leading candidate on their state ticket, Gen. Manson, the candidate for Secretary of State, and Dan Voorhees, the man whom they will re-elect United States Senator, should they carry the Legislature, are both Congressional salary-grabbers—Lagrange Standard.

Oh, no, we nave not the least objection to our Republican neighbor stating the truth, but let it be the whole truth. Credit Mobilier Garfield, the shining light of the Republican party, done the same thing, and yet he has been returned to Congress ever since. Why should State lines screen a Radical brother?

—Since the exposure of the rascalities of Boss Tweed and his associates there has not been so stupendous an exhibition of fraud and corruption as that which has been given by the report of the Congressional investigation into the management of the Naval Department while it was under the control of Secretary Robeson. The mind is fairly bewildered at the extent and diversity to which dishonest practices have been carried, and one is almost tempted to wonder why it is that the Government vessels now in and out of commission were not also sold for the personal profit of these sinful manipulators.

—We denounce the action of the Democratic House of Representatives in demanding payment of over two hundred millions of dollars of rebel claims as a conspiracy against the government, less open but not less dangerous than armed rebellion.—Republican Platform.

About the only "rebel claim" that has been allowed by the present Democratic House" was one championed by Keifer, a Republican, and as it received almost a solid Republican vote its passage was made easy. Such rodomontade as the above comes in poor grace from the party that has squandered $100,000,000 of the people's money, in the payment of these claims, according to the statement of Secretary Sherman. We are glad this "rebel claim" issue has been made. It will afford us much pleasure to show up the record of the Radical party on the subject.—Wabash Courier.

Ben. Harrison's Idiots.

[Richmond Free Press.]

The republican newspapers are exceedingly free in the use of the word "idiot"—applying it to the nationals or greenback men. General Benjamin Harrison, who is regarded as a model gentleman in republican circles, denominated them "idiots" in his speech at Indianapolis, when acting as president of of the republican state convention. Such language does not indicate the gentleman in the person who indulges in it. There is no argument in such language. And, as we understand their principles, the greenbackers are far in advance of republicanism in both common sense and common honesty; and therefore more worthy the confidence and respect of the public. And it is undignified and unmanly to call them "idiots."

Rummel of the county asylum made quarterly report of that institution. Viewers report in favor of a ditch in Union, on petition of Owen Hensinger et al. Motion by Eel River R. R. to set aside and have a review sustained. O. C. Clark reported dangerous condition of bridge west of Auburn Junction. Com. Goetschius to attend to the matter. Viewers report in favor of drain in Jackson, on petition of Wm. McClellan. Report set aside and a review made. Viewers report favorably for a public highway in Union, petitionfor by J. Girardot et al. Remonstrance filed. Reviewers appointed, Cyrus Bowman, J. D. Kelly and J. R. Walker. The case of a petition for a public ditch in Fairfield by Abraham Boyer was continued. Viewers report in the case of petition for public ditch in Union, ordered that said ditch be established, asked for in the petition of J W. Jeffords et al. J. S. Boots, J. W. Dills and J. A. Provines, viewers, reported damages of Lewis Cole at $25, and the DeLong estate at $50, on account of the opening of a new highway in Newville township. On motion of Cole and DeLong, the finding was set aside and J. M Goetschius, Washington Teeters and E. S. McDowell were appointed reviewers to assess the same, meeting August 1, 1878. A. S. Leas, J. D. Kelley and Cyrus Bowman reported in favor of changing road in Wilmington, petitioned for by George VanHorn et al., change ordered. Wm Lessig, Uriah Thomas and Wm. Sherwood, viewers, reporte favorably upon road petitioned for by P. J. Lockwood et al., in Wilmington and the road was located. The county surveyor made report of the survey of the Fort Wayne road, between Auburn and the B. & O. R. R. Com. Duncan was directed to build bridge in north part of Franklin. On petition of Wm. Henderson, trustee, a bridge was ordered built in Concord township. On petition of J. C. Brand, a bridge was ordered built on township line between Union and Smithfield townships. It was ordered that a bridge be made over the Sponhouer drain in Jackson, and an embankment across Cedar Creek in Richland.

Taxes to the amount of $4.28 were abated to Adolph May. B. F. Sprenkle, James Barnett and Amos Swigart were exempted from the payment of poll tax. Licenses to retail liquors were granted to N. F. Gengnagle, Isaac Hirschler, Butler; Thomas Somers, S. J Locke, Auburn; J. H. Clifford, S. J. Locke, Waterloo. Taxes to the amount of $5.56 were rebated to Alzina Glazier, of Butler township.

The auditor reported amount of school funds held by him as follows: Congressional school fund, $17,684.00, which some has not been increased during the year. The common school fund was reported at $26,002.85, an increase of $255.23 during the year.

J. Rummel, superintendent of poor farm, made his quarterly report, which was filed in the auditors office.

Edward Metcalf was appointed constable to fill vacancy in Jackson township.

Coroner Latson made report of the Houlton inquest in Franklin township.

The board of equalization, comprising the commissioners and township assessors, assembled on the 4th. The action of the assessor of Wilmington township was approved, in listing a threshing machine against Jesse Lower, and the assessor of Union was directed to furnish the auditor a list of personal property owned by Jas. Draggoo, whereupon the board adjourned.

The board placed the tax levy for 1878 at 28 cents on each $100 valuation for county purposes, and 8 cents additional to meet the interest on the jail bonds.

St. Joe Items.

The game of base ball between the Clod Hoppers and Modocks Wednesday resulted in favor of the Modock by one score.

—The Spencerville band visited our village one night last week and entertained us with some fine music.

—Several car loads of oak heading have been shipped from this place to Auburn Junction in the last few days.

—Mr. Henderson, the trustee of Concord-tp., has let the contract for the fencing of all the school houses in the township—something that has long been needed.

—We hear the name of J. W. Dills mentioned quite frequently of late for the office of County Commissioner. Nothing would suit better, if Jack will concent.

—Barney & Sons, of Spencerville, still throw out the goods as fast as usual. Three and four clerks are kept busy all the time and those who trade with them are sure to go back.

—Stephen Baker says the reason the grangers could not prosper in Concord township was, they all could see a chance to make money in selling plow shears and every granger wanted to sell them.

—The grain buyers at this place are quite gloomy over the fall in prices and have cut them down to hard pan. Saturday's prices for wheat 85 to 90c.; corn, 29c, shelled, 33c. white oats, 22c. butter, 6c.; eggs, 6c.

—The Democracy of Concord-tp. met in caucus at Spencerville, June 15th, for the purpose of selecting delegates to the county convention. On motion of E. J. Boyle, Rev. E. W. Erick was called to the chair, and G. W. Woodcox on motion of J. W. Dills, was elected Secretary. On motion of J. R. Nichols, a committee of three was appointed by the chair to select the delegates. See list elsewhere.

—William Cullen Bryant, the poet and journalist, of New York, died last Wednesday morning at the advanced age of 83. The beautiful poem "The Death of the Flowers," and many others are from his gifted pen. He wrote Thanatopsis when about 21, perhaps his master effort, and he seemed to reflect at the time the course of his life, in the closing part as follows:

> "So live, that when the summons come to join,
> The innumerable carravan that moved,
> To the pale realms of shade, where each shall take
> His chamber in the silent halls of death,
> Thou go not, like the quary slave at night,
> Scourged to his dungeon, but sustained and soothed
> By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave
> Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
> About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams."

—Baby shows are the fashion now, but as long as mothers continue to nurse their little one with Laudanum or other opiates, they cannot expect their babies to look bright. If your baby needs medicine get a good and harmless one such as Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup 25 cents a bottle. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

—Capt. Hiram Iddings met with a sever loss week before last in the destruction of his fine dwelling by fire on his farm south of Kendallville, while he was away from home attending the Republican convention. Most of the contents, with valuable papers, were consumed. It occurred about 1 o'clock at night and the loss is estimated at $3000—about half insured.

—Our thanks are due the Hoosier Charivari and Serenading Party, of Waterloo, for a delightful serenade last Wednesday evening. At midnight a concordance of sweet sounds came floating in upon our slumber, and being aroused we listened to several pieces admirably rendered by this fine band. Come again, boys, a little earlier next time and we'll have a jubilee.

Democratic Convention.

Next Saturday is the time appointed to hold our Democratic convention and all who can possibly attend should do so. We would like to see a large crowd and a good time which we no doubt will have. The Corunna brass band will be in attendance and those who wish to hear one of the best bands in the state should certainly be on hand.

—Grosh & Ober, of the Auburn Mills, south of town, are turning out a quality of flour far superior to any made for years and our people are gratified to know that they can rely on good bread whenever they use this flour. They also keep a good supply of Meal and Feed, and deliver to any part of the city free of charge. Patronize these gentlemen and at the same time encourage home trade.

LaOtto Items.

On motion it was agreed that an additional number of Constitutions and By-Laws be published for the use of the Vice Presidents and others.

Mr. R. B. Graham, of the Baldwin Place Home for Little Wanderers, Boston, Mass., addressed the convention for a short time.

Mrs. E. D. Hartman of Auburn, delivered an address upon the subject entitled Christian Love and Sympathy.

On motion the general discussion was dispensed with and miscellaneous business was taken up.

Reports of committees was the next business in order. The first presented was the resolutions, as follows:

RESOLVED,—That we return thanks to the citizens of Garrett for the warm welcome given to this convention, for the generous hospitality in entertaining its members.

RESOLVED,—That we return thanks to the officers of the standing committees of the Union for the able manner in which they have performed the duties assigned them.

RESOLVED,—That we recommend the use of the uniform lessons in the schools of the country.

RESOLVED,—That the Sabbath School is an institution, and as such claims our best thought, earnest labor, and hearty co-operation.

RESOLVED,—That the thanks of this Convention be offered to the B. & O. Railroad Co. for their generous accommodations in arranging for the transfer of delegates.

RESOLVED,—That parents and teachers will do well to continue to teach the children to be good remembering the word says: "Be ye perfect," etc.

RESOLVED,—That in view of the state of the treasury, there being more money than is needed for the expenses of this convention, the Sabbath Schools of the county be not requested to take a collection for the Union the coming year.

RESOLVED,—That we have great reasons to render thanks to God for the success which has attended our labor the past year, and that with this encouragement we will, with more zeal, persevere in the work the coming year.

RESOLVED,—That in view of the fact that intemperance exists on a large scale in our land, and that the youth of the S. S. are in continual danger of being led astray and ruined, soul and body, for time and eternity, by this destroyer, therefore, be it declared by this convention assembled, that it is the duty of every Superintendant and every teacher of the S. S. to teach total abstinance, and press home the lesson with zeal and prayer.

Motion to reconsider the resolution refering to intemperance, which was carried. Speeches by Shepherd, Hosier Griswold, Johnson and Sanders.

On motion of Rev. Sanders, a vote of thanks was tendered to the citizens of Garrett, by a rising vote, for their hospitality.

The report on obituaries was submitted and adopted.

Z. W. SHEPHERD,
A. W. BURNS,
GEO. BARNEY. } Committe.

On motion of Rev. Sanders, a prayer was offered for the bereaved family of C. W. Wing, deceased, of Garrett, who was accidentally killed on Sabbath last on the B. & O. Railroad, near Attica station, Ohio.

The Secretary's report was next presented and adopted, as follows:

There are 28 schools open 12 months in the year—25 last year.

Whole number of officers and teachers in the county, 666—643 last year.

Scholars enrolled—three schools not given—4,098—3,598 last year.

Average attendance—two schools not reported—2,924—2,810 last year.

Scholars and teachers received into church, 148—last year 191.

Two schools hold teachers' meetings, Big Run and Corunna.

Thirty-five schools use lesson leaves—last year 33.

Amount of collections for benevolent objects $474 58.

Amount collected for expense of the convention—$15 96—last year 26 85.

The treasurer reported as follows, and report was adopted:

Amount received from former treasurer,	$54 61
Interest on above to date,	5 48
Total amt recevied from schools,	$60 39
For the year ending June 12th, 1879,	$5 96
Total amount	$76 25

There was considerable discussion as to what dispositon should be made of the above funds, and finally a committee was appointed to loan out the money to some responsible party.

On motion the convention addjourned to meet in Butler the second Tuesday in June, 1878.

Junction Items.

—Mr. Benner has his residence almost finished, and it looks well.

—The B. & O. are selling trip tickets very cheap from this point to Topeka.

—Miss Bowler, of Jackson, Mich., is visiting her sister, Mrs. Fenrich of this place.

—Since we have got our taxes worked out, we are not afraid of the road Supervisor.

—Miss Burniston and Nettie Baker, visited Rome City on Sunday. They report having a good time.

—The Baker House, with the addition of the new coat of paint it received on last week, presents a fine appearance.

—W. A. Plumstead spent Saturday and Sunday with his friend Mr. Frank Horten, at Bremen, Ind. He also got badly left.

—The B. & O. will sell round trip tickets July 3d and 4th, good to return on the 5th, to all Stations on the Ohio and Chicago divisions at four cents per mile one way.

—Commencing June 25th, Refrigerator cars will pass through this Station on the B. & O. every Tuesday and Friday at 7:10 p. m., arriving at Baltimore on the third day after shipment.

—Mr. Geo Ellis took advantage of a few spare moments on Saturday evening and concluded to investigate and see what kind of lumber was in the depot floor. With perseverence and considerable water and soap, he found it to be pine. It is a decided improvement Geo.

—On last Saturday evening, a Mr. Emanuel came up to us at Auburn Junction, almost exhausted, and said he was going to enter suit against Ft. W., J. & S. R'y. for advertising their trains wrong, adding: "If I had not almost run myself to death I would have been left." He also said some very important business called him to Antwerp and must be there Saturday night. We have understood since that on his arrival at St. John he stopped off to entertain one of her fair daughters. Mr. E. hereafter let your business be known, and undoubtedly they will hold their train rather than have you and the lady disappointed.

PERKINS.

Sudden Death.

Rowland Foltz, son of Mr. and Mrs. A.P Foltz, died very suddenly Monday morning last The child was about four years old and was apparently well when its mother put it into bed to sleep After the time of his usual nap had expired the mother's attention was drawn and on looking after her child she found it dead. The little one either smothered to death or died from an attack of appoplexy. The real cause of its death is not known.

—Chas. Fox was killed by the cars at Pleasant Lake yesterday afternoon, having his head severed from his body. Mr. Fox was one of our old and enterprising citizens and the community was shocked upon hearing of his misfortune. He leaves a wife and several children, but we are glad to state that they are in very comfortable circumstances.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

THE finding of the dead bodies of three members of the Geistlich family, the mother and two children, in a Philadelphia tenement, under circumstances which show that the mother killed the children and then herself, in dread of death by starvation, has created a profound sensation in that city.

THE Stewart Women's Hotel, in New York, has been thrown open to the public under the name of the Park Hotel.

DENNIS DONNELLY, another of the convicted Molly Maguires, was hanged at Pottsville, Pa., on the 11th inst., for the murder of Thomas Sanger, a mine boss, in 1875. ....Joseph Foulkes' Sons, shipping and commission merchants, on Beaver street, New York, have failed. Liabilities, $470,000; assets, $184,000. The firm has been in existence eighty years.

WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT, the venerable editor of the New York Evening Post, died in that city on the 12th inst., aged 84 years. Mr. Bryant's illness dated from the 29th of May. On that day he delivered an address at the unveiling of a statue of Mazzini, the Italian patriot, in Central Park. Shortly after delivering the speech, while ascending the steps of a friend's house, he was seized with an attack of vertigo, and in falling struck his head heavily against one of the stone steps. From the injuries then received he never recovered, but continued to gradually grow weaker until death relieved him of his sufferings.

MAX STRAKOSCH, the well-known operatic manager, has been arrested in New York, in a suit brought against him by a Miss Smedley, of Chicago, who claims $10,000 damages for breach of marriage contract....Alden B. Stockwell, ex-President of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and once a leading capitalist of New York, has failed for $1,250,000.

THE WEST.

THE people of Chicago are agitating the question of an international exhibition at some time in the near future.

A CANADIAN missionary priest figures up a confederacy of some 26,000 warriors—Canadian Indians—whom he thinks Sitting Bull can control for a raid over the border into United States Territory, ostensibly for foraging purposes. The Indians will demand provisions of the Canadian Government, and, if denied, will leave the Dominion when the choke-cherries along their route will be ripe enough to eat—say from June 20 to July 15....The widow of the late Gov. Tom Corwin, of Ohio, died at Lebanon the other day, in her 83d year.

THE SOUTH.

As Dr. William B. Archer, of Point Coupee parish, La., was riding on horseback a few nights ago, he was fired upon and wounded by five negro men, who were concealed in a clump of trees. The would-be assassins were arrested, and an examination showed that they had formed a conspiracy against the lives of Dr. Archer and three other citizens. The examination was conducted by a jury of twelve citizens, and it was decided to turn the prisoners over to the law. Accordingly a party marched off with them in the direction of the court-house, but before they had proceeded far they were intercepted by a mob and all five of the prisoners hung to the limb of a tree.

ONE-HALF of the town of Searcy, White county, Ark., has been destroyed by fire. Loss, $60,000. Mrs. Mylender, her little daughter and a neighbor's child were horribly burned—the little girl fatally. The others may recover. Coal oil.

A DISPATCH from San Antonio, Tex., says that Gen. Mackenzie, at the head of 500 United States cavalry and a battery of artillery, had crossed the Rio Grande into Mexico in pursuit of raiders who had been stealing stock from ranches on the American side. The troops had fifteen days' rations, and exciting times were expected.

WASHINGTON.

SUBSCRIPTIONS to the 4-per-cent. Government loan are coming in very rapidly.

THE President has appointed Gen. John C. Fremont Governor of Arizona Territory....Notification has been received by Secretary Evarts of the acceptance by France and Italy of the invitation to take part in the International Monetary Conference proposed by the United States.

THE Presidential Investigating Committee having asked Senator Stanley Matthews to appear before it and explain his correspondence with the witness Anderson, Mr. Matthews has addressed a letter to the committee declining to accept the invitation. He says: "I have just submitted the whole matter to the Senate, which, by the adoption of this resolution, has taken jurisdiction and entered upon the investigation requested. That body alone, so far as my conduct is concerned, is competent to render an effective judgment upon the question. So far, therefore, as your resolution invites me to submit to your committee explanations of my correspondence with Anderson, in evidence before it, I consider that it would be improper for me, under the circumstances, to comply with it."

COL. DON MANUEL FREYRE, the Peruvian Minister to the United States, died last week, aged 60 years.

THE President has appointed Ernst Dichman, of Wisconsin, Minister to the United States of Colombia. Benj. F. Potts has been reappointed Governor of Montana....Before adjourning for the summer, the Court of Claims pronounced a decision upon questions in dispute between the Government and the Union Pacific railroad. The court ascertained that the corporation owes the Government $1,367,716.73, being 5 per cent. of its net earnings prior to Nov. 6, 1874.

IT has just been discovered at the State Department that the Diplomatic and Consular Appropriation bill, approved June 4, abolishes the mission to Greece, now filled by Gen. Meredith Read, and all of the Second Secretaries of Legation. This includes England, France, Germany, and all first-class missions. Several gentlemen have just been appointed to these places.

POLITICAL.

GOV. HENDRICKS has been interviewed. He would have the investigation go on, but without disturbing President Hayes' title.

RETURNS of the recent election in Oregon show that the Republicans have elected the Governor, while the Democrats secure the member of Congress and a majority of the Legislature, which elects a United States Senator to succeed Mr. Mitchell.

THE Ohio Republican Convention was held at Cincinnati on the 12th inst. Milton Barnes, for Secretary of State, and Judge White, for the Supreme bench, were nominated by acclamation, without a dissenting voice. For the Board of Public Works two ballots were taken, the choice falling upon George Paul, of Akron. A resolution was reported by the Committee on Resolutions indorsing the policy of President Hayes. Gen. Beatty, the leader of the anti-Hayes element in Ohio, offered a substitute condemnatory of the Hayes policy, and followed it with a speech bitterly denouncing the administration's Southern, civil service and financial policy. The substitute was rejected by a large majority, and the platform as a whole adopted.

THE Republicans of Michigan held their State Convention at Detroit on the 13th of June. There were 642 delegates present, representing every county in the State. Ex-Senator Zachariah Chandler presided. The platform denounces Communism and deprecates the reopening of the Presidential dispute as fraught with danger to the country. It makes no allusion whatever to the administration or its policy. Gov. Croswell and Lieut. Gov. Sessions were nominated for re-election by acclamation; William Jenny was nominated for Secretary of State, Gen. B. D. Pritchard for Treasurer, W. I. Latimer for Auditor General, James W. Neasmith for Commissioner of the State Land Office, Otto Kirchner for Attorney General, H. S. Tarbell for Superintendent of Public Instruction, and George F. Edwards for member of the State Board of Education. Ex-Senator Chandler was made Chairman of the State Central Committee by acclamation.

GENERAL.

A HORRIBLE story of suffering and death at sea is telegraphed from San Francisco. The British bark Athelstane, which lately arrived at that port from New Castle, boarded a Japanese junk found drifting in 40 north, 144 west. Those living were three sailors, and one passenger found alive but helpless. All the others, eighteen in number, died of scurvy, exposure and starvation. The junk left the island of Jesso on a coasting voyage Oct. 25, was blown seaward by a gale Nov. 17, and was dismasted, since which she had been drifting about the ocean.

A SERIOUS labor strike was inaugurated in Quebec, Canada, last week, and nearly all the factories and work-shops in the city were closed in consequence.

THE labor strike at Quebec, Canada, culminated last week in serious disorders, necessitating the calling out of the military. The mob was fired upon, and one man killed and a number seriously wounded. The affair created the wildest excitement and alarm in the city.

FOREIGN.

GERMANY is in a ferment of excitement over the Socialistic conspiracy, and the most stringent measures are being adopted by the imperial authorities to meet the grave crisis. Arrests continue in every part of the empire. Nobling, the assassin, made a second attempt at suicide the other day. His younger brother, an officer in the army, has been arrested as an accomplice.

A SPECIAL telegram from London to the New York Herald says: "Private letters received from Berlin speak of the public feeling in Germany as being profoundly disturbed. No one ventures to speak openly in extenuation of Nobiling's crime, but, in private, men say the country is ripe for a Republic."....A Havana letter says: "The latest reports from the eastern department show a further surrender of ten chiefs, twenty-four officers and 100 men at San Luis, and the complete dissolution of the so-called new Government instituted by Maceo in that department. The war in the island of Cuba is over, and the people are preparing to celebrate the event with great festivities."

ANOTHER coal-mine horror is reported from England. By an explosion in a colliery at Haydock 250 miners perished, the bodies of many of them being fearfully burned and mutilated....Advices from Constantinople represent Bulgarians throughout Roumelia as perpetrating horrible atrocities on Mussulmans. Gen. Todleben has ordered vigorous measures of repression against the outlaws. Three Bulgarians taken red-handed were summarily executed at Dedeagatch. All traveling in Bosnia is stopped. Highways are infested with robbers, principally Turkish deserters.

SIX divisions of the Austrian army are to be immediately placed on a war footing. It is explained in Vienna dispatches that this corps is merely intended to be held in readiness to execute any decisions of the congress that may affect Austria, but the probability seems quite as strong that the preparation is intended as a warning to the congress that Austria will be ready to fight for her interests, if they are compromised in the new treaty....The Shah of Persia has arrived in Paris.

THE Emperor of Germany is rapidly recovering. The assassin, Dr. Nobeling, is also out of danger....The dissolution of the German Parliament has been decreed by the Federal Council, and, in the elections to be held, the Government expects to secure a majority in support of the vigorous measures resolved upon for the suppression of Socialism throughout the empire....Mr. MacGahan, the well-known correspondent of the London Daily News, died recently in Constantinople of spotted fever. He was a native of St. Louis, Mo.

THERE was a heavy fall of snow in Scotland on the 11th of June....A Constantinople dispatch says: "There are 25,000 Russian troops sick with typhoid fever and a similar disease in this neighborhood."

A BERLIN dispatch of the 13th inst. says: "The first sitting of the European congress was held this afternoon in the Radziwill Palace. The streets leading to the palace were crowded with spectators anxious to see the diplomatists as they arrived. Four mounted police agents kept the approaches to the great building clear. Bismarck, who was chosen President, expresses his belief in the success of the congress, and a particular desire to see harmony established. The Austrian Ministers also anticipate an early solution of the questions at issue. It seems probable that an attempt will be made to improve upon the declaration of Paris with regard to the seizure of private property afloat.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

FRIDAY, June 7.—SENATE.—The Senate was engaged nearly all day on the Army Appropriation bill, the subject of the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department being the bone of contention. It finally referred the matter to a commission of three Senators and four Representatives, to sit during the recess and report in January next.

HOUSE.—The Committee on Appropriations reported the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill to the House, and the entire day was devoted to its consideration.

SATURDAY, June 8.—SENATE.—The Committee on Pensions made a report in favor of increasing the allowance of Gen. Shields to $100 a month. ....The Texas Pacific Railroad bill was postponed till the first Wednesday of the next session....The bill appropriating $5,500,000 for the payment of the fisheries award was passed. ....Mr. Spencer introduced a resolution providing for the appointment of a committee to investigate the charges of fraud, intimidation, etc., in connection with the last Presidential election in the States of Louisiana, Florida, South Carolina, Alabama and Mississippi. Mr. Bayard objecting to its consideration, Mr. Spencer gave notice that he would call the resolution up every day until a vote upon it should be reached.... By a vote of yeas 33, nays 2, the bill was passed modifying the contract with James B. Eads for the construction of the jetties at the South pass of the Mississippi river. The bill provides that the payments to Eads shall be advanced upon certain conditions, in monthly installments, not exceeding in the aggregate $500,000, and also provides for a commission of five army engineers to examine the work.

HOUSE.—Mr. Cobb, from the Committee on Elections, reported a resolution in the contested-election case of Tillman vs. Smalls, from the Fifth Congressional District of South Carolina, setting forth that there was not a fair, free and peaceful election in the district, and declaring the seat vacant. Mr. Wait submitted a minority resolution declaring Smalls, the sitting member, entitled to the seat. The reports were ordered printed....The Deficiency appropriation bill was passed.

MONDAY, June 10.—SENATE.—Mr. Spencer tried to call up his investigation resolution, but it was decided to refer it to the Committee on Privileges and Elections....The bills to strengthen the foundation of the Washington monument, and designating the time for holding elections for Congressmen in West Virginia and Colorado were passed....The River and Harbor Appropriation bill was discussed.

HOUSE.—The bill to enforce, under penalty of fine and imprisonment, Sec. 1,754, Revised Statutes, which provides that soldiers and sailors honorably discharged by reason of disability resulting from wounds or sickness received in the line of duty shall be preferred for appointments to civil offices, provided they possess the necessary capacity, was passed....The following bills were introduced: By Mr. Butler, for the relief of the industrial classes, for the prompt settlement of public lands, and for the better protection of the frontier from Indian depredations; by Mr. Morse, authorizing the appointment by the President of three Commissioners to confer with Commissioners on the part of Great Britain, and to ascertain on what basis a treaty of reciprocity can be negotiated with the British provinces in America; by Mr. Cox, of New York, to reduce the duties on imports 10 per cent....The Sundry Civil Appropriation bill occupied the attention of the House nearly the entire day.

TUESDAY, June 11.—SENATE.—A number of bills were passed, among them the River and Harbor Appropriation bill; the Senate bill to reimburse Kansas for expenses incurred in repelling invasions and suppressing Indian hostilities; the Senate bill to provide for the sale of a portion of Fort Leavenworth military reservation in Kansas; the Senate bill to provide additional regulation for homestead and pre-emption entries on public lands—it provides for the publication of notices of intention to enter agricultural lands under the law named.

HOUSE.—The House devoted nearly the entire day, in committee of the whole, to the consideration of the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill.

WEDNESDAY, June 12.—SENATE.—Mr. Saunders introduced a bill proposing to grant the right of way and forty sections of land per mile to aid the construction of a railway and telegraph line from Omaha, through Dakota and Wyoming, to the National Yellowstone parks, to connect with the Northern Pacific railroad in Montana, east of the 113th meridian....The select committee to inquire into the alleged frauds in Louisiana, under the resolution of Mr. Matthews, was authorized to sit during the session of the Senate....The Senate bill authorizing Ohio, Indiana and Illinois to prosecute suits against the United States, in the Supreme Court of the United States, on account of sales of public lands in each State; the Senate bill in relation to the Venezuela Mixed Commission, and the Deficiency Appropriation bill were passed....Mr. Voorhees presented the petition of Peter Cooper, praying for the repeal of the Specie-Resumption act, and remonstrating against the proposed adjournment of Congress until some legislative measures for financial relief have been passed. Referred....The House joint resolution to provide for the enforcement of the Eight-Hour law was postponed till next December.

HOUSE.—The House devoted the day to the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill. Mr. Kelley offered an amendment providing that no money herein appropriated shall be used for engraving, issuing, selling, or otherwise disposing of bonds or other securities of the United States for the purpose of bringing about or providing for the resumption of specie payment. Rejected—ayes, 89; nays, 105. Amendments for the release of $10,000,000 of treasury notes now held for the redemption of fractional currency, and for advertisement of the sale of bonds were ruled out of order.

THURSDAY, June 13.—SENATE.—The bills fixing the salaries of the Surveyors of Customs at Baltimore and Portland, Me., at $4,500 per annum, each, and the Surveyor at New York $8,000, were passed....The House bill to restore certain lands in Iowa to settlement under the Homestead law, and for other purposes, passed. It applies to all vacant, unappropriated lands heretofore withdrawn for the Mississippi and Missouri railway in that State.... Mr. Voorhees moved to lay the calendar aside, and take up the bill to repeal the Resumption act. After a sharp discussion the motion prevailed—30 to 29—and Mr. Ferry presented a substitute for the House bill agreed upon by the Senate Finance Committee. Mr. Voorhees moved to amend by what was virtually the House bill. After a brief debate the result was the passage of the following substitute for the House bill, which unconditionally repealed the Resumption act: "Be it enacted: That from and after the passage of this act United States notes shall be receivable the same as coin in payment for 4 per cent. bonds now authorized by law to be issued, and on and after Oct. 1, 1878, said notes shall be receivable for duties on imports."

HOUSE.—The House was engaged all day, and in the evening until midnight, on the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill.

Another Remarkable Russian Verdict.

A verdict as remarkable as the acquittal of Vera Sassulitch has been rendered by a Russian jury in Odessa. Three Evangelists began in 1870 to hold secret prayer-meetings, and gradually extended their influence, until at last whole parishes joined the heterodox faith. For persisting in weaning the peasants from the orthodox faith in images, saints, candles, and the paraphernalia of the Russo-Greek Church, they were cast into prison and kept there for three years. The public prosecutor then brought them into court in Odessa, and demanded that they should be exiled to the mines of Siberia. The prisoners appeared in court with the New Testament in their hands, and replied to the accusations of the Synod. Forty witnesses—priests, peasants, and officials—bore record of the sincerity of the Evangelists. In describing the converts, the Studists, they declared them to be remarkable for their sobriety, honesty, and clearness of principle, virtues in which the orthodox moujik is ever wanting; and the only fault which they could find with them was that they would not go to church, nor in any way recognize the authority of the village priest. Indeed, everybody spoke so highly of the Studists and of the good which had attended the preaching of these Russian Wesleyans, that it was generally felt the Government had committed an error in bringing the matter before a jury. Although legally the offenders were liable to exile for spreading heterodox views, the jury, after five minutes' deliberation, found them all three not guilty, and the verdict was hailed with exclamations of joy.

A Mail-Carrier's Rights.

Some amusing incidents occurred during the late Decoration day Presidential tour over the battle-field at Gettysburg. The dozen carriages in which the party were riding were at one time massed in the road around the President's carriage, in which stood an old officer explaining the situation. Down the road came a rickety old stage with horses at full gallop, and the driver yelled out, "Gimme that road!" Two or three of the citizens' committee of escort ran to interrupt him, but he slammed right into the President's carriage and attempted to force it off the road. One of the committee remonstrated with him, saying that the gentleman in that carriage was the President of the United States. "I don't care who it is," he replied, "I've got United States mail here, and I'm entitled to the road, and if he don't back his team out of there I'll run 'em down." There was no use in trying to persuade him, so the President's carriage had to be backed into the ditch, and the stage went through. After the man had passed President Hayes remarked: "I'll have to speak to Judge Key about that mail-carrier when I get home. He is jealous of the rights of his department, and ought to be promoted."

A WITNESS, on being cross-questioned lately, swore that he was in the habit of associating with every grade of society, from lawyers up. The lawyer who "had him in hand" gasped out, "That's all," and sat down.

THE SOCIALISTS OF EUROPE.

The Ramifications of the Recent Conspiracy—Choosing Victims by Lot—The Crown Prince's Narrow Escape—Intense Feeling in Germany.

The Berlin correspondent of the New York Times says "the subject of the congress has become a matter of indifference, and even the Grosser Kurfurst calamity is hardly spoken of in presence of the attempted assassination of the Emperor. The country literally trembles with the shock, and the disgrace is deeply felt everywhere. That the Socialist rantings should lead astray a Hoedel is intelligible enough, but that a doctor of philosophy, an intelligent, highly-cultivated individual, and scion of a respectable family, could have been deceived by the absurd philosophy of the Commune, and stimulated to force his individual madness upon the common sense of the sane millions was unexpected. The people were not prepared for this extreme result of the theories rife in their midst. If a sober, intelligent man of some position in society and aspiring to scholastic honors could be betrayed into lifting his hand against this kind-hearted old man, the venerable sovereign of his people and living impersonation of their long-designed unity, there must be an infection in these doctrines which no one would have attributed to them a few days ago."

The London correspondent of the Chicago Times says a letter has been found in the possession of Nobling, the assassin, "showing connection between the German Social Democrats and the Socialists of England. It confirms a previous cablegram as to the plotters in London. It is now believed that the Crown-Prince had a narrow escape in the British metropolis. On May 27 a telegram to the continental papers reported that the Prince had been killed in London. The circumstances are now recalled by recent events. On that day a deputation of loyal Germans presented an address to the Prince in congratulation of his father's escape from the first attack. The police discovered the intention of a large body of German Socialists to interrupt the proceedings. When the deputation entered, the malcontents in a body rushed for the embassy. Thirty got in, but were thrust out by the police. It is now believed that an attack on the Prince was thus frustrated, but the Socialist conspirators abroad felt secure enough of the event to report it as an occurrence. Detectives guarded the Crown Prince all the time in London, which seem to be the head-center of the agitators of Socialism and Communism."

The Berlin correspondent of the New York Tribune says: "It is difficult to obtain authentic information concerning all the ramifications of the Socialistic conspiracy, but the following statements may be taken as being approximately correct: The present condition of Europe has given hope to the revolutionary leaders, who for a long time have been waiting for a favorable moment to strike a decisive blow. Intense discontent has pervaded Germany, but there was danger of the outbreak of a general European war. In the glamor of military and dynastic triumphs the wrongs of the people are lost sight of. Even the sufferers by the war would be dazzled by its victories or cowed by the display of the military strength that would everywhere be made. It was accordingly deemed necessary in the secret councils of the revolutionary leaders to strike a blow that would alarm the crowned heads and cause them to retreat from their purposes. It is believed that, at a consultation of the revolutionary leaders, there was a discussion as to which sovereign should be chosen as the victim. Victoria was ruled out because she was a woman, and because it was said by the English member of the cabal that, if the revolution were successfully started on the continent, England would feel it as well under the Queen as under a republic. Humbert was proposed as well, also, as Alphonso, but it was agreed that they were insignificant victims. Nothing was to be done in France. She is republican now, and will be Communistic to-morrow. Germany was the chosen field of action, and the Emperor was, by necessity, to be the victim. It will not be long, it is thought, ere the whole details of the conspiracy will be made known."

A recent telegram from Paris says: "A private letter from Germany explains that, though the Socialists admit that there is not a kinder-hearted or more affable man in Europe than Emperor William, or one more mindful of the sufferings of his subjects, they regard him as the chief prompter and supporter of the present military system and think that if he were out of the way a policy of peace and social development would be forced upon the Government and the scourge of a great standing army might be gotten rid off."

How to Live Two Hundred Years.

If anybody wants to live a couple of centuries (1) let him never overfeed; and (2) let him never get drunk. At least, these are the rules of health laid down by Miguel Solis, a half-breed farmer in the foot-hills of the Sierra Mesila, New Granada, who confesses to being 180 years old, but is believed by his neighbors to be really much older. Dr. Lutz Hernandez, who recently paid him a visit, found him at work in his orchard; his skin was the color of parchment, but he was robust and active; his snow-white hair was twisted turban fashion round his head, and his eyes were so bright that the doctor felt quite uncomfortable when they were turned upon him. Miguel said that the secret of his living a century or two was very simple—simply never getting drunk and never overfeeding. "I eat only once a day, a big hearty meal, which it often takes me half an hour to get through with; but you see it is not possible in half an hour to eat more than you can digest in the next twenty-four." He went on to say that he had not made up his mind about meat, but did not eat much of it. He fasted on the first and middle days of each month, eating nothing, but drinking all the water he could swallow. He always let cooked food cool before tasting it; and to this precaution he attributed the fact that his teeth are as sound now as as they were 100 years ago. Dr. Hernandez was informed by some of the oldest inhabitants of the district that they well remembered Miguel as a reputed centenarian when they were boys; also that the name of Miguel Solis, colored farmer, appears in a writ, still preserved, of the contributors to the building fund of a Franciscan monastery near San Sebastian, which was founded in 1812, and that the present abbot is positive it is the same man. But, protracted as has been his sojourn on earth, he has not succeeded in winning the respect of his fellow-beings. The Indians in the neighborhood firmly believe that he has sold his soul to the devil.

THE PRECIOUS METALS.

The Whole Amount Taken from the Earth Since the Creation.

Apropos of this golden epoch and age of silver bonanzas, we learn from the most reliable sources of information that from the earliest times to the commencement of the Christian era the amount of precious metals obtained from the surface and mines of the earth, is estimated to be $4,000,000,000; from the latter epoch to the discovery of America another sum of $4,000,000,000 was obtained; from the date of the latter event to that of 1800, an addition of $9,000,000,000 was made; the extensive working of Russian gold mines in 1843 added to the close of 1842 $1,000,000,000 more; the double discovery of the California gold mines in 1848, and those of Australia in 1851, added to the close of last year, $5,000,000,000, making a grand total at the present time of $23,000,000,000. The average loss by abrasion of coins is estimated to be a tenth of 1 per cent. per annum; and the average loss by consumption in the arts and destruction by fire and shipwreck at from $2,000,000 to $8,000,000 per annum. The amount of the precious metals now in existence is estimated to be $18,000,000,000, of which gold furnishes $7,000,000,000, and silver the remainder. Of the amount now in existence, $8,000,000,000 is estimated to be in coin and bullion, $3,000,000,000 in watches, and the remainder in plate, jewelry and ornaments. Of the amount now in existence, $7,000,000,000 is estimated to have been obtained from America, $3,000,000,000 from Asia (including Australia and New Zealand), $2,000,000,000 from Europe and the remainder from Africa. Prior to the commencement of the Christian era, the annual product of the precious metals was about $2,000,000; from the commencement of the Christian era to the discovery of America it was $3,000,000; in 350 years it attained to $25,000,000; during the decade immediately succeeding, 1842 to 1852, it was $100,000,000, and since the double discovery of the California and Australian mines, 1853 to 1872, it has averaged $256,000,000. The annual product of the precious metals attained its acme in 1858, when it was $285,000,000. The increase in the amount of the precious metals in existence has been greater during the last twenty-five years than during the previous 140. With such magnificent results before us, is it not singular that California and the Pacific slope do not cut a more imposing figure in the world of commerce? —San Francisco Era.

Death from Hydrophobia.

The death of Miss Maria Baldwin, of West Granville, who was bitten in the face by a mad dog in April and last week gave signs of hydrophobia, is peculiarly interesting as another and strong evidence that the disease is not altogether one of the imagination. She had always firmly held that no one need go mad from a dog bite, and since she was bitten showed no nervousness concerning it, going about her duties as usual. The dog had also bitten two other dogs and two sheep. One dog was killed at once, but the other and the sheep have since gone mad and been killed. Moreover, one of the sheep bit a hen, and the bird also went mad, showing its condition by running about wildly and pecking at its fellows until it was killed. But Miss Baldwin was not told of this, and thought lightly of her own case until last week Monday, when she suddenly found herself unable to swallow water. Later she was thrown into spasms and foamed at the mouth, when she gave up hope, but would allow none of her friends to come near her, lest the saliva should inoculate them also with her disease. The spasms became more frequent and severe through the week, the doctors being able to do nothing but administer opiates, and Miss Baldwin finally died on Saturday. She was 80 years old, a woman of great kindness of heart and much beloved by all her friends, and was a relative of Mrs. John Kent, of this city.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

Fish by the Square Mile.

Some faint idea of the vast and inexhaustible number of fish on our shores may, perhaps, be obtained by a consideration of the fact that yesterday no fewer than 6,000 barrels of porgies were caught off Newport. If the sea, through the Vineyard and Long Island sounds, is anywhere near as rich in porgies, mossbunkers, and other varieties of the most abundant kinds of fish, what an unimaginably teeming world of life there must be beneath the waves! And it is, even more than the striving, pushing world of human life, a scene of rapacity and destruction—the stronger preying upon the weaker and "the survival of the fittest." Enormous as this single day's catch of porgies seems, it is surpassed by some of the big hauls of bony-fish or mossbunkers—the "white-fish" of the evil-smelling fish-oil mills on the shore. These creatures actually swarm in millions and are caught and hauled in by the cargo. Schools of voracious bluefish pursue and drive them flipping and flashing to the surface, where they are promptly pounced upon by the sailing fish hawks and sea-gulls that wait for them out of water. In the sea and on the land the world seems to be a scene of shark and tiger, in one or another form of destructive rapacity.—Hartford Times.

GEN. TREPOFF, the head of the Russian police, was in Poland thirty years ago, when the Grand Duke Constantine received from a man in the street a box on the ear. The man fled and could not be found, but the rumor spread rapidly. Trepoff went to the palace and proposed to publicly announce that he, and not the Grand Duke, had been struck. The offer was accepted, and Trepoff was created a Lieutenant. That began his career.

HORRIBLE TRAGEDY.

A Georgia Farmer Slays His Wife, Her Sister, and Three of His Children, and then Commits Suicide.

From an Atlanta (Ga.) paper we glean the following particulars of a frightful tragedy which was recently enacted near Americus, Ga.: "The negro laborers of John W. Caldwell, a well-to-do farmer, 45 years old, saw him standing on his house-top, waving his hand. They started to the house, and met his little girl, Emma, 5 years old, who said, "Pa has killed ma!" When they arrived at the house, the laborers say, Caldwell jumped to the ground. The fall stunned him. They took him up and carried him in-doors, where they saw Mrs. Caldwell, her sister, Miss Mitchell, and three of the children lying side by side —all brained by blows from a heavy iron—and gallons of blood puddled about on the floor. The laborers laid Caldwell down and ran. He got up and, following, begged them to kill him. He then went to the well and jumped in, got out and jumped in again, got out again, and went to the gin-house, where he met his eldest son, 16 years old, and told him he had killed all the people at the house and was going to kill himself. The son dissuaded him, but he climbed to the roof and threw himself to the ground, producing death instantly. When the reporter reached the scene, a horrible spectacle met his view. Caldwell and his wife lay on one bed and the three children and Miss Mitchell on another, all with the most ghastly wounds upon their heads and faces. A heavy bar of iron, a hoe and a smoothing iron were the weapons, and were marked with blood and hair. The victims had been killed at various places about the house and then dragged together in the dining-room by the fiend. The neighbors, gathering, had placed them on the beds. The door and yard were marked all over with Caldwell's foot-prints in blood. The little girl, Emma, who escaped, states that he asked her if she wished to live, and then told her to run. Many neighbors stated to the reporter that they thought Caldwell perfectly sane when he committed the deed. His oldest son stated that his father was on the plantation in the forenoon, and at dinner was morose and ate little, stating that he would remain at the house in the afternoon. Caldwell had eight children. Three were at school. Those killed are: Nancy Alice, aged 10 years; Robert Homer, aged 6, and Leita, aged 2 years. Mrs. Caldwell was 40, and Miss Mitchell 30. The latter was killed in the yard while trying to escape, being brained with hoe. All the wounds were on the heads. Neighbors running to the scene saw Caldwell jump from the gin-house. He told the negro laborers to run for Representative Davison, his near neighbor, as he had "played hell," but was in his senses. The reporter was told that he had been aberrated for some time, but the neighbors deny this. He was usually a mild, quiet man and a good citizen, in good circumstances. Caldwell was a good farmer, highly respected, and a church member. It is thought from the statements of little Emma that Mrs. Caldwell was the first victim.

Hints About Water.

No water that has stood in open vessels during the night should be used for drinking or cooking. By exposure to the air it has lost its "aeration," and has absorbed many of the dust-germs floating in the apartment. If convenience requires water to be kept in vessels for several hours before use, it should be covered, unless the vessels are tight. Wherever practical, all distributing reservoirs should be covered. Filtering always adds to the purity of water. Drinking water should not be taken from lakes or rivers on a low level. Surface water, or water in lakes, pools or rivers which receive the surface wash, should be avoided as much as possible. Do not drink much water at a time. More than two tumblers full should not be taken at a meal. Do not drink between meals unless to quench thirst, as excess of water weakens the gastric juice and overworks the kidneys. Excessive potations, whether of water or other fluid, relax the stomach, impair its secretions, and paralyze its movements. By drinking little at a time the injury is avoided.

THE STOLEN PRESIDENCY.

Anderson's Story of the Stealing of the Electoral Vote of Louisiana.

The first work of the Potter investigating committee was the taking of the testimony of James E. Anderson, Supervisor of Elections for East Feliciana parish, La. He told a clear, crisp, and connected story, backed up by a large amount of documentary evidence, going to show that various members of the administration, from the President down, had a guilty knowledge of the frauds:

Anderson began with the time when he was sent from the New Orleans Custom House to act as Supervisor for East Feliciana. He reporting that it would be impossible to get a Republican majority, Kellogg and Pitkin wanted to have no election held on the Republican side, and then have West and East Feliciana thrown out on the ground of intimidation. Anderson and Weber refused. Then it was suggested that they protest against the count on the same ground. Anderson refused. However, a protest was forged with his name to it, and he asserts that his only crime was in not denouncing the forgery, hoping, by his silence, to get a fat office. His testimony then goes on and implicates the President as having a guilty knowledge of the fraud. This knowledge embraced information in regard to an agreement made between Anderson and Nash, Republican member from Felicians, which states explicitly that, in consideration of the former keeping silent about the protest fraud, the latter would secure a reward for him. The original was given to Stanley Matthews. In the face of this, and on Matthews' recommendation, the President gave Anderson this note to Evarts: "Give this man a Consulate in a warm climate. This is a special case." The Consulate offered him didn't pay well enough, and he refused. Furthermore, he says he tried to make a clean breast of the affair to the President, but that the latter refused to hear him when he began to talk of frauds. The proof against Stanley Matthews lies in his receipt of the Nash agreement, a copy of which was submitted, and in a lot of autograph letters.

Sherman, it was stated, talked with Anderson and Weber in New Orleans, and promised them that if they stood by the party they would be rewarded. It was also charged that he had written a letter to them about to the same effect. Sherman was called on by the committee to deny its authenticity, but the nearest he would come to doing so was to say that he didn't believe he did.

Further details will be gleaned from the following excerpts from his testimony:

Anderson testified that he was Supervisor of Elections in the parish of East Felicians; that all the forms of law were fully complied with; that on his return to New Orleans Marshal Pitkin asked him about a protest, calling to his mind that a short time before an attempt on his life had been made in the parish; that he replied that such was the fact, but he did not know whether they were Democrats or Republicans, so he could make no protest; that after considerable solicitation he drew up a statement of what occurred, but Judge Campbell said it was of no account. Then Campbell drew up a paper which witness refused to sign. He says that a third protest, with blanks as to the number of intimidated voters, was drawn up; that witness signed, but did not swear to this paper. The witness then detailed a number of conversations between himself and Gov. Kellogg before the election and after the registration. The Democrats had come and said they were satisfied with the registration and were willing for Anderson to go back and conduct the elections. The Republicans were reporting that he was afraid to go back, believing that he would be killed. When witness heard this he decided to go back and got ready to go, when he found that the Republicans were opposed to his going. The following is the full evidence at this point:

Q. What do you mean when you say Republicans? A. I mean Jewett, who was Secretary of the State Republican Committee, and who told me their object was to hold no election in five particular parishes, and Weber, who was running for the State Senate in that district, and who was a brother of the Supervisor of West Feliciana, and L. B. Jenks, whom Gov. Kellogg had hired to watch me and prevent my going back to the parish. I had promised Mr. McVeagh and Mr. Wedge and other Democrats to return. I made all preparations to go to the parish Thursday evening, and L. B. Jenks called me aside and said to me, "Anderson, I thought you understood this thing. I thought you understood it was not our intention that you should go back. We were only fooling the Democrats." I said, "Mr. Jenks, you are at liberty to fool the Democrats as much as you please; but I do not want you to fool them at my expense." He said "Do you propose to go back to the parish?" I said, "Certainly I do." Said he, "Let me tell you one thing. If you attempt to leave the city to-day you will be arrested." Said I, "On what charge?" He said, "There is no trouble about that. We will find a charge." Then Thomas H. Jenks, afterward Deputy Marshal of the parish, and cousin of L. B. Jenks, came to me and told me L. B. Jenks had been hired by Kellogg and others to watch me and prevent my leaving the city. I told him I thought that was hardly possible, because Gov. Kellogg had manifested a good deal of anxiety for me to go back to East Feliciana. He said that was all assumed, and he said, "If you want me to prove it to you bring L. B. Jenks to my house to-night, and we will get him under the influence of liquor, and Mrs. Jenks will take him into another room and get all out of him." I went up that evening to the house of Thos. H. Jenks, and Mrs. Jenks took L. B. Jenks into another room, and, in course of conversation, I learned the whole conspiracy; that the object was not to hold an election in East Feliciana; that the onus would be thrown upon me, and that after the election they would say I had refused to return, and consequently, they could not get the vote of the parish, and, to use L. B. Jenks' own expression, he "would be d—d if they would skin me" after election for my course in doing what I had done. I remained at Jenks' house that night. In the morning, when I got up, Thos. H. Jenks told me his wife had gone down that morning and called on Mr. Patten, Chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee, and stated the circumstances to Patten as to why I did not return to the parish, and that in course of the day Patten would be up there. I waited some time, and finally I took a ride down town, and I met Patten on the road. I got into a buggy with him and rode up. On the way, I told him I was perfectly willing to go back and hold an election in the parish of East Feliciana, and I gave him the reasons why I had not gone back. I told him there was a bitter feeling among the Democrats there because they imagined that I was a part of the conspiracy, and I said if he would telegraph to his friends and guarantee me protection, and see I got safe out of New Orleans, I would go to East Feliciana and hold an election.

After again detailing the circumstances of signing this blank statement, Anderson went on to say that shortly after Weber came to him saying he understood that he (Anderson) had made a sweeping protest. The same thing came to him from another source, and he went to the office of Pitkin and asked for it, but Pitkin put him off by saying he hadn't it just then.

Witness—Weber stated he had made no protest against his parish and he didn't propose to, but he said they had brought some influence to bear upon him; that they were anxious to get a protest; that it would be necessary to throw out his parish and to save East Feliciana to the Republicans in order to elect Hayes.

Q. Did you and he enter into any arrangement? A. We talked the matter over pretty thoroughly and finally we concluded that in order to save the electoral vote of Louisiana for Hayes he would make a sort of general protest about his parish, which he could do very safely, because there was intimidation to some extent there, and that I should let my statement go and be accepted for what it was worth. He went to the Custom House, and at my desk wrote out his protest, and swore to it before Southworth, United States Commissioner, on the 14th of November. Then, at my desk, he drew up a statement as to what he had done, and then he went before a notary public and swore to it.

Q. Is this the paper? (handing to witness a copy of it). A. Yes, sir; a true copy. I have not the original. It is still in existence, I presume.

The paper was then read, and is as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 14, 1876.

The undersigned, James E. Anderson, Supervisor of Registration for the parish of East Feliciana, and D. A. Weber, Supervisor for the parish of West Feliciana, Louisiana, have respectfully refused to sign any protest against the counting of the vote of our parishes, cast at the election held on the 7th day of November, 1876, for the reason that the election held on that day was the most peaceable and orderly one ever witnessed by either, and the large gain made by the Democrats being secured by legitimate means, and was owing, in a great measure, to the disgust and hatred with which a large proportion of the colored people regard the present State Government, but the electoral vote of Louisiana being necessary to secure the election of Hayes and Wheeler, and in order to secure such vote it being necessary to throw out the parish of East Feliciana and enough Democratic votes in West Feliciana to make the parish Republican, we have for this reason and no other decided to protest against the counting of the votes as cast, and we have done this at the instigation and request of S. B. Packard, candidate on the Republican ticket for Governor; J. R. G. Pitkin, United States Marshal; William P. Kellogg, now Governor of the State, and Charles E. Nash, Member of Congress from the Sixth District, and others.

D. A. WEBER,
JAMES E. ANDERSON.

This was signed in our presence Nov. 15, 1876.

GEORGE DICKS,
A. J. WILDER.

Sworn to before me this 15th day of November, 1876, by the within mentioned James E. Anderson and D. A. Weber.

JAMES E. ANDERSON,
D. A. WEBER.
WILLIAM H. SEYMOUR, Notary Public.

The witness continued: "That paper was signed on Tuesday, and a part of the visiting statesmen arrived on Wednesday, and I think that they all arrived before Friday. The copy was made in May, 1877, during the time that the visiting commission was in New Orleans."

The witness here stated that Stanley Matthews was given the original by him.

Mr. McMahon—After the execution of this agreement on the 15th of November, state what took place. A. We swore to it on Wednesday, and on Thursday I first learned, or it was intimated, that they had changed my protest. I then went to Marshal Pitkin's office and denounced it as a forgery to which I did not propose to submit. On Friday E. L. Weber came to me and said some of the visiting committee were in Cockrem's room and they desired to see us. I told Weber I had no business with them, and declined to see them. On Saturday D. A. Weber came to me and stated that Mr. Sherman desired to see us. That was on the 18th. We called at the St. Charles Hotel that night, but we failed to see him. I do not recollect whether he was out or not. The next day, Sunday evening, we started from my room to the St. Charles Hotel again, and going down Canal street we passed by Moreau's restaurant. The upper portion of the door was glass, and Mr. Weber glanced in and said, "There is Mr. Sherman, now." I said, "Dan, we may as well see him here as any other place," and I said, "You had better go in by the other door, but I will go in by this door, lest it might excite suspicion if we went in together." I passed in by the lower door and walked into the saloon. E. A. Burke was sitting at a table talking to a gentleman, and he called me, and I went over to him. I then left Burke and walked across the room, when Weber came in by the other door.

By the Chairman—Q. Is that a large public room? A. Yes, it is a dining-saloon. We walked up to the table where Mr. Sherman was sitting with some gentleman who Weber told me afterward was Mr. Stoughton, a gentleman with a remarkable head of white hair. That is the only thing that I remember about him. Weber stepped up to Mr. Sherman and said, "Mr. Sherman, I believe." Mr. Sherman said "Yes." Weber said, "My name is Weber, and this is Anderson. We are the Supervisors of the Feliciana parishes." Mr. Sherman said, "I am glad to see you, gentlemen." He leaned over the table and said something to Stoughton which I failed to catch. Stoughton then turned his back, picked up a paper, and commenced to read. Mr. Sherman pulled round his chair, motioned to Weber and me to sit down, and I sat on his left hand and Mr. Weber on his right.

Q. State the conversation which took place between you. A. Mr. Sherman said, "I wanted to see you, gentlemen, as I understood there was some difficulty in reference to your parishes. Now, there is a crisis in which not only Louisiana but the whole country is involved, and it is a time which we expect and want every Republican and every true patriot to stand by us. Now, I hope that you gentlemen are going to do that thing." "Well, Mr. Sherman," said Weber, "Mr. Anderson and I have already done more than the circumstances of the case would warrant us in doing, and I have done a great deal more than safety would warrant me in doing." Said he, "What do you mean by that?" Weber said, "The people of my parish are considerably waked up, and I have made a protest which is, perhaps, more sweeping than it should have been, and if I go back I will undoubtedly be in danger of my life." "Well," said Sherman, "what necessity is there for your going back?" Weber said, "My family is there, my wife and children are there, my whole property is there; what have I to do?" Mr. Sherman said, "You can be provided for elsewhere." "Well," said Weber, "Mr. Anderson and myself, on account of the course we have pursued, have incurred the enmity of Mr. Packard and Mr. Kellogg, and every Republican leader in the State. If Packard becomes Governor of the State of Louisiana we have no possibility of ever getting anything under him, and if these men are opposed to us we have no possibility of getting anything under the United States Government. Mr. Sherman interrupted and said, "Gentlemen, let me tell you one thing. Mr. Packard, as Governor of the State of Louisiana, will control the State. Mr. Hayes, as President of the United States, will control the Federal patronage. It does not follow that Mr. Hayes will adopt Mr. Packard's suggestion in everything or anything. The Republican party has not been in the habit of forgetting the men who stood by it in the hour of peril, and will not only uphold you, but you will be upheld by the sentiment of the country." I then remarked: "Mr. Sherman, the sentiment of the country may be a very good thing for a man to stand on, but it will not prevent him being prosecuted on the charge of perjury, for they are going to throw out my parish on a forged protest." Mr. Sherman raised his left hand and said: "Mr. Anderson, this is a subject which you and I cannot discuss. That is a question for your State authorities. What I want to say to you is this: That if you gentlemen stand firm in this matter and let it run along as it is, you will have no cause to regret it." And then the interview ended. That was on Sunday evening, the 19th.

Mr. Springer—What was it that you should let stand?

The Witness—We inferred that he meant to let the matter in reference to parishes stand as it was then.

The Chairman—That means everything as to the protests?

The Witness—To let the protests stand as they existed then.

Mr. Morrison—You have mentioned the protest as being forged?

The Witness—Yes, sir.

Anderson then detailed how, on the following morning, in response to a note from him (note produced), Weber came to his room, and they sent to Sherman the following letter, which he (Anderson) had drafted the previous evening:

SIR: We have carefully considered the arguments advanced by you in our interview. Your assurance that we shall be taken care of is scarcely specific enough in case we pursue the course suggested by you. We would be obliged to leave the State. Will you, therefore, state in writing whom we shall look to for the fulfillment of these promises. Respectfully,

D. A. WEBER,
JAMES E. ANDERSON.

To Hon. John Sherman.

It was proposed at this point to put in evidence a copy of Sherman's reply, and after some discussion it was decided to send for Sherman and have him first state whether or not it was a copy of a letter from him. The following transpired upon his arrival:

The Chairman (to Secretary Sherman)—James E. Anderson, the witness testifying before the committee this morning, stated that he had received from the hands of D. A. Weber a letter purporting to be signed by you, of which I now show you a copy. Will you [illegible] such a letter?

The witness (after an inspection of the paper handed him)—I can only say this, that I believe, upon my responsibility and the oath I have taken, that I never wrote such a letter. I have no recollection of ever writing such a letter. If this letter was written it must have been, if I am not mistaken, about the date on the day when the returning officers first convened to open the returns. I think it was on the 20th. At that time I knew but little about the transaction. The papers had not been opened. I do not believe I ever wrote that letter. At the same time there are things in that letter that I would have written to these or any other men, who were engaged in the performance of what I believed to be their duty, if I had been asked, but I do not believe that I wrote that letter.

After some time, the witness having, apparently, concluded his statement, the Chairman said: "That is all for the present, Mr. Secretary."

Mr. Hiscock renewed his objection to the copy of Mr. Sherman's letter being put in evidence, but the objection was overruled, and the copy was read and put in evidence as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 20, 1876.

Messrs. D. A. Weber and James E. Anderson:

GENTLEMEN: Your note of even date has just been received. Neither Mr. Hayes, myself, the gentlemen who accompany me, or the country at large, can ever forget the obligations under which you will have placed us should you stand firm in the position you have taken. From a long intimate acquaintance with Gov. Hayes I am justified in assuming responsibility for the promises made, and will guarantee that you will be provided for as soon after the 4th of March as may be practicable, and in such manner as will enable you both to leave Louisiana, should you deem it necessary. Very truly yours,

JOHN SHERMAN.

The examination of Anderson was resumed, and much correspondence was put in evidence.

Darrall Substantiates Anderson.

The testimony of C. B. Darrall, a Republican ex-Congressman from Louisiana, confirms the story of Anderson in most of its details. Darrall wanted the office of Collector of the Port of New Orleans, and was supported by the influence of Stanley Matthews, which he secured through Anderson. Darrall is confident that he would have gained his point, but for the President's obligations to old Wells and the Returning Board Anderson, who wanted to control everything themselves. A mere parish Supervisor and an ex-Congressman could not expect to prevail against the influence of the two men who had the power to count out ten thousand Tilden votes, and used it. Mr. Hayes' adherence to the Returning Board gang, in spite of all opposition, is convincing proof that he fully appreciated the magnitude of their services—and the extent of their knowledge. He knew how many other hearts would ache if Wells began to squeal, and kept the old reprobate's manger full of fodder, that there might be no provocation for squealing.

Rutherford B. Hayes is open to the charge of tampering with witnesses. The Democrats were greatly disappointed in Darrall's unwillingness to testify. He had been talking very plainly to them for a day or two, and even up to within a couple of hours of his appearance before the committee was pouring the tale of his wrongs into the willing ears of McMahon. Just before he went on the stand Hayes sent for him, and from that time Darrall's tune changed. After the close of the examination he received another summons from the White House, and was closeted there a long time. He is certain to have some good appointment within the next month.

Anderson Further Corroborated.

A Washington telegram of the 12th inst. to the Chicago Times says:

Summing up carefully to-day's testimony, there is a wide percentage in favor of the truth of the story of James E. Anderson, as given before Potter's committee. Ex-Congressman Darrall was upon the stand the greater part of the day, and continued his indecent exhibition of the dirty, dishonest practices of the school of Louisiana politics. Darrell has evidently been coached by the administration to do his best to break down Anderson's testimony, but he has had so little preparation that his testimony has only resulted in showing his dishonest intentions without accomplishing anything. He swore to the bad reputation of Anderson at a certain time, when it was immediately shown by cross-examination that he saw nothing in Anderson to prevent him from being intimate with him and using him. He acknowledged also that after he failed to get the office of Collector he wrote a letter to Anderson advising him to "go for the blanked hypocritical, psalm-singing people at the White House." He believed enough in Mr. Anderson to use him for the purposes of blackmail, and the frankness of this witness in acknowledging his share in the blackmail was not the least remarkable part of his testimony. Mr. Butler asked him if he did not consider his use of Anderson's documents as blackmailing. Mr. Darrall said "Yes." The Weber-Anderson agreement was substantiated to-day by as good testimony as should be needed. Seymour, the notary, and one of the witnesses, testified to the documents being made out before them. They did not know Weber, but had no reason to believe it was anybody else but him.

Impeachment for John Sherman.

Secretary Sherman is in the toils. One case for impeachment is clearly made against him by the Glover Investigating Committee. To defray the expenses of the Louisiana Commission he borrowed $5,000 of the First National Bank of New York, a member of the Syndicate. This was borrowing money in anticipation of an appropriation, an unlawful act. The money has never been repaid. Congress will never appropriate a dollar to pay the expenses of this trading commission. The money loaned by the First National Bank was furnished in New York drafts to the disbursing agent. These drafts were cashed at the sub-treasury in New Orleans. This is an indictable offense. Another thing against Sherman in this matter is the secret manner employed by him in negotiating this loan, and his not presenting afterward the facts in the case to Congress when he asked for money to make it good. This ill-fated Louisiana Commission has been in bad enough odor without this dirty scandal to come as a sequel to their long chapter of bargaining intrigues.—Washington telegram.

THE LOUISIANA CONSPIRACY.

The Certificate from that State Which Elected Hayes Proven to be a Forgery.

[Washington Telegram to Chicago Times.]

This afternoon brought out the most serious revelations yet developed by Potter's committee. The stupendous forgeries exhibited this afternoon will shock the moral sense of the entire country. It is no longer a question resting upon any statements or documents of James E. Anderson, but on the positive evidence that all of the certificates but one of the proceedings of the Hayes Electoral College in Louisiana, used before the Electoral Commission and joint convention of Congress were forgeries. To understand fully how these forgeries became imperative it is necessary to review the case as it was presented to-day. Under the law regulating the proceedings of the Electoral College certificates of proceedings are required to be made out in triplicate. One set of returns is filed with the State authorities, one is sent by mail to the President of the Senate, and the third is sent by a messenger to the President of the Senate. The reason for sending two sets of returns by two different methods to the President of the Senate is to guard against the loss of either. Now, it is a fact as developed to-day that, after the Hayes Electoral College adjourned in Louisiana, the returns according to law were made out upon the 9th of December, 1876. One set was mailed on that day to the President of the Senate, and that was received. A subsequent examination shows this to have been irregular in its form, enough so to insure its rejection, but it is the only one that is an honest document. The messenger who came with the duplicate brought it in an envelope which had no outward indication of what were its contents, as the law requires. The President of the Senate therefore refused to receive it. He ordered it to be returned to the State of Louisiana for the purpose of having the proper authorities indicate upon the envelope what its contents were before he would receive it. This document went back to the State of Louisiana, and it appears that the Republican officials there were frightened by its return, and thought that there must be some irregularity about the one that had been sent by mail. An examination proved this to be true, so they went to work and made out a new set of returns in duplicate, and forwarded one by mail and one by messenger, as they did with the originals. But it appears that Levissee, of the electors in the Hayes Electoral College was absent from New Orleans at the time the second returns were made. These returns were forwarded on the 29th of December, and Levissee's name is forged upon both of them. This Mr. Levissee swore to today, and stated most positively that he had not been in New Orleans after the 18th of December, and had signed no document whatever after fixing his signature to the original returns, immediately after the adjournment of the Hayes Electoral College. But the strangest part of it all is that the return that was first sent by a messenger and rejected by Senator Ferry, because it did not bear upon the exterior of the envelope any indication of what it was, in some fashion found its way into the possession of Vice President Ferry. So far as Mr. Levissee's signature goes, the last two are forgeries. The returns that should have been left in the office of the Secretary of State of Louisiana were called for during the investigation of the electoral count a year ago last winter, and they have disappeared. It is understood that they have been destroyed. But who destroyed them is yet to be developed, as well as who are the guilty parties who perpetrated the forgeries of the election certificates. The returns of the State election furnished here during the same investigation have also disappeared. Evidence is in hand to show that these documents were permeated with forgeries. Of course no one claims that the revelations of to-day have any effect in changing the results, but it does show the desperate criminality of the Republican officials in Louisiana, who did not scruple at bold forgery in the culmination of their work.

Senator Kellogg is the man who is most interested in to-day's revelations, for his name appears upon the forged duplicate as genuine. If his name is there, it is argued that he must have been a party to the forgery of the name of Levissee. The testimony of Anderson is no longer a subject of conversation by the side of these later revelations. Naturally one asks what was the object of these forgeries? It must be remembered that the contest was so close that every certificate was subject to the closest scrutiny. If there had been no trouble with the original making out of the return of the Hayes Electoral College in Louisiana then there would have been no need of forgery, but the return of the duplicate sent by a messenger revealed upon scrutiny that it was irregular, and that it was not made out in accordance with law. Then ensued a scene of great demoralization. If the case was rested upon certificates technically informal then all would be lost. Objection to the counting of such certificates would be fatal and cause their rejection. But Levissee was absent. He had gone into the Red river country, beyond the reach of call, and his signature to a new set of returns could not be delayed, and the certificate already in Ferry's hands was one that could not stand. Anyone familiar with the school of Louisiana politics will not be surprised to know that forgery was called to the aid of the gang of thieves, who had by perjury and forgery secured the State thus far. They had gone too far to be cheated in the end. It only a breath of what could have been known during those stormy days of the closing scenes in the joint convention—if some member with the knowledge of to-day could have stood up and said: "Gentlemen, I object to the counting of the vote of the State of Louisiana, because one of its certificates is irregular and the other two here before us are forgeries," imagine the sensation and results.

Failures and Bankruptcies Caused by Contraction.

We make the following extracts from a speech of Hon. Henry R. Howes, of Georgia, made on the tariff question in the House of Representatives, May 9, 1878:

"The extent and character of the ruin which has been entailed upon the country within the last twelve years, and which can be shown to be almost exclusively attributable to the systems of revenue and finance which have prevailed, are simply appalling. A review of the large number of failures and bankruptcies which have occurred within this period in our commercial and mercantile circles alone give us only a partial conception of the extent of this wide-spread disaster and ruin. Carefully compiled statistics, which I here submit, show the following astounding results:

Year.	Failures.	Liabilities.
1868	2,608	$ 63,744,000
1869	2,799	75,054,000
1870	3,551	88,242,000
1871	2,915	85,255,000
1872	4,069	121,056,000
1873	5,183	228,499,000
1874	5,830	155,239,000
1875	7,490	197,210,922
1876	9,092	191,117,886
1877	8,872	190,669,936
Totals	52,409	$1,396,114,644

This exhibit aggregates 52,409 failures in business since the year 1868, with liabilities amounting to $1,396,144,644. Nor is this all. To this catalogue of disaster must be added the enormous bankruptcies and failures in business which have occurred among private individuals, and also the depreciation in real estate, estimated at not less than 30 per cent. of the census valuation of 1870; the shrinkage in the value of stocks and bonds of our railroads and other corporations; the loss accruing to the wealth of the country on account of its labor being idle, estimated at not less than $5,000,000,000; the aggregate value of the property so lost to the country amounting to the stupendous sum of $10,000,000,000. And to this we must still add the 3,355 failures with liabilities amounting to $82,078,826 for the first quarter of the year 1878; the whole aggregating an amount equal to one-third of the estimated value of all the wealth, of every kind and description, of the entire country. This immense destruction of values has been the result of the vicious, misguided and mistaken legislation devised and perpetuated by the Republican party, in their systems of revenue and finance, which are altogether unsuited to the exigencies of the times, the development of our industries, and the necessities of the people. And still, with this alarming state of things existing, there are to be found some who, in their lust for power and in their greed for gain, oppose every attempt to remove or even reform the causes which have precipitated these disasters.

THE EFFECT OF CONTRACTION ON OUR RAILROADS.

Let us for a moment notice the effect of the contraction policy of the administration upon these railroads of the country. There are over 70,000 miles of railroad in the United States, completed mainly by private enterprise, representing over $10,000,000,000 of capital. Most of this vast sum is the accumulated savings of poor and moderately rich men who invested their surplus means in works of internal improvement for the benefit of themselves, while at the same time they developed the commerce of the country.

Now, after three years of contraction, let us see its effects upon the railroads. In 1877, as detailed in the Chicago Railway Age, there were sold, under foreclosure of mortgages, for the benefit of the bondholders fifty-five railroads, aggregating 3,875 miles of completed railroad, with a capital of $79,045,700. Suits that will result in sales were commenced against forty-four other railroads, with a length of 5,409 miles, and a capital of $156,108,040. Besides these, sixteen other roads, 2,338 miles long, with a capital stock of $126,921,900, were ordered to be sold at some future day. Thus we see that in the year 1877 alone there were sold and ordered to be sold 11,672 miles of railroad, aggregating a capital stock of $362,000,000. That is to say, that mhre than one-seventh of the entire railroads in the United States have been or will be sold for the benefit of the bondholders, and the people who built and owned these roads have lost every dollar invested in them.

WHAT IT COSTS THE PEOPLE TO SUPPORT THE GOVERNMENT.

While labor and industry are thus robbed of their legitimate profits, let us see how the Government has oppressed them by its systems of revenue and taxation. The following table, compiled from official records, shows what the people, and mainly the laboring people, have paid to support the Government during fifteen years:

June 30, 1862	$ 570,841,700.25
June 30, 1863	714,709,995.58
June 30, 1864	865,234,087.00
June 30, 1865	1,290,312,982.00
June 30, 1866	1,141,072,666.09
June 30, 1867	346,729 124.3
June 30, 1868	339,360,284.00
June 30, 1869	321,490,597.75
June 30, 1870	309,653,560.75
June 30, 1871	292,177,188.25
June 30, 1872	[illegible]
June 30, 1873	262,264,216.97
June 30, 1874	[illegible]
June 30, 1875	268,447,543.76
June 30, 1876	256,460,797.20
To maintain the Government 15 years	$7,591,817,314.70

WHAT THE BONDS HAVE COST IN INTEREST.

In addition to this vast sum the people have been taxed to pay the interest on untaxed capital invested in bonds, as the following well-authenticated statistics will show, to the amount of $1,596,854,901.13:

June 30, 1861	$ [illegible]
June 30, 1862	[illegible]
June 30, 1863	24,729,846.61
June 30, 1864	[illegible]
June 30, 1865	[illegible]
June 30, 1866	[illegible]
June 30, 1867	[illegible]
June 30, 1868	[illegible]
June 30, 1869	[illegible]
June 30, 1870	[illegible]
June 30, 1871	[illegible]
June 30, 1872	[illegible]
June 30, 1873	[illegible]
June 30, 1874	107,119,815.21
June 30, 1875	103,093,544.57
June 30, 1876	100,243,271.23
June 30, 1877	[illegible]
Total	$1,596,854,901.13

Making a grand total of $9,187,771,215.80, or nearly one-third of the entire value of property of the country, paid by the few, in support of the Government, within the short space of fifteen years. Is it surprising that, with such a system of oppression and wrong, want and disaster should overspread the land, and that the people should cry for deliverance?"

Wendell Phillips on the Greenback Question.

There need be no doubt of the success of the Greenback party. Its presence everywhere, in local and national elections, in Congress and everywhere else, astonishes friend and foe. There is hardly any subject which stirs thought and awakens interest except finance. Even the Southern question is, for the moment, pushed aside. Members of Congress hurry to put themselves on record, by motion or speech, showing some degree of submission to the popular will. Sherman's surrender on most of the points which we have been claiming is the high-water mark of our present gains. And he is only ahead by a single stride of leading members of Congress heretofore classed with the slaves of specie. Our danger lies in the very rapidity of our growth. Both parties will bid, are bidding for our support; they will attempt to buy us off by half-way concessions, enough to save their party and disarm the rising revolt against a system of finance which rests the power of inflation in the hands of a few hundred bank directors and lets them play with their values at their pleasure. The Greenback movement, in its essence, is the assertion that, when our fathers settled it that the people were competent to govern themselves, they meant to include among the points as to which they were competent the question of finance as well as marriage, crime, real estate, descent of estates and other matters of government. The Greenback movement is a revolt against the claim that in ordinary matters the people can govern themselves, but on questions of finance they must be kept under perpetual guardianship and be the wards of rich men. There is a class which feels it can trust everything but its money to universal suffrage. On this point they agree with the Czar and Tories and hold on to the old claims. Our effort must be to take the whole question of the currency, as Franklin and Ricardo advised, into the state's hands. Never rest while any bank has a right to issue a bill. Never rest till Congress supplies all our currency, made of paper and based on the credit of the state. Never rest till the debt is funded for at least a century, held by the people, interchangeable at their will into bonds or greenbacks and constituting one of the strongest ties that bind the Union together. Never rest till the greenback representing the wealth of the nation is legal tender everywhere for all debts, thus freeing us forever from rings and corners in gold, and this, our second Declaration of Independence, makes the first a reality and not a sham. To this end trade with no party. Stand willing to absorb either. But hold the helm in our own hands.

The First Japanese Parliament.

The Japanese in their strides toward the modern civilization have not stopped with the introduction of an educational system, an improved agriculture, railways and telegraphs, but are now cautiously proceeding to liberalize their form of government. The first Japanese Parliament, as it may be called, met last month at Tokio, and consisted of a gathering of the provincial Governors. These Governors, to be sure, were not elected by the people, but their object in meeting had a significant squint toward popular suffrage in the future. This object was to devise a scheme of local self-government for the various provinces of the empire by Legislatures elected by the people. The Legislator must be 25 years of age and pay an annual property tax of $10. A similar property qualification is proposed for the electors, who, however, may be allowed to vote at 20. Government officials, teachers and priests are to be excluded from the suffrage. Strictly local affairs only are to be submitted to these provincial assemblies, and national topics are interdicted. These conditions were all imposed by the central Government at the beginning of the Parliament, and will no doubt be complied with. The Mikado presided at the opening of the Parliament, and made a speech from the throne, and there was considerable attendant fuss and feathers. The right of the people to information concerning the proceedings of the Assembly was recognized by the concession of special accommodations to the reporters of the native press. The Mikado may seem to grant little by these privileges, but, once having a taste of popular liberty, the facile Japanese are liable to press ahead till their now all-powerful Emperor, who not so long ago was even worshiped, will find himself the merest constitutional sovereign. That the people are drifting toward democratic ideas is indicated by this extract from a recent democratic newspaper: "Our country is now progressing in civilization as swiftly as the sun rises. And if the officials will consider the rapid advancement of civilization, they will recognize that the people will no longer be ruled arbitrarily, but are prepared to stand up for their rights and liberties."

FRANCIS CARROW'S treatment of a Pittsfield girl was outrageous. He married her in April, and hanged himself in May, leaving his six children by a former wife on her hands.

TURBINE-WHEELS, it is estimated, saved the country over $300,000,000 in fuel.

Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of an execution to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court in a cause wherein Charles Whitney et al. are plaintiffs and John C. Vesley, John Bisker, Benjamin Casey and Joseph R. Lanning are defendants, requiring me to make the sum of one hundred and ninety dollars [$190] with interest on said judgment and costs, I will expose at public sale to the highest bidder, on SATURDAY, JULY 6th, A. D. 1878.

Between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M. and 4 o'clock P. M., of said day, at the door of the Court House in DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years of the following real estate, to-wit:

Lot number thirty-eight [38] in Danforth's addition to the town of Butler, DeKalb county, Indiana.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said judgment interest and costs, I will at the same time and place expose to public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said judgment interest and costs.

Said sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws.

J. C. St. CLAIR, Sheriff.

McBride, Morlan & Leas Att'ys. for plaintiff.

Auburn, June 12, 1878. Pf. $7. 0.

Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court in a cause wherein John W. Carey is plaintiff and Ira A. and Rosina E. West, Amelia Angle, Robert Work and Christian Orff are defendants, requiring me to make the sum of five hundred and forty-one dollars and fifty cents [$541.50], with interest on said decree and costs, I will expose at public sale, to the highest bidder, on SATURDAY, JULY 6th, A. D. 1878.

Between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M. and 4 o'clock P. M., of said day, at the door of the Court House in DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate, to-wit:

Lot number one hundred and ten [110] in Egnew's addition to the town of Butler, DeKalb county, Indiana.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said judgment, interest and costs, I will at the same time and place expose at public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs.

Said sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws.

J. C. St CLAIR, Sheriff.

W. H. Dills, Atty. for plaintiff.

Auburn, June 12, 1878. Pr. fee $7.50.

Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court in a cause wherein J. W. Boyel is plaintiff, and Isaac M. Johnson and Sarah E. Johnson are defendants, requiring me to make the sum of two hundred and ten dollars and thirty-five cents, ($210.35), with interest on said decree and costs I will expose at public sale, to the highest bidder, on SATURDAY, JULY 13th, A. D. 1878.

Between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M. and 4 o'clock P. M., of said day, at the door of the Court House in DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate to wit:

A Strange Scene.

A well-dressed man walked into one of the saloon the other day leading a little boy by the hand, and called for a drink of whisky. The little fellow burst in tears and the saloon keeper to his credit be it said, refused him, whereupon the man jumped behind the bar and seized a bottle of the article in question. The bar-keeper attempted to take the bottle from him, and a scuffle ensued, during which the liquor was spilled, and the stranger ejected. A man of family who was present was so struck by the conduct of the boy, that he left the saloon and made an oath that he would never drink another drop. What a scene for an artist's pencil! A wonderful battle in which a little boy conquers the bar-keeper and the man of family present, but cannot prevail over his own beloved but besotted father.—Exchange.

Liver is King.

The liver is the imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the the life, health and happiness of man. When it is disturbed in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system are all immediately connected with the workings of the liver. It has been successfully proved that Green's August Flower is unequalled in curing all persons afflicted with dyspepsia or liver complaint, and all the numerous symptoms that result from an unhealthy condition of the liver and stomach. Sample bottles to try, 10 cents. Positively sold in all towns on the Western Continent. Three doses will prove that it is just what you want. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

His First and Only Love.

"Did I ever love any other girl?' repeated a prospective bridegroom, in answer to a tearful query of his intended. "Why, darling, of course not. You are my first and only love. This heart knew no weakening until the sunshine of your love streamed in and woke it to ecstacy.'

And then he kissed her tenderly and went home and said to himself:

"I must hurry them things up out of the way right off, or there'll be a row.'

And he collected a great pile of letters, written in all kinds of feminine hands, with lots of faded flowers, and photographs and locks of hair, and bits of faded ribbon and other things, and when the whole collection had been crammed into the kitchen grate, he drew a deep sigh and said to himself:

"There goes all that's left of fourteen undying loves. Let them flicker.'

The Friend of his Youth.

Beverly Smith with walked out of No. 6 with the greatest promptness, and, as he ranged before the desk and smiled, he said:

"Well, this is indeed a surprise! Why, I hadn't the remotest idea of finding you here! Shake old fellow!'

His Honer wouldn't.

"Dont you remember your old schoolmate, Bev. Smith?' inquired the prisoner. "Don't you remember how we used to steal melons together—how we both went over the milldam in old boat—how we read novels under the lee side of haystacks?'

A strange light crept into his Honor's eyes as he replied:

"Ah! I remember now! So you are Bev. Smith?" —

"I am—I am. I thought you'd remember me. I'm awful glad to see you Judge. Are you well?'

"Quite well, thank you.'

An awkward silence followed. Mr. Smith herd the boys chuckling, and he at length said:

"Glad to hear it—yes—yes. I should like to call on you and talk over old times.'

"Beverly Smith!' said the court, in a voice resembling the distant explosion of a coal cart, "you are now about to call on the Superintendant of the House of Correction, there to remain for ninety long days.'

"What! sentance an old companion?'

"All the same, Beverly—all the same. The friends of my childhood are few in number. They are falling down stairs, being drowned, blown up, run over and I'm going to put you where you will be safe from accident!'

"Don't Judge!

"But I will! I prize you Bev, when night comes I want to know that you are in out of the wet, and when morning dawns I want to feel that you are safe from the clutch of ice wagons. The sentence is recorded.'

"Judge, I—I—don't think I ever knew you!' stammered Beverly, but there was a light in the window for him.—Detroit Free Press.

In the Interest of Manhood.

Two men came into the Mayor's office recently, and halting in front of the judicial desk, doffed their beavers.

"What can I do for you?' said the urbane official.

"Well, sur, me name it is Timothy Megee. I was wonst well known in these parts for fightin', warnt I Si?' turning to his companion, who growld out "he thought he war." "I whaled them all down in Blue Rock, didn't I Si?'

Si said he believed he did.

"Si, did I iver lit a man go away wantin', when he wanted a foight?'

Si said he didn't believe he ever did.

"I want to file an affidavy against Emmanuel Crompton for foightin', because he wouldn't shtay wid me. I niver had a man arristed in me loif that gave me foight and shtayed wid me, I care not whether he whupt me or I whupt him if he shtayed wid me, but when a man shtrikes me and ruins away and shows the white fether, I call that cowardly, and I want him arristed. He took a run and a jump and hit me, but he didn't knock me down, did he Si?'

Si said he didn't.

"Make out an affidavy, Mr. Mayor, and have him arristed for foightin'.'

It was made out.—Zanesville (O.) Times.

Henry Clay.

No American, probably, ever possessed the secret of personal influence over men, and knew so well how to use it, as did Henry Clay.

His secret lay in his warm heart and remarkable memory. He never forgot a favor or a face. His journeys to Washington were performed slowly on horseback, or in the leather-hung stages which crossed the mountains. Every shop keeper or negro hostler on the way claimed "old Henry Clay" as his personal friend. An old gentleman gives us the following reminiscence of him:

"I lived in a little village on the National road. One evening, when I was a boy of 14, I was closing father's store for the night, when a tall, ungainly, keen-eyed man entered hurriedly. I had seen his picture. The blood fairly stopped in my veins.

"'Is Mr. Neal in?'

"'No, sir, he is out of town.'

"He turned away with great annoyance.

"'I am his son, Mr. Clay,' I said. 'What can I do for you? Anything in the world.''

"He laughed. 'I am on my way home and find myself out of money.'

"I flung open my desk.

"'I would like to borrow $100,' he said making out a due bill to my father.

"In a day or two the money came back. Four years afterward I was in a town which was preparing to receive Clay as the candidate for President. There was to be a barbecue, an illumination, etc. A procession of citizens and soldiers went out to meet him. I was an awkward country lad and followed in the crowd. The leading politicians, and all the great men of the town, were in front.

"On reaching the roadside inn, a muddy hack outside showed that Mr Clay had arrived. The next moment he came out on the porch. There was a deafening cheer. His eyes swept over the crowd, and he singled me out. He held out his hand.

"'Ha! my friend Neel!' he said.

"That was the proudest moment of my life! Clay had his faults, but the man who could remember to give pleasure to a poor lout of a boy, at such a time, hand a noble humanity."

Anxious to Wed.

The afternoon services had ended and the congregation were arranging themselves for the benediction, when the parson decended from the pulpit to the desk below, and said in a calm, clear voice,—

"Those wishing to be united in the holy bonds of matrimony will now please come forward'

A deep stillness instantly fell over the congregation, broken only by the rustling of the silk, as some pretty girl or excited matron charged her distance to catch the first view of the couple to be married. No one, however, arose, seemed in the least inclined to rise, whereupon the worthy clergyman, deeming the first notice unheard or misunderstood, repeated,—

"Let those wishing to be united in the holy bonds of matrimony now come forward!"

Still no one stirred. The silence became audible, and a painful scene of awkwardness among those present was felt, when a young man, who occupied a vacant seat in the broad aisle during the services, slowly arose and deliberately walked to the foot of the alter. He was good looking and well dressed, but no female accompanied him. When he arrived within a respectful position of the clergyman he paused, and with a reverent bow stepped to one side of the aisle, but neither said anything, nor seemed at all disconcerted at the idea of being married alone.

The clergyman looked anxiously around for the bride, who, supposed, was yet to arrive, and at length remarked to the young man, in an undertone:

"The young lady, sir, is dilatory.'

"Yes, sir.'

"Had you not better defere the ceremony?'

"I think not.'

"Do you suppose she will be here soon?'

"I, sir?' said the young man; "how should I know of the young lady's movements?

A few moments were allowed to elapse in this unpleasant state of expectancy, when the clergyman renewed his interrogations.

"Did the lady promise to attend at the present hour, sir?'

"What lady?'

"Why, the lady, to be sure, that you are waiting for?'

"I did not hear her say anything about it,' was the unsatisfactory response.

"Then, sir, may I ask you why you are here, and for what purpose you thus trifle in the sanctuary of the Most High?' said the somewhat enraged clerical.

"I came, simply because you invited all of those wishing to be united in the holy bands of matrimony to step forward, and I happened to entertain such a wish. I am sorry to have misunderstood you, and I wish you a very good day.'

The benediction was uttered in a solemnity of tone very little in accordance with the twitching of the facil nerves, and when, after the church was closed, the story got among the congregation, more than one girl regretted that the young man who really wished to be united in the holy bonds of matrimony had been obliged to depart without a wife.

Urged to go into Bankruptcy.

"Boggs,' said Mrs. B. suddenly, the other evenging, looking up from the paper she was reading, "why don't you go into bankruptcy, and have some style about you?'

"Go into bankruptcy?' repeated Boggs, "what for?'

"Because it is the fashion,' replied Mrs. B. "Everybody who is anybody goes into bankruptcy nowadays. Our neighbors are all getting the start of us. Here's Soggs, who lives across the street, he is in the list to-day. Now we have lived in this town a good deal longer than Soggs has. Why couldn't you have got your name in the papers as well as he?'

"I don't want my name in the papers in that way,' said Boggs.

"That's the way; always behind every body else. We never could hold our own along with our neighbors.'

"But we couldn't hold our own if I went into bankruptcy,' presisted Mr Boggs.

"Nonsense,' cried Mrs. B "Don't the Squigges, who went into bankruptcy last summer, live just as well, if not a little better, than before? Now' Boggs do oblige me by buying a file.'

"Buying a file? What for?'

"So that you can file your petition. Do it this very day, and it will be in the morning papers. Then your wife and children can hold their heads up with the best of 'em. Somehow I feel that we are under a sort of a cloud now. People look at us as much as to say, 'There's something the matter with the Boggs'."

"Mrs. Boggs, I never take advantage of nothing.'

"I know it. And that's what keeps us under. But couldn't you put in a petition? You know there is a petition up stairs that we don't need. You could take it down and—'

"Woman, how foolish you talk. You don't know anything about the business.'

"But I do know that we are getting left, and it won't be long, you will find, before folks give up inviting us anywhere. Haven't you any liabilities?'

"I have liabilities,' replied Boggs, "but I haven't any ability to lie.'

"Oh, you're too nice for anything where the welfare of your family is concerned. Tell me about your assets.'

"I wouldn't have any if I did as neighbor Soggs does across the street.'

"How's that?' asked Mrs. B.

"Why, the ass-sets around all day doing nothing, and it is no wonder that he had to apply to the bankrapt court for relief,' Then Boggs lauged a low, contented laugh at his little joke.

Said Mrs. B., tartly. "You'll bankrupt your stock of wit if you keep drawing on it after that fashion. Then you won't become a bankrupt to maintain our social position?'

"No, I won't,' said Boggs bluntly.

"Then I give you due notice that I shall receive or make no calls. I shall give up our pew in church and take the children out of school. I shall close up the house, give out that we have gone into the country, and we will all live in the kitchen. If we can't do like the rest of folks and be somebody, there is no use trying to live.'

Never Known to Fail.

Dr. Morris' Syrup of Tar, Wild Cherry and Horehound has never been known to fail in permantly curing obstinate coughs, colds, croupe, whooping cough, nor any diseases of the respiratory organs, and it does it, too, at once. UNNUMBERED GRAVES.

Yon hillside, with its shafts of gleaming white
Bathed in the glory of the setting sun,
Holds many a grave where, hidden from our sight,
Some loved one sleeps, life's toil and labor done.
But there are graves over whose slumbering mould
No polished marble rears its stately head,
And where no fragrant flowers above unfold
To waken pity for the quiet dead.

There are the graves deep down within our hearts,
Where lie the hopes and dreams of early years,
Buried from sight, but signaled by such marks
As only can be made by blood and tears—
Some early love that crowned us in our youth,
And made life glorious for a short sweet hour—
Some cherished promise, robbed of strength and truth,
Crushed in the morning of its new-born power.

Here is the spot where memory has engraved
The form and face of one we called a friend,
One for whose welfare we would else have braved
Censure and heartache to the bitter end.
But [illegible]
Before the treachery of the smiling eyes
A heavy [illegible]. The cold world, if it saw,
Would proffer pity in a thousand lies.

So life goes on. We lay the forms away
Of things we loved too wisely, but too well
And in the lapse of years we learn to stay
The fretful chanting of their funeral knell.
We learn to smile, before the smiling throng,
Although the adder's fangs be deeply set;
And join, perhaps, our voices in the song,
To soothe the pain we never can forget.

And thus we learn to envy the calm rest
Of those who sleep beneath the silent sod.
Bound with life's galling chains, we know 'tis best
To bend our heads and pass beneath the rod.
And when we see some mourners heavy clad
In robes of black, haggard, with tear-dimmed eye,
We know their lives would be more bright and glad
Could they but reason—it is life to die.

Mourn not the slumbering dead, but rather say,
Blest are the sleepers. Years may come and go;
Heads that are brown and gold may turn to gray;
But they are done with earth and tears and woe.
Somewhere, we know, beyond the world of stars,
They will at last have found sweet Lethe's stream;
Some time we'll meet them at God's judgment bar,
Where life is love, and love one long true dream.

PRUDENCE GRAY.

That's my name, for father said there wasn't a better barge on the river than the Prudence, and if I was called the same he was sure there would never be a better girl.

Poor father! He was always very fond of me, and my earliest remembrances are of sitting on the tiller and having a ride, when he stood there of an evening steering the barge, with the great cinnamon-red sail filled out by the wind, and the water foaming and bubbling by us as we ran up the river toward the big city, where the ships lay close together in dock and against the wharves, emptying their loads or waiting for others before going away across the sea.

I used to think our barge, which was a very small billy-boy, if you know what that is—if you don't, I must tell you that it's a barge built with rounded ends and low bulwarks, meant for carrying loads up rivers, but built also to be able to go out to sea a little while, running along the coast—I used to think our barge, I say, a very, very large ship, till I grew old enough to compare it with those that passed us going up or down the river, and then it used to seem to me that it would be wonderfully fine to go on board one of those great ships and go sailing away—far away—across the ocean, instead of just coasting along to Sheerness and up the Medway, as we used to go, year after year, loaded deep down in the water with pottery or hops, or even bricks.

I can't tell you how my child-life slipped away, living with mother and father on board that barge, in a little bit of a cabin with a tiny stove; all I know is that I was very happy, and that I never hardly went ashore, and when I did I was frightened and wanted to get back, and at last I seemed to have grown all at once into a great girl, and father and I were alone.

Yes, quite alone, for mother had left us very suddenly, and we had been ashore at Sheerness, father and I, and came back from the funeral and were sitting on the cabin hatch, before I could believe it was anything but a terrible dream, and that I should not wake and find that she was alive once more, as blithe and cheery as ever, ready to take the tiller or pull at a rope, the same as I did when father wanted any help.

Father was a changed man after that, and, as a couple of years slipped by, the work on the barge fell more and more into my hands, and I used to smile at myself as I saw how big and red and strong they had grown. For father grew quiet and dull day by day, and used to have a stone bottle filled whenever he went ashore, and then sit with it in the cabin all alone till I called him to come and help with the sail.

Not that I wanted much help, for ours was only a small barge, and once started, with a fair wind, I could manage her well enough; while, when we had to tack backward and forward across the river mouth, I could always lock the tiller by the rope that hung onto the belaying pin, and give it a hitch on this side or that side, till I had taken a pull at the sheet and brought the barge around on the other tack.

I must have passed half my life in those days leaning back against that tiller, with its end carved to look like a great acorn, and the name of the old barge, Prudence, cut deep in the side. There I'd stand looking out ahead as we glided along over the smooth sea, passing a buoy here and a light there, giving other barges and smacks a wide berth, and listening to the strange, squealing noise of the gulls as they wheeled, and hovered, and swept by me, so closely sometimes that I could almost have touched them with my hand.

Our barge was well known all about the mouth of the river and far up beyond the bridge; but, somehow, I don't know how it was, the men on the different boats we passed had always a kind hail or a wave of the hand for us, as we glided by, if we were too far off for the friendly shout to reach us.

Sometimes I'd run the barge pretty close to the great ships and steamers, inward and outward bound, so as to look at the ladies I saw on board; not that I cared to do so very often, because it seemed to make me sad, for the faces I looked on seemed to be so different to mine that I felt as if I was another kind of being, and it used to set me wondering and make me think; and at such times I've leaned against the tiller and dreamed and dreamed in a waking fashion of how I would like to read and write and work, as I had seen ladies sitting and reading and working, on the decks of the big ships, under the awning; and then I had to set my dreams aside and have a pull at the sheet or take a reef in the sail, because the wind freshened and my dreams all passed away.

I don't think poor father meant it unkindly, but he seemed to grow more and more broken and helpless every day; and this frightened me and made me work to keep the barge clean and shipshape, lest the owners should come on board and see things slovenly, and find fault with father and dismiss him, and that I knew would break his heart. So I worked on, and in a dull, heavy way father used to thank me; and the time glided on, till one day, as we were lying off Southend, with the sea glassy and not wind enough to fill the sails, I felt my cheeks begin to burn as I leaned back against the tiller, and would not turn my head, because I could hear a boat being sculled along towards us, and I knew it was coming from the great leeboard barge lying astern.

"He's coming to see father," I said to myself at last in a choking voice; and, as a hail came, I was obliged to turn, and there stood up in the little boat he was sculling with an oar over the stern John Grove, in his dark trousers, blue jersey and scarlet cap; and as I saw his sunburnt face and brown arms and hands, I felt my heart beating fast, and knew he was not coming to see father, but to see me.

We had hardly ever spoken, but I had known John Grove for years now, and we had nodded and waved hands to one another often as we had passed up and down the river.

"Heave us a rope, my lass," he said as he came close in; and I did it dreamily, and as soon as I had done so I began to pull it back, but it was too late; he had hitched it round the thwart of his boat, and was up and over the side before I could stir; and then he stood looking down upon me, while I felt sometimes hot and sometimes cold, as if I could not speak.

"Do you want to see father?" I said at last.

"No, my lass," he said quietly, "I want to see you."

"Me!" I faltered, with my face burning.

"Yes, you, my lass," he said; and his handsome brown face lit up, and he looked so manly as he laid his hand on my arm.

"Prudence, my gal," he said, "we're both young yet, for I'm not 26, but I thought it was time I spoke to you."

"Spoke to me?" I said, with my face burning still.

"Yes, my lass, spoke to you; for we've been courting now a matter of four years."

"Oh, John," I cried, bursting out laughing and feeling more at my ease, "why, we've hardly spoken to one another."

"That's nice," he said, drawing a long breath. "Over again."

"Over again? What?" I said.

"Call me John," he replied.

"Well then, John," I cried hastily.

"That's right, Prudence; but as I was going to say, not spoken to one another! Well, how could we, always taking our turn at the tiller as we were? But all the same, my lass, I've been always courting of you, night and day, these four years, and looking out and longing for the time when the Prudence would come in sight and I could give you a hail and get a wave of the hand back."

I could feel the color coming into my cheeks again as I heard him speak, and knew how anxiously I had looked out for his barge coming up or down the river, and then I began wondering what it all meant, and soon knew.

"Prudence, my lass," he said, "I've saved up £10, all my own, and our owner has just given me command of a new barge, with as pretty a cabin as you'd wish to see, and so, my lass, I thought I'd ask you if, so be as now we've been courting four years, you wouldn't come to me and be my wife."

"No," I said, "no," and shook my head. "I belong to father, and could never leave him—never."

"But you'll have to some day, Prudence," he said, looking dreadfully downhearted and miserable.

"No," I said, "I shall never leave him; he wants me more and more every day, and I must stay."

"Prudence," he said sharply, "you ain't playing with me, are you?"

"Playing with you?"

"Yes; I mean you ain't going to take up with anyone else, and go aboard any other barge—no, no," he cried. "I won't be so mean as to ask you that. But Prudence, dear, some day you may have to leave him, and when you do, will you please recollect as John Grove loves you better than aught else in the wide world, and is waiting for you to come?"

"Yes, John," I said simply.

"You mean it, Prudence?" he cried, in delight, as he caught my hand.

"Yes, John; I don't know anybody else, and there's no one as cares for me."

"Hundreds on the river," he said sharply.

"Then I don't care for them, John," I said simply; "and if you like me, and I ever do—leave—oh, dear! what am I saying?"

I sat down on a fender and covered my face with my coarse, red hands, and began to cry; but he took my hands down, and looked long and lovingly in my face, with his great, honest, brown eyes; and then he couldn't speak, but seemed to choke. At last he gasped out:

"Thanky, Prudence, thanky. I'm going away now to wait, for you'll come to me some day, I know."

I didn't answer him.

"For the time may come, my lass, when you'll be all alone in the world; and when it does come, there's the cabin of the Betsy Ann, clean painted up, and waiting for you, just as her master's awaiting, too."

He went quietly over the side and cast off the rope, and was gone before I knew it; and I sat there in the calm afternoon and evening, sometimes crying, sometimes feeling hopeful, and with a sense of joy at my heart, such as I never had felt before.

And so that evening deepened into night, with the barge a quarter of a mile astern of us, and no wind coming, only the tide to help us on our way.

It must have been about 10 o'clock at night, when I was forward seeing to the light hoisted up to keep anything from running into us, when I heard father come stumbling up from the cabin and make as if to come forward to me.

"Prue," he cried, "Prue!"

"Yes, father, coming," I said; and then I uttered a wild shriek, and rushed toward where the boat hung astern by her painter, hauled her up and climbed in, for no sooner had I answered than I heard a cry and a heavy splash, and I knew father had gone overboard.

I was into the boat in a moment, and had the scull over the stern, paddling away in the direction that the cry had come from; but, though I fancied in those horrible minutes that I saw a hand stretched out of the water, asking as it were for help, I paddled and sculled about till I was far from our barge, and then sank down, worn out, to utter a moan of horror, and sob, "Oh, father! father! what shall I do?"

"Is that you, Prudence?" said a voice.

"Yes, John, yes," I cried, looking out through the darkness, out of which a boat seemed to steal till it was alongside, when John stretched out his hand and took mine.

"Quick!" I gasped, "save him, John—father—gone overboard!"

"When you shrieked out, Prue?"

"Yes, yes," I wailed; "oh, save him! save him!"

"My poor lass," he said, "that's a good quarter of an hour ago, and the tide's running strong. I've been paddling about ever since, trying to find you, for I went up to the barge and you were gone."

"But, father," I wailed, "father—save him!"

"My poor little lass," he said, tenderly, "I'd jump into the water now if you bid me, but what can I do, you know, Prudence, what can I do?"

I did not answer, for I did know that he must have been swept far away before then; and I was beginning to feel that I was alone, quite alone in the world.

It was quite six months after that dreadful night that, one evening, John came ashore from his barge to the cottage, where I was staying with his mother, and had been ever since he had brought me there, without seeing him to speak to—only to wave my hand to him as he sailed by. That evening he came and looked wistfully at me and said but little, and at last his time was up, and he rose to go.

I walked down to his boat with him, and on the way he told me that he had got leave to alter the name of his barge, and it was called the Prudence, too; and then, without a word about the past, he was saying good-by, when I put my hands in his and said quietly:

"John, dear, I haven't forgot my promise."

"And you are alone now, Prudence, my lass," he cried, eagerly.

"No, John, no," I said softly, as the tears ran down my cheeks, "I never shall be while you live."

"Never, my lass, never," he cried. "And you'll be my little wife?"

"Yes, John, yes; I promised you."

"When I come back from this voyage?"

"Yes, John, when you will," I said, and with one long hand pressure we parted, and I went back to wait for another month, and then I was to be his happy little wife.

And there seemed no change, for I was once more on the river or out at sea, leaning upon the tiller and gazing straight before me, with the gulls wailing as they wheeled, and dipped, and skimmed, or settled upon the water; while the soft wind gently stirred the print hood that was lightly tied over my wind-ruffled hair. Only a bargeman's young wife living on the tide, but very happy; for John often points to the great ships that pass us, with their Captains in their gold-laced caps, and, as he does so, he whispers:

"Not with the best among them, Prue, not with the best; I wouldn't even change places with a King."

And if he is as happy as I, dear John is right.—Cassell's Magazine.

Recreations of the Ancients.

Paulus Æmilius came into the Roman camp one day, just before the battle of Cannæ, with a last-summer's hat on his head. It was crushed and dented; it had been slept in many times too often; once it had been hit with a half a watermelon; the boys, on one occasion, had filled it half full of bricks and set it out on the sidewalk for the Roman citizens to kick (April 1, B. C. 218), and altogether it was not just the kind of a hat a Roman Consul might be expected to wear in a camp. To him his colleague, Varro:

"Æmilius, why is that hat of yours like your wife's new bonnet?"

Æmilius, who was probably thinking of the dreadful thrashing Hannibal was going to give him, sighed, and said he didn't know, unless it was "mashed" on her husband.

But Varro wouldn't listen to that, and Æmilius tried again:

"Because there is a good deal of illusion about it."

Terentius told him he couldn't stay in unless he could put up something better than that.

Æmilius suggested that the bonnet you had to tie on the hair, while the hat would tie on the tear itself.

But his colleague said this was no sample-room, and he hoped he would remember he was a Consul at Rome.

And then Æmilius said if it wasn't because they were both "worn out" he wouldn't guess any more.

"It is because," replied Terentius Varro, with great severity, "it is an used tile."

"Hey!" inquired his colleague, in great amazement.

"It is an used style—a new style," Varro replied.

Æmilius respondit non (didn't say anything) sed maximus cumulus accesseri: (but thought within himself) quum autem praestiterim tamdin (that he didn't see why he should call) ejus non fuit recusandum (his hat a tile), nisi (unless) hac præteranda non sunt (because it had so often) per hosce annos (of late years) ita se jam pro cive (had a brick in it).—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

While oysters are beyond the reach of any but the rich or reckless in England and France, Holland has enough to spare, and sends France some three millions annually. The Dutch Government has, since 1872, laid down certain restrictions on oyster dredgings with satisfactory results. Up to that year it was free.

MITTS AND CLEAN FINGERS.

Daisy's Godmother Advises as to Her Toilet.

[From the Boston Transcript.]

After giving Daisy the most judicious advice as to sun shades, she proceeds to mitts, saying: "Well, Daisy, if you will have the truth, you ought not to wear mitts until you know how to wash your hands and clean your finger nails. Don't flush and get angry. You are no worse than most girls and most women. I dislike mitts because I see them go out of fashion, and I always think of them as worn on big red paws, grasping a market basket, but I also like them because they disclose such a multitude of small sins against neatness. Pretty girls come here and play Mendelssohn and Chopin to me, and I am grateful, and wish that I dared to tell them how much prettier their hands should look if I had the care of them. The little ladies mean to be neat, but they think that they cannot make their dimpled finger-joints perfectly clean without roughening the skin, and so they make no effort to do so. Very likely they have a hang-nail or two, and seem to regard it as a dispensation of fate for which they are not accountable; and, as for their nails, I have not seen a pretty set on that key-board. Somebody wrote a long story the other day about a nail doctor who, for a stated fee, keeps the hands of French ladies in order. We need a legion of nail doctors here."

"I'm sure," said Daisy, with a pout, "I wash my hands often enough."

"But you never wash them thoroughly," is the sharp retort. "Go and do it now."

Daisy obeys, and, after a great splashing and rubbing of soap and scrubbing of nail-brush, and a hasty polish with a towel, holds out ten pink digits for inspection.

"Washed!" says the fairy godmother with intense scorn. "Frightened with water, as my grandmother used to tell me! Now do as I bid you. First, soap your hands, brush your nails inside and out; now rub on Indian meal, and then rinse your hands. Think they are clean, do you? Oblige me by washing your left hand in the liquid in that bottle. You see that it is ten shades whiter than the right. What is it? Oxalic acid. Now rub a drop of glycerine on your hands, and then dry them. Pretty well; but, Daisy, what do you do to your nails?"

"I clean them with a sharp penknife," half sobs Daisy, looking ruefully at the contrast between her broad, irregularly-shaped nails and the fairy godmother's with her smoothly-rounded edges, polished pink surface, and pale crescent at the root. "And I can't help it," Daisy goes on, "if they are not pretty. They are just as they were made."

"That is quite true," said the god mother, "and much to your discredit. Suppose you left your hair just as it was made, and never braided or combed it; would that be meritorious? Never touch a penknife to your nails. Use a blunt point to clean them, and a file to trim them. Follow the line of the finger-tip in shaping them. There is a little instrument made of nickel, and combining point and file which you can buy at any apothecary's. Remember that the skin about the root of the nail should be carefully pressed back every day, and that the corners of the nail should not be filed too closely. It takes time to do all these things, but there are few toilet offices of more real importance. A well-kept hand will retain its beauty long after the hair is gray, the eyes dull, after the teeth have departed and the figure is only a memory of the past; but an ill-kept hand is a blemish that nothing can counterbalance. Moreover, Daisy, men notice it ten times more quickly than women, and nothing provokes more invidious remarks from them than soiled fingers and nails in mourning. You don't care for men? Of course not, Daisy, but I mention the fact. Now, as for mitts, you may have a pair of white silk ones to wear with your white suit, but no black ones. Wear gloves, Daisy, and keep your hands soft, and envy not the ladies in mitts—

If to their share some manly praise should fall,
Look at their nails and you'll forget it all.

What One Woman Did.

Miss Emma Bartlett, one of the most remarkable of American women, has just died in this city. Twenty-five years ago she came to America a penniless English girl, and she has since, by her own unaided exertions, amassed a large fortune. Over twenty years ago she set up for herself in the trade of harness-making and saddlery, starting with just enough money to buy leather for a few halters. She worked in a little loft on Pearl street, and sold her manufactures around the city. Her commercial abilities were marked, and it was not long before she employed several journeymen, and she soon extended her trade beyond the city. She finally traveled with samples of her wares, and, in course of time, visited every State in the Union, and gradually built up a large trade. Six years after she started, her business had outgrown the loft and filled a large building on Pearl street. She invented some machinery for harness-making, was the first to use the sewing-machine for sewing leather, and bought up all the patents on horse-bonnets, thereby securing a monopoly. She was very diminutive in stature, but was very masculine, full of energy and business talent, and could drive a sharp bargain with the sharpest. She has never had nor desired a business partner. For years she has occupied the whole of a five-story warehouse on Warren street, and has employed 100 workmen. Her rent, for the past seven years, has been $10,000 a year. She leaves her large property to relatives.—New York Tribune.

White Elephants.

The oldest of the white elephants, which the Times, of India, says was born in 1770, died in its Temple of Bangkok in November last. Every one knows that this famous white elephant, before which a whole people bow the knee, is the emblem of the Kingdom of Siam. It is honored with the most beautiful presents, for the Indians, full of the idea of metamorphosis, still believe that so majestic an animal could be animated by only the spirit of a god or of an Emperor. Each white elephant possesses its palace, a vessel of gold and harness resplendent with jewels. Several mandarins are attached to its service, and feed it with cake and sugar-cane. The King of Siam is the only personage before whom it bows the knee, and a similar salutation is rendered it by the monarch. The deceased idol was accorded a magnificent funeral. A hundred Buddhist priests officiated at the ceremony. The three surviving white elephants, preceded by trumpets and followed by an immense concourse of people, accompanied the funeral-car to the bank of the Menam, where the King and his noble lords received the mortal remains, which were transported to the opposite bank for burial. A procession of thirty vessels figured at that curious ceremony. All the floating-houses, ranged in double file on the Menam to the number of over 60,000, were adorned with flags and symbolical attributes.

The Old Man.

One time there was an old man whose back was bent, his step slow, and men who gazed upon his snowy hair and wrinkled face shook their heads and whispered to each other, "He is a good old man, who has not long to live."

The old man had been well off in his day, but when he found himself on the shady side of life, wife dead and home broken up, he said to his only son: "Here, William, take all I have, and let your home be my home until I die."

The son took the papers—you bet he did; and his father was given a cozy corner, a big chair and a corn-cob pipe.

All went well for a year or so, and then the son and the son's wife began to make it uncomfortable for the nice old man in the corner. They threw out hints, deprived him of his comforts, and one cold day in winter he was told that he had better go to Halifax—Nova Scotia.

The old man's heart was sore as he went out into the world to battle against hunger and cold, and when night came he cowered in a doorway, and wept like a child.

"Who is making that chin music up there?" called a reporter whose steps had been arrested by the sobs, and he went up the steps, patted the old man on the back, and sat by him until his story was told.

"Come down to the station with me," said the reporter, taking the old man's arm. "Your son is first cousin to the man who preferred buzzard to lamb; and I'll help you fix him."

Next morning one of the daily papers contained an item to the effect that an old gentleman named Goodheart had been found wandering the streets at night, and that when taken to the station $10,000 worth of United States bonds were found on him. The old man read it over three times, slapping his leg as he saw the point, and a beautiful smile covered his face and climbed up through his hair. In about an hour his son William rushed into the station and called out:

"Father, dear father, come home! All of us were crying all night long, and my wife is now lying in a comatose state on your account."

The old man went home with him, winking at the lamp-posts and smiling as he turned the corners. He had all of his comforts back, and the son bought him a costly pipe and a pair of box-toed boots that very day.

Well, as time went on, the son ventured to suggest that the bonds had better be turned over to him, and every time he said "bonds" the old man would smile and turn the subject.

The other day the father went to bed to die, and he smiled oftener than before as he lay waiting for the summons. The son said his heart was breaking, and then went through the old man's clothes to find the bonds. He didn't find any. He searched the barn and the garret and the cellar, and finally, when he saw that death was near, he leaned over the bed and whispered:

"Father, do you know me?"

"Oh, yes; I know you like a book," replied the dying man.

"And, father, don't you see this thing is killing me?"

"Yes, William, I see it."

"And, father—those—those—bonds, you know. I suppose you want them used to purchase a monument?"

"Yes, correct, William," whispered the father, winking a ghastly wink, and, as the same old smile covered his face, death came to take him to a better home.

When evening fell, the son and son's wife were wildly searching the straw bed to get their hands on those bonds.

The Late Thomas Winans.

Baltimore papers chronicle the death of Thomas Winans, one of the wealthiest residents of that city. His fortune is estimated at $20,000,000. He was the eldest son of Ross Winans, and was born in New Jersey in 1820. He inherited in a large degree the mechanical genius of his father, by whom he was trained as a practical machinist. When a young man he went to Russia as a member of the firm of Harrison & Eastwick, through whom he secured important contracts from the Russian Government for the construction of locomotives for the road between St. Petersburg and Moscow. While in Russia Mr. Winans amassed a large fortune, and, on returning to Baltimore, purchased a square for $52,000, where he built a residence after his own design, and laid out and decorated the grounds with great care and taste. After his return to this country Mr. Winans did not engage in active business, but busied himself with inventions and improvements in machinery, giving much of his time every day to the workshop. He spent a great deal of time in making experiments, and one of the subjects to which he especially devoted his attention for experimental purposes was ventilation. He made a number of experiments for the purpose of obtaining an approved system of ventilation, and erected a tower at his city residence with that object in view. His experiments in ship construction, resulting in the building of the "cigar steamer" which now lies rotting at Winans' wharf, are well known. He obtained a patent for an appliance by which carriages could be turned suddenly out of railroad tracks without danger to the wheels, and indeed was constantly engaged in mechanical work.

Twelve years and more ago thousands of hoop-skirts were manufactured annually in this country. Now the business is completely dead, not a single hoop-skirt manufactory being in operation.

TO ALBERT PIKE.

Suggested by His Poem Entitled "Every Year."

BY J. T. MORRISON.

To me each budding spring doth brighten
Every year,
And the fragrant blossoms whiten
Every year,
The April showers earlier quicken
The leafing trees, and verdure thicken
Every year.

Although I know I'm growing older
Every year,
The world to me does not grow colder
Every year;
Though sorrows with my loves are blended,
My joys of friendship are not ended
Every year.

Though my infirmities remind me,
Every year,
That my youth I leave behind me
Every year,
Yet affection's ties shall bind me
To this life (till death shall find me)
Every year.

And, as life's shadows lengthen,
Every year,
Then my thoughts of love shall strengthen
Every year;
More firmly grow the recollection
Of earthly friendships and affection
Every year.

The Henophone.

An intelligent farmer, living in Des Moines county, has invented a henophone, modeled on the principle of the telephone, by which one old reliable hen, occupying a central office in the henery, sits on all the nests about the establishment, leaving the other fowls free to lay eggs, scratch and cackle. As fast as a new nest contains the full complement of eggs, it is connected with the central office by a copper wire, and the business is settled. The only trouble with the machine is that it sits so hard that it hatches out the porcelain nest-eggs along with the others, so that one chick in every nest is born with glass eyes, and the farmer has to buy and train a dog to lead it around. This makes it expensive.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

SABBATH READING.

The Summons.

For bounteous feast the board is spread,
With costly plate, with fruitage rare;
A hundred lamps their luster shed
To gild the odor-laden air.
From distant nooks low music steals,
Preluding, with faint notes at first,
Such golden melody as outpeals
In one long, sweet, melodious burst.

The haughty master sees with pride
How royally his chamber sweeps
To where its imaged grandeurs hide
In either mirror's crystal deeps,
But prouder is the smile he wears
To think what nabobs, fine and grim,
Shall mount his mansion's marble stairs
And gravely sit and sup with him.

Now, ere the smile has left his lips,
All unannounced, a shape of gloom
Fleet through the massive portal slips
And stands within the lordly room.
Black-vestured, somber-browed it stands,
Marring the splendor like a blot,
With solemn face, with folded hands,
A guest that was expected not.

Full well the master knows that guest,
And cowers before his calm, grave eyes;
Then pointing, while he beats his breast,
Where bright the untasted banquet lies,
He wildly moans, with gasping breath,
"[illegible] spare [illegible] single day!"
The stranger answers: "I am Death,
I summon, and you must obey."

Ah, better when this guest appears,
That he, with unrelenting tread,
Should never drag us forth in tears,
But find us willing to be led.
Yes, better on that fated day,
If we, with resignation sweet,
Are glad in lowliest love to lay
Our burdens at the Savior's feet

A Voice from the Sea.

BY REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

"Yea, it shall be at an instant suddenly."—Isaiah xxix. 5.

"The Lord sent out a great wind into the sea."—Jonah i. 4.

About 4 o'clock in the afternoon of Lord's day, March 24, the inhabitants of London were startled by a sudden hurricane which all at once brought with it darkened clouds of dust, and for a short season raged furiously. Sitting in our study in quiet meditation we were aroused and alarmed by the noise of doors and windows, and the terrible howling of the blast as it swept upon its headlong course. Unhappy were travelers across heath and moor who were overtaken by such an overwhelming gust, for it gave no warning, and allowed no time to seek shelter. It was soon over, but it was followed by cold and dreary weather, and it would seem to have been a token that winter meant to make another struggle to assume his ancient throne. His Parthian arrow was driven forward with intense force and left its mark in ruin and death.

Just at the moment when landsmen were terrified by the threatening storm, her Majesty's training ship "Eurydice," which had returned from a cruise to the West Indies, was rounding Dunnose headland, off the Isle of Wight, with all plain sails and also her studding sails set. Those on board were all naturally anxious to reach their homes, and having only to round the coast and to anchor off Spithead they were making the best of the wind. The noble frigate was plainly seen from the lovely village of Shanklin; but one who was watching the fine vessel suddenly missed it and wondered why. She was hastening along with all sails set except her royals, and her ports open, when in a moment the fierce wind pounced upon her. It was in vain that the Captain ordered sail to be shortened; the ship lurched till her keel was visible, and in less time than it takes us to write it the ship capsized, and more than 300 brave seamen perished. Well might her Majesty's telegram speak of "the terrible calamity of the 'Eurydice.'" What mourning and lamentation had that one cruel blast scattered over the land! How swift is the swoop of death! How stealthy its step! How terrible its leap! In the midst of life we are on the verge of the sepulcher. This lesson is preached to us by those three hundred men who lie inshrouded in the all-devouring sea, with a gallant ship as their mausoleum.

Toll for the brave!
The brave that are no more!
All sunk beneath the wave,
Fast by their native shore!

Great is the peril of the ocean, but there are also dangers on the land, and at any moment we also may be summoned to appear before our God. Since this cannot be questioned, let each prudent man foresee the evil and prepare himself for it.

Another lesson which lies upon the surface of this sad event is this—never feel perfectly safe till you are in port. Many awakened souls are almost within the haven of peace, and are at this time rounding the headland of thoughtfulness, with the sails of earnest inquiry all displayed to the breeze. Their condition is very hopeful, but it is not satisfactory to those who are anxious about their eternal welfare, nor should it be satisfactory to themselves. They are steering for the harbor, they enjoy favoring winds, they have all sails set, but still they have not quite believed in Jesus, nor surrendered themselves to His grace. We who watch them can see that their ports are open, and we dread lest they should be overtaken by a sudden temptation and should suddenly be overturned at the very moment when our hopes are at their best. Is the reader in such case? Then let us beseech him not to be content till he has found Christ and so by faith has anchored in the harbor of "eternal salvation." Do not be happy, dear friend, till you are moored on the Rock of Ages, under the lee of the everlasting hills of divine mercy, through the atoning blood. It seems very wonderful that a ship which had been to sea so many times and had just completed a long winter's cruise in safety should at last go down just off the coast in a place where danger seemed out of the question. It is doubly sad that so many men should be within sight of a shore upon which they must never set their foot. To perish in mid ocean seems not so hard a lot as to die with the white cliffs of Albion so near; to die with the gospel ringing in our ears is still more sad. Never reckon the ship safe till it floats in the haven; never reckon a soul safe till it is actually "in Christ." The "almost persuaded" are often the last to be fully persuaded. Aroused, impressed, and moved to good resolutions, to tears, and even to prayers, yet men postpone decision, and by the force of Satan's arts are lost—lost when we all hoped to see them saved. O that seekers were wise enough to be distressed until they are thoroughly renewed. Any position short of regeneration is perilous in the extreme. The man-slayer would have been cut down by the avenger had he lingered outside the walls of the refuge-city; it would have been all in vain for him to have touched its stones or sheltered near its towers; he must be within the gates or die. Seekers after salvation, you are not safe till you actually close in with Jesus, place all your confidence in Him and become forever His. Shall it be so now, or will you abide in death? Rest not an hour. Trifle not for another moment; for death may seize you, or a spiritual lethargy may come over your soul from which you may never again be aroused. Give no sleep to your eyes nor slumber to your eyelids till your anchor has entered into that within the veil and you are saved in Christ Jesus.

A further lesson should be gleaned from the scant wreckage which as yet has floated up from the sunken vessel. Let us all take warning, and remember that we cannot tell when fierce temptation may assail us.

THE BRAIN.

[illegible]

(From the New York Tribune.)

The views expressed at the Washington convention of the physicians of insane asylums indicate somewhat the course of scientific opinion as to the functions of the brain. To the poets and the popular conception, the human skull will long remain "the dome of thought, the palace of the mind." To the student of physiology, the seat of the mental processes had been gradually narrowing and receding till finally Dr. Clark, of Toronto, tells us that no satisfactory evidence proves that mentality is localized beyond a focal point of the nerves at the base of the brain. We can better appreciate how great is this change from former views if we compare with such a conception the notions on which phrenology was based, when the various attributes of mind were supposed to display themselves in the "bumps" of the skull, and, in consequence, to reside on or near the circumference of the organ within. If the new views are to be accepted, much more than phrenology must be sacrificed. Brain-power, the new doctrine teaches, is not dependent alone on the size of the skull's contents. Probably, also, considerations of shape will follow those of size; people with high foreheads will gain no reputation from their frontal expanses, and a head as low-crowned as that of a mound-builder will be credited with a full average supply of intellect.

It must be admitted that there are some facts hard to explain under the old doctrine. Dr. Brown-Sequard described a few years ago a large number of cases where people who had lost half or more of their brains succeeded in keeping quite as much sense as they had ever possessed. This was partially explained on the theory that either half of the brain may perform the functions of the whole. But other instances were related where the full mental capacity survived a partial loss of both hemispheres of the brain. However, there was the cerebellum, the little brain, to fall back upon. A great deal of faith has been pinned to the cerebellum by scientific folks who have lost faith in their brains. But now comes Dr. Walter Kemper, of Oshkosh, with the post-mortem examination of a patient who was interested in the news of the day, conversed intelligently on politics, religion and science, and was well versed in English literature, yet had suffered from a disease which wasted away one side of her cerebrum and the other side of her cerebellum, till neither was of one-fourth the natural size. Such instances seem more conclusive than the famous experiments upon pigeons, in which the birds not only survived the extirpation of their entire brains, but even regained, apparently, their normal senses and capacity after the lapse of a few weeks.

If it be conceded that the mental faculties reside in the focus of nerves at the base of the brain, there will be less difficulty in obtaining correct notions about the insect world. Few insects have any brains, yet many of them—as, for instance, Sir John Lubbock's ants—have sound, discriminating intellects. In fact, certain savage ants of South America hold tracts of land, and wage successful war against man when he attempts to plant a residence on their domain. Big brains, in that case, are powerless against no brains. What, then, it may be asked, is the use of the organ in question, if it does not serve as the seat of mind? Dr. Brown-Sequard's answer was that the brain, like the hand, does the work of the mind, as it is ordered; but is the instrument, not the motor. That view of the matter suggests at least one sensible precept: If our brains are mere tools, we should at all events keep them in good order.

In the Interest of Manhood.

Two men came into the Mayor's office recently, and, halting in front of the judicial desk, doffed their beavers:

"What can I do for you?" said the urbane official.

"Well, sur, me name it is Timothy Megee. I was wonst well known in these parts for foightin', warnt I, Si?" turning to his companion, who growled out "he thought he war." "I whaled them all down in Blue Rock, didn't I, Si?"

Si said he believed he did.

"Si, did I iver lit a man go away wantin', when he wanted a foight?"

Si said he didn't believe he ever did.

"I want to file an affidavy against Emmanuel Compton for foightin', because he wouldn't shtay wid me. I niver had a mon arristed in me loife that gave me foight and shtayed wid me. I care not whether he whupt me or I whupt him, if he shtayed wid me, but, when a mon shtrikes me and runs away and shows the white feather, I call that cowardly, and I want him arristed. He took a run and a jump and hit me, but he didn't knock me down, did he, Si?"

Si said he didn't.

"Make out an affidavy, Mr. Mayor, and have him arrested for foightin'."

It was made out.—Zanesville (Ohio) Times.

KING-KILLING.

A Thirty-Years' Record in Europe and America of Attempts on the Lives of Rulers.

1848—Nov. 26.—The life of the Duke of Modena was attempted.

1849—June 12.—The Crown Prince of Prussia was attacked at Minden.

1850—June 28.—Robert Pate, an ex-Lieutenant in the army, attempted to assassinate Queen Victoria.

1851—May 22.—Sefeloque, a workman, shot at Frederick William IV., King of Prussia, and broke his forearm.

1852—Sept. 24.—An infernal machine was found at Marseilles with which it had been intended to destroy Napoleon III.

1853—Feb. 18.—The Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria was grievously wounded in the head while walking on the ramparts at Vienna by a Hungarian tailor named Libenyi.

1853—April 16.—An attempt on the life of Victor Emmanuel was reported to the Italian Chamber.

1853—July 5.—An attempt was made to kill Napoleon III. as he was entering the Opera Comique.

1854—March 20.—Ferdinand Charles III., Duke of Parma, was killed by an unknown man, who stabbed him in the abdomen.

1855—April 28.—Napoleon III. was fired at in the Champs Elysees by Giovanni Pianeri.

1856—April 28.—Raymond Fuentes was arrested in the act of firing on Isabella, Queen of Spain.

1856—Dec. 8.—Agesilas Milano, a soldier, stabbed Ferdinand III. of Naples, with his bayonet.

1857—Aug. 7.—Napoleon III. again. Bartoletti, Gibaldi and Grillo were sentenced to death for coming from London to assassinate him.

1858—Jan. 14.—Napoleon III. for the fifth time. Orsini and his associates threw fulminating bombs at him as he was on his way to the opera.

1861—July 14.—King William, of Prussia, was for the first time shot at by Oscar Becker, a student, at Baden-Baden. Becker fired twice at him, but missed him.

1862—Dec. 18.—A student named Dossios fired a pistol at Queen Amalia, of Greece (Princess of Oldenberg), at Athens.

1863—Dec. 24.—Four more conspirators from London against the life of Napoleon III. were arrested at Paris.

1865—April 14.—President Lincoln was shot by J. Wilkes Booth.

1866—April 6.—A Russian named Kavarasoff attempted Czar Alexander's life at St. Petersburg. He was felled by a peasant, who was ennobled for the deed.

1867—The Czar's life was again attempted during the great Exposition at a review in the Bois de Boulogne at Paris.

1868—June 10.—Prince Michael, of Servia, was killed by the brothers Radwarowitch.

1871—The life of Amadeus, the new King of Spain, was attempted.

1872—August.—Col. Gutieriez assassinated President Balta, of the republic of Peru.

1873—Jan. 1.—President Morales, of Bolivia, was assassinated.

1875—August.—President Garcia Mareno, of Ecuador, was assassinated.

1877—June.—President Gill, of Paraguay was assassinated by Commander Molas.

1878—May 22.—The Emperor William of Germany was shot at again, this time by Emile Henri Max Hoedel, alias Lehmann, the Socialist. Lehmann, it will be remembered, fired three shots at the Emperor, who was returning from a drive with the Grand Duchess of Baden, but missed him.

To this list we must now add a third attempt on the life of the Emperor William, at Berlin.

The City of Marseilles.

Marseilles is, we believe, the second largest city in France, and has a population exceeding that of Baltimore, being now about 400,000. At this season of the year, of an evening, the whole population seem to be on the streets, and intermixed with them are natives of many parts of the globe, such as Turks, Arabs, Algerines, Greeks, Italians, Egyptians and Spaniards, all arrayed in their national costumes. A stroll through the streets is a novel sight to Americans, and our young friends enjoyed it amazingly, and voted Marseilles to be a bright and beautiful city.

Marseilles is famous for its fine drives, and we had no sooner got rid of the dust of travel than we started for a general reconnoissance of its beauties. The principal drive is through the southern section of the city, consisting of a broad avenue about 200 feet wide, along which are the residences or chateaux of solid men of this fine commercial city, each surrounded with spacious gardens, ornamented with statuary and fountains. This avenue has three rows of immense sycamore trees on each side of it which form a perfect arch and shade over the main drive, extending about three miles to the city park. This park embraces about 600 acres, bordering on the Mediterranean, with numerous mountain islands in the distance rising thousands of feet from its blue depths. The fountains, cascades, lakes and flower-beds ornamenting this park make it more beautiful and attractive than the famous Bois de Boulogne of Paris. The cultivation of flowers and the love of them appear to be universal with the French. In every large city there are regular flower-markets, where nothing else is sold, and the park of Marseilles is almost one continuous flower-garden. Between the walls of the park and the Mediterranean there are a multitude of bathing-houses, where thousands of persons, both male and female, in bathing-dresses, enjoy themselves in the ocean.—C. C. Fulton's letter to the Baltimore American.

A Self-Boring Well.

An artesian well, now partly completed at Pesth, Hungary, has reached a depth of over 1,000 yards, and will be the deepest of its kind. It is intended to supply hot water; at present, that which is obtained has a heat of 160 deg. Fahrenheit, and it is expected that lower strata will furnish water at 178 deg. The most curious feature about this well is the adaptation to it of automatic machinery for boring, the water-power for which is supplied by the well itself. By this means the boring has been conducted at double its previous rate. The notion is entertained that the abundant supply of warm water may be used in cultivating tropical plants in the gardens of the neighborhood.

Out of the Jurisdiction.

A good story is told of a Vermont ex-Judge and ex-member of Congress. The latter held court in Essex county, when a long-standing case, in which an especially sharp lawyer had been engaged, was heard. The Judge ruled the law points against the lawyer in question, and he lost the case. After tea, the counsellor, who was staying at the same inn in Guildhall with the Judge, approached the latter and invited him to take a drive, and the Judge accepted. A few minutes behind a good trotter took them over the line into New Hampshire, when the attorney turned to his companion and said:

"Judge, I presume, now we are in New Hampshire, we are peers?"

The court assented.

"Well," rejoined the lawyer, "you blank old fool, how came you to decide that case against me?" And, expending a part of his temper upon the innocent animal that drew the carriage, he sped away from the line of Vermont, increasing his vituperation with the distance from the Judge's jurisdiction.

Finally, exhausted, he turned his horse and drove back to Guildhall. As the horse's hoofs sounded on the bridge, which brought the riders again in the Green Mountain State, the now-serene lawyer gracefully raised his hat and said:

"Judge, we have had a very pleasant ride together. I am greatly obliged for your company, and hope on some future occasion to have the honor of a drive with you again."

A Life Riddle Solved.

Once upon a time, the conversation having turned, in presence of Dr. Franklin, upon riches, and a young person in the company having expressed his surprise that they ever should be attended with such anxiety and solicitude, instancing one of his acquaintances, who, though in possession of unbounded wealth, yet was as busy and more anxious than the most assiduous clerk in his counting-house; the doctor took an apple from a fruit-basket and presented it to a little child, who could just totter about the room. The child could scarcely grasp it in its hand. He then gave it another, which occupied the other hand. Then choosing a third, remarkable in size and beauty, he presented that also. The child, after many ineffectual attempts to hold the three, dropped the last on the carpet, and burst into tears.

"See there," said the philosopher, "there is a little man with more riches than he can enjoy!"

TWO AMERICAN girls have scandalized pious Paris by fanning themselves in church, and, when the preacher said they must either stop waving those—that is, those blessed fans, or leave the sacred edifice, leaving it with much emphasis of tiny boot-heels and an awful frown.

WE still assert that Heart Disease can be cured, and ask you to read this:

I was afflicted for several years with Palpitation of the Heart, attended with dizziness and gradually increasing debility. For more than two years I was subject to severe darting pains through the heart, followed by a sense of suffocation and difficulty of breathing, threatening instant death. For eight months I was unable to lie down, but was obliged to sit bolstered up in bed, or in my chair, through the night. When asleep the motion of the heart would often stop, causing me to wake suddenly in great distress, and preventing me from getting necessary rest. I was very much reduced in flesh and strength, and had given up all hope of permanent relief, when I was induced by a friend to try the efficacy of the HEART REGULATOR. By the use of a few bottles I was restored to my usual health, and, for the last ten years, I have suffered no severe attacks. I cheerfully and gratefully recommend its use to all persons afflicted with Disease of the Heart.

MRS. E. P. REED, Concord, N. H.

The HEART REGULATOR is for sale by all druggists, at 50 cents and $1 per bottle.

WILHOFT'S TONIC!—UNFAILING AND INFALLIBLE!—This great Chill Tonic cures Chills without the intervention of doctors and their bills. THOUSANDS of dollars might be annually saved to farmers if they would give freely of Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders to their horses, cattle, sheep, hogs and fowl. They prevent disease and promote the growth. We said Sheridan's. Those put up in large packs are utterly worthless.

AFTER you have read all of the important news in this paper read the advertisements, and the "DON'T FORGET IT" advertisement in particular.

OLD Dr. Johnson was a benefactor. Seventy-five years ago he invented what is now called Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, the wonderful success of which in the cure of diseases of the head, throat and lungs is truly astonishing. No family should be without it.

FRANK LESLIE, ESQ., of the Illustrated Weekly, says: "For some time past I have been using BURNETT'S COCOAINE, and think it far preferable to anything I have ever used for the hair."

DON'T FORGET IT—That you ought to read the advertisement so headed in another column of this paper.

The Greatest Discovery of the Age is Dr. Tobias' celebrated Venetian Liniment! 30 years before the public, and warranted to cure Diarrhea, Dysentery, Colic and Spasms, taken internally; and Croup, Chronic Rheumatism, Sore Throats, Cuts, Bruises, Old Sores, and Pains in the Limbs, Back and Chest, externally. It has never failed. No family will ever be without it after once giving it a fair trial. Price, 40 cents. DR. TOBIAS' VENETIAN HORSE LINIMENT, in Pint Bottles, at One Dollar, is warranted superior to any other, or NO PAY, for the cure of Colic, Cuts, Bruises, Old Sores, etc. Sold by all Druggists. Depot—10 Park Place, New York.

At this season of the year the human system is liable to become disordered from the insufficient efforts of the liver to discharge the excess of bile. If nature is not assisted in her efforts, severe bilious attacks or prostrating fevers necessarily follow, causing great suffering and even death. A little timely precaution, however, will prevent all this, and may be found in that favorite household remedy SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR has been in use for half a century, and there is not one single instance on record where it has failed to effect a cure when taken in time according to the directions. It is, without doubt, the greatest LIVER MEDICINE in the world; is perfectly harmless, being carefully compounded from rare roots and herbs, containing no mercury or any injurious mineral substance. It takes the place of quinine and calomel, and has superseded these medicines in places where they have heretofore been extensively used. Procure a bottle at once from your druggist. Do not delay. Give it a fair trial, and you will be more than satisfied with the result obtained.

CAUTION.

As there are a number of imitations offered to the public, we would caution the community to buy no Powders or Prepared SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR unless in our Engraved Wrapper, with Trade-Mark, Stamp and Signature unbroken. None other is genuine.

Parting Words.

At last there comes a change, as changes will come. After a labor of nearly eight years, in the establishment of the COURIER, I retire from its management, feeling that I have used my utmost endeavors to give the people as good a local journal as my limited means would permit. While this labor has been a work of love, it has been surrounded with many cares and anxieties. It has not always been bright, genial sunshine. Sometimes it was very dark and depressing, and the future gave forth little of promise. Not being exultant in the hour of success, nor despondent in the hour of trial, I held steadily on in an earnest, zealous effort to do the best. I have tried to deal fairly and honestly with all, and many warm friends have gathered around me with words of encouragement. Sadly I break in upon these pleasant associations, and sever ties that have been so fruitful of the warmest friendship. With grateful thanks for the kindness, esteem and encouragement shown me, as editor of the COURIER, I bid all adieu.

Messrs. Eli W. Brown and Theodore Reed of Columbia City, will hereafter have editorial charge of the COURIER, and will take possession next Monday. Mr. Reed will remove to this place in a few days, and enter upon the management of the paper. I have personally known these gentlemen for a number of years, and can truly say that they are men of solid worth and merit, and sound in the Democratic faith. I feel that the COURIER is going into good hands, and that they will bring real ability and a wide experience to give it prestige and power in the future.

Democratic Convention.

The Democratic Convention, for the purpose of nominating officers to be filled in DeKalb county, at the October election, 1878, met at Auburn June 22d, pursuant to the call of the Central Committee, and was called to order by J. R. Lanning, chairman of Central Committee.

On motion of W. H. Dills, Chas. A. O McClellan, of Waterloo, a member of the Democratic State Central Committee was chosen permanent chairman of the convention.

On motion of G. W. Maxwell, of Butler, W. H. Dills, of Auburn, and John Robbins, of Garrett, were chosen secretaries.

On motion of J. D. Kelly, of Smithfield, Hon. W. H. Madden, of Wilmington, was chosen vice president.

Thereupon the several townships and election precincts were called and responded, and the call and ratio of representation of the several election precincts, as set forth for the convening of this convention by the Central Committee, was approved and affirmed.

On motion of Mr. Dills, the following resolution was adopted:

RESOLVED,—That the several delegations of the different election precincts present, select from such precincts delegates to the Congressional and Judicial convention as follows: One name for each one hundred voters therein, and one for each fraction of 50 or over. And also they select and present to this convention the name of a person from each election precinct to act as a member of the Central County Committee for the coming two years, and that said committee meet immediately after the adjournment of this convention and have power to select their chairman, either from or outside the members of such committee.

On motion of J. R. Lanning the following persons were appointed a committee on resolutions, to-wit:

Thereupon the committee on resolutions submitted the following report which was unanimously adopted, viz:

RESOLVED, 1st—That we fully endorse the action of the majority of the House of Representatives in Congress in their investigation of the election frauds by which the country was cheated and robbed of the honest and rightful possession of the offices of President and Vice President, and insist that the guilty parties, wherever they may be, and wherever found should be punished, truth and justice vindicated and a repetition of a like offense be made impossible.

2nd—That the National bank notes should be retired and in lieu thereof, there should be issued by the government an equal amount of treasury notes with full legal tender quality.

3d—That we are in favor of making the United States notes, commonly called "Greenbacks," a full legal tender in payment of all debts, public or private, except such obligations only as are by the terms of the original contract under which they were issued, expressly payable in coin.

4th—That the right to issue paper money as well as coin in the exclusive prerogative of the government, and such money should be issued in such amounts as the sound business interests of the country may from time to time require.

5th—That we are in favor of such legislation by Congress as will authorize the taxation by the states of the United States notes and bonds to be hereafter issued, in common with all other property and money.

6th—That we endorse and re-affirm the principles and declarations set forth and adopted by the democratic State Convention, held in February, 1878.

Spencerville Items.

—Strawberries at Dr. Emanuel's last Saturday evening.

—Our merchants are buying large quantities of wool.

—W. H. Kinsey is at his old place with the Barney brothers.

—Dr. Houghton expects to occupy his new house in a few weeks.

—Spencerville sent a large delegation to the county convention.

—Mr. B Zimmerman has bought a lot and is making arrangements to build soon.

—Professor Starr visited our town and gave us an expose of spiritualism on Friday and Saturday evenings.

—True these are not war times, but guarding the property of absent families, assisted by the hired girl, is a pleasant pastime.

—An immense concourse of people assembled at this place Sunday to witness the ordinance of baptism, by immersion, performed by Rev. Lancaster, of M. P. Church, there being two candidates, residents of Maysville.

—Some of the friends of the candidates feel disappointed as to the action of the convention on Saturday, but by the time the election takes place we presume disappointment will yield and the machinery will be properly adjusted to secure victory to the choice of the convention.

Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of an execution to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court, in a cause wherein Edward Feidel is plaintiff, and James W. Case and Joseph E. Case and Enos L. Casebeer are defendants, requiring me to make the sum of four hundred and ninety-one dollars and ten cents, $491.10, with interest on said judgment and costs, I will expose at public sale to the highest bidder, on SATURDAY, JULY 13th, A. D. 1878.

Between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M. and 4 o'clock P. M., of said day, at the door of the Court House of DeKalb county, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate, to-wit:

Lot number five, 5, in Ashley's first addition to the town of Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said judgment, interest and costs I will at the same time and place, expose at public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said judgment, interest and costs.

Said sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation and appraisement laws.

The Hook and Ladder company have secured Ensley's Hall for the Fourth and will give a dance therein. They will have excellent music and all should attend, as they are taking this way to raise means to procure a more complete and attractive uniform.

There is some considerable effort being made to win the prize at the next fair for the best roads. The offering of a premium has had a good effect. Our roads are generally in good condition now, and a great deal of careful work has been done on them.

One of our farmers growled a little because he was offered only 95 cents for his wheat, but when he visited the boot upside down, and bought a pair of splendid gaitors for $1.25, he allowed things were about "eving."

Old coats and even little old hats can be used to advantage, by stopping up the holes, and made useful again, but what is the use of fooling away time on a pair of old boots or shoes, when you can buy a new pair good and cheap, at the boot upside down.

The ladies' social connected with the Presbyterian church will be entertained at the residence of S. B. Miller on next Friday afternoon and evening. All are cordially invited. Ladies will please provide themselves with napkins.

The New York Store is now the clothing emporium of DeKalb county, having added anew to their already large stock of clothing a large invoice from the eastern markets, making it the largest and best assorted stock of clothing in the county. Go and see before you buy your clothing.

The following puzzle has been handed us for publication, from Pile's school house:

James, John and William went to Butler to attend the caucus and got bluffed off. Then James took a back seat when he was called out. How far would they have to go to climb a tree

Orderly people will be thankful when the gang of drunken ditchers, now employed in this section, get through with their work.—Waterloo Press.

We are informed that the above does great injustice to several worthy persons, and that they were not concerned in anything worse than ejecting from their midst a thief and dead beat, who was the rowdy of the occasion.

Weamer has fitted up the Lunch Rooms lately occupied by Mrs. Humes and has everything in good shape. Last Saturday he fed quite a number and had a fine bill of fare, such as roast beef, roast veel, spring chickens, steak, fresh fish, &c. He has nice ice cream parlors connected therewith and serves up this delicacy in good shape.

Congressional Convention.

By advertisement, the time of the National Greenback Labor Congressional Convention for the Thirteenth Indiana District, is changed from the 18th, inst., to the 19th of July, next, to be held at Kendallville at 10 o'clock A. M. for the purpose of putting in nomination a Candidate for Congress.

Fourth of July Excursion.

The Pittsburg, Ft. Wayne & Chicago Railway, will sell excursion tickets over that line and branches operated by the Pennsylvania Company on the 3d, 4th and 5th of July, good for these three days, at reduced excursion rates. We are authorized by F. R. Myers, Esq., the Gen'l. Passenger and ticket agent of that road, to make this announcement.

Marble Works

Mr. Abner Niebel, of Tiffin, Ohio, will open up his marble works in this place the first of next month in the brick block south of the jail, on Ninth street. Mr. N. is connected with the extensive works of this kind at Tiffin, perhaps the largest in Northern Ohio, and a branch here will have facilities for doing work not to be excelled in this section. Orders for monuments &c. will receive prompt attention.

Prepare for the Fourth.

Excellent arrangements are being made for a grand celebration here on the Fourth. A meeting of the old settlers will take place for the first time in the county, and an organization will no doubt be effected. It is hoped that there will be a large number of this class in attendance. Hon. E. D. Hartman will deliver the oration. There will be fire works in the evening and several ascensions of illuminated balloons will be made.

The Freemont Dramatic Club will give one of their splendid temperance plays entitled "The Fruits of the Wine Cup," to-morrow evening at Ensley's Hall, for the benefit of the Red Ribbon Club at that place. This troupe is composed entirely of home talent, and come well reccommended, both as to their respectability and rendition of the play. All should turn out as they are worthy of a crowded house.

The Corunna Band will please except our thanks for a pleasant serenade tendered the family of the editor last Saturday, while he was up town getting kicked. In these days of extremes, it's consoling to know that happiness and misery do not dwell so far apart; that they alternate rapidly, and that a lowering cloud to-day may be succeeded by sunshine to-morrow. The band was pronounced the best heard here for some time and it is gratifying to know that it is one of the institutions of our county.

Several reasons why it will be to the interest of farmers to patronize L. M. Montgomery, at the Eel River Elevator: 1st. Because he will pay the highest cash price. 2d. Because grain is easily unloaded from wagons. 3d. Because he can clean and prepare it for market in a proper condition. 4th Becaused wheat shipped from this elevator will go as Michigan wheat. 5th. Because he has had much experience in handling grain. 6th. Because he expects to stay here and make this his permanent business point. 7th. Because he will not only buy wheat, corn, oats, etc., but hides, pelts, furs, rags or in fact anything the farmer may have to sell that will bare shipping.

The Albion New Era in speaking of the Pike—Bixler matter, says the death of Mr. Pike and the action of the coroner's jury have again brought before the public the incidents connected with this case, and to enable our readers to fully understand the facts connected with it, we make the following statement: Soon after the unfortunate shooting, which occurred on the 18th day of May, 1877, the grand jury of Noble county found an indictment against J. W. Bixler for an assault and battery with intent to kill. Before the case came up for a hearing in the circuit court, at the request of the prosecuting witness and his friends, (which documents are now on file on the court records) and by the advice of the ablest lawyers of northern Indiana, the then prosecutor, Wm. B McConnell, nolle prossed the case. To maintain a charge of felonious homicide, it must be fully established that death resulted from the wounds inflicted, and attorneys are united in the opinion that the law conclusively presumes that death did not result from such wounds unless it occurs within one year and one day from the time the injury was inflicted. This has been the law in such cases, we believe almost coeval with the existence of the courts of justice. As in this case death did not take place until after the expiration of one year and twenty days, of course an indictment of felonious homicide cannot be found by the grand jury.

The grand jury at their recent session adjourned without finding an indictment against any one, but since their adjournment, Chas. Irish, of Wolcottville, has been committed to jail on a charge of petty larceny, we believe, and the grand jury will be reconvened on Tuesday of next week to consider upon this case. At their session at that time the Bixler case will be considered, provided any one sees proper to go before them with a complaint in regard to that matter. For action or non-action in the matter, the people alone are responsible. If an indictment is found, it can only be for an assault and battery with intent to kill We hope the above will place the matter in its proper light before the people.

Caution.

It has come to the knowledge of the proprietors of the New York Store that customers stray into other stores under the impression that they are in the New York Store, when they are not. If you are looking for the New York Store, be sure you find the place opposite the postoffice. We do not care to have others sell goods upon our reputation.

Editors' Meeting at Rome City.

The Editorial Association of Northern Indiana, in its fifteenth regular session, met at Rome City, on Thursday and Friday last, with Mr. T. C. Mays in the chair. The following named persons were in attendance: T. C. Mays, of the Auburn COURIER; C K Baxter, Waterloo Press; W K Sheffer, Angola Herald; C O Myers, Kendallville Standard; D McDonald, Plymouth Democrat; J B Stoll, National Banner; Col. I B McDonald, Columbia City Post; Q A Rossler, Warsaw Republican; J H Rerrick, Lagrange Standard; D S Kell, Fort Wayne Daily Gazette; G W Miles, Syracuse Gazette; J. C. Hewitt, Lagrange Register; Dr A S Parker, Kendallville News; J C Miller, Angola Republican. President Mays stated in his address, that since the last meeting not a member of the Association had been taken away by death; that all had met with a fair degree of prosperity, and that efforts to elevate the plane of journalism had not been spared. "There is a sunbeam of promise casting its rays across our future to-day, and there is more buoyancy to the hope that the lowering clouds of depression will soon pass away." "A new era has dawned, and a striking change has taken place. Instead of dull, lifeless journals, Northern Indiana can now boast of a class of local journals not to be excelled in the country. What has contributed more to this result than the Northern Indiana Editorial Association?" The following named persons were duly elected to serve in the offices named for the following year: T C Mays, President; D. McDonald, 1st Vice President; C. K. Baxter, 2nd Vice President; J H Herrick, Treasurer; Herbert S Fassett, Secretary. The next meeting will be held at Syracuse.

We take the following articles from the Rochester papers, published at the home of L. M. Montgomery, Esq., now the enterprising grain merchant at the Eel River Elevators:

[From the Rochester, (Ind.) Independent.]

Mr. Levi Montgomery is about to move to Auburn, Indiana., to take charge of the Eel River R. R. grain elevator, a business in which he has considerable experience and for which he possesses peculiar qualifications. Mr. M. was brought up in this county, and is a member of one of our oldest and best families. In 1868 he was elected sheriff, and again in 1870 was chosen to the same office. He performed his official duties in a manner creditable to himself and satisfactory to the people. Since that time he has served on the board of trustees, making a good record and proving a safe custodian of the interest of the people. For several years he has been engaged in buying grain owning an interest in the elevator at this place until it was destroyed by fire in 1876, when he rebuilt it with his own means, or at least bought out his partner after it was rebuilt. He has scattered immense sums of money throughout this county, having had dealings with almost every man in it, and we never heard the slightest whisper affecting his integrity. Other faults he may have, but Levi Montgomery is the soul of honor, or we are greatly mistaken. His departure, and that of his family, will leave a void in the social circle that will be hard to fill. May success attend them in their new home.

[From the Rochester, (Ind.) Sentinel.]

Rochester has as many good and enterprising business men as any town that we know of, of no greater population, yet we have not too many and can scarcely afford to loose one from the long list. Every town in order to be prosperous, must have men who are willing to lead in business enterprises and encourage others to follow their example We are led to these remarks by the departure of L. M. Montgomery, who has gone to take charge of the railroad elevators at Auburn, DeKalb Co. Ind. Mr. Montgomery is one of the oldest citizens of this county, and has been thoroughly identified with many of its material interests. As a reward for his unflagging energy, the Democracy of this county elected him sheriff for two terms, by majorities ranging far above the usual majority given the ticket; the duties of which office he performed to the entire satisfaction of his many constituents. He has also served as a member of the town council with highly satisfactory results. For a number of years he has been engaged in the grain trade at this place. Misfortune befel him in the destruction of his elevators by fire, but upon its ruins he reared another magnificent structure and maintained the vast patronage he had attained by a long course of fair dealing with all his patrons. We regret that he has left us, but what we have lost will be gained by the business men of Auburn and the farmers of DeKalb county.

Summit Items.

—Our town is quiet these days.

—Crops are growing finally since the rain.

—Considerable lumber is being shipped from this place.

—H. Swonberger, the R. R. agent, is building a new barn.

—Richard Gramling is preparing to build a brick house this summer.

—The concert at Barker's church passed off finely, being both pleasant and profitable.

—R. A. Talmadge, of Rome City, has started a shop for the manufacture of axe helves at this place. Those in this vicinity having hickory timber for sale would do well to call on him.

NEW COMER.

Orange Blossoms.

On Tuesday evening, June 18th, 1878, the nuptials of Dr. J. F. Thomson and Miss Sallie W. Johnson, were celebrated at the residence of the bride's father, Wm. Y. Johnson, Esq., of this city. Rev. John Johnson, of West Virginia, (uncle of the bride) officiated, assisted by Rev. B. Sawyer, Pastor of the Methodist church.

The above was an event that has been the topic of conversation in our social circles for some time, and one, too, that will ever remain fresh in the memories of those who participated in the festivities, for certainly nothing more could have been done for the enjoyment and pleasure of such a host of friends, than was done on this occasion. About 8 o'clock the friends began to assemble; and in a very short time the double parlors were filled with invited guests, and prompt to the time, at 8:30 the bridal party, consisting of Mr. Frank M. Johnson, brother of the bride, Miss Nellie Johnson, cousin of the bride, and the bride and groom, stepped forth from a side waiting room, and after taking their respective places, the loving couple were made one. Then followed the usual congratulations, after which grace was said by the Rev. D L. Trimble, Rector of the Episcopal parish, when all indulged in a hearty repast consisting of the delcaicies of the season. After the repast, which lasted about an hour, the party were favored with some very excellent music from Mrs. C. Ball, and at eleven o'clock the entire party escorted the bride and groom to the depot, where they took the 11:30 train for Chicago and other points west, on a brief bridal tour.

The following is a list of the bridal presents and the name of the donors: Case of silver knives, forks and spoons, Frank M. Johnson; silver sugar bowl, Mr. Sembower and wife; silver butter dish, Mr Bissett and wife; silver castor, Mr. Moses and wife; silver cake basket, Mr. Bicknell and wife; silver butter dish, sugar bowl, call bell and spoon-holder combined, H. H. G. Upmyer; silver, gold lined creamer and sugar bowl, J. D. Flynn; fine carving set, Rev. D. L. Trimble; set plated polishing irons, John Robbins; silver pickle fork, Nettie Rowe; parlor center piece, R. D. Thomas and wife; folding chair, Mr. Koons and wife; half dozen napkins, Mr. Bricken and wife; fine glass set, Mr David and wife; set silver tea spoons, M. C. Clarkson; pair silver napkin rings L. M. Blair and wife; half dozen silver, gold lined salters and case, W. T. Hopkins and wife; pair silver napkin rings, W. J. Frederick and wife; pair flower brackets, A. H. Pratt and wife, worked lamp mat, D. B. Rother; lace lambrequins, Mr. McGee and wife; toilet set, Mr. H. Levy; card bracket and glass set, Mr. Loer and wife; pitcher, fruit dish and table spread, J. Singler; soup turene, J. J. Hoffman and wife; flower bracket, Mrs. H. L. Clark; tidies, Mrs. L. Covell; towel rack, H. F. Clark; silver butter knife, G. S. Ball and wife; silver butter knife and sugar spoon, E. Ogden and wife; silver plated alarm clock and pair chromoes, A. Sanderson and wife; large two jet parlor lamp, F. M. Bacon and wife; pair beautiful china cups, Mr. Suter and wife; bird and cage Dr. Sherman and wife; pair ground glass vases, Mrs. T. Grant; table spread napkins and a half dozen goblets, W. I. Galloway and wife; set silver tea spoons, N. B. Rowe and wife; pair ground glass flower vases, Mrs. A H. Stewart; silver walter, I. Campbell and wife; silver spoon holder, Mr. Wise and wife; napkins, Mrs. W. Baker; ground glass fruit dishes, A. H. Phillips and wife; complete glass set, G. Fordyce and wife; linen table cloth and napkins, C. Long and wife; silver, gold lined cream pitcher, R Lantz and wife; fine leather medicine case, Dr. J. A. Cowan of Auburn; steel engraving, without frame, O. J. Powell, lastly a broom with a card attached bearing the following lines, and the name of the donor:

> This trifling gift accept from me,
> Its use some folks commend,
> In sunshine use the bushy part,
> In storms the other end.—Farley.

May the Doctor and his charming wife live long and prosper. R.

St. Joe Items.

—It's a boy for Nels. this time, and oh how happy.

—Wash Tustison has opened a boarding house for the accommodation of those wanting board.

—Now that the choice is made, we hope to see those who were unsuccessful work in the traces, and fight the good battle with the armor on, and go in to win.

—Quite a number of our republican friends attended the convention last Saturday. That is right, gentlemen, come up and we will do you good. Stephen Baker, for one, says he is on the fence. We think with a little assistance he will be sure to fall on the money side.

Pioneer of Life of Nelson Ulm.

The subject of this sketch was born in Ross county, Ohio, near the city of Chillicothe, in May, 1817. Lived on the old home farm until seventeen years of age. Moved to this county in 1834, then an almost unbroken wilderness, and settled on the present site of Spencerville. Mr. Ulm tells of helping drive from Ft. Wayne in the fall of 1834, the first hogs and cows ever brought to Spencerville, 8 head of hogs and one cow for David Butter, yet living, and two head of cows for Dan Rhodes, deceased. Dan Yates, then living at Spencer, was the first white settler there, for whom Mr. Ulm worked the fall and winter of 1834. During the same winter Mr Yates sent the subject of this sketch to Fort Wayne to mill taking two bushels of corn on a hand sled, making the distance in two days, camping on the bank of the river near where the Feeder dam now is, drawing the sled on the ice, the river being the only highway at that time. In the fall of 1835 he had a big tramp after Yate's and Rhodes' horses, which were allowed to roam the woods in quest of something to eat. The horses failing to put in an appearance at the usual time, he started to bring them in, striking their trail on Bear creek near where Johnny Jenkins now lives, followed them up the river where Newville now stands, crossing the river where the Brethren church now stands, left the trail and returned to Daniel Rhodes, where he stayed all night. Early the following morning he struck the trail and followed the same all day without any success, camping that night near Maumee river. Awakening in the night, he found that the horses in their wanderings, came up to where he was then camping, he got up bridled two of the horses and hitched them to some saplings and retired. He started home leading one horse, carrying gun and knapsack, striking the St. Joe river near where Hurshes mills now are. In consequence of riding bareback, with heavy load, and it raining all the time, the horse's back became surfeited and in time the hair all came off its back. Starting for Holton's mill on Fish creek in the fall of '34 after a raft of lumber, following Indian trail, he arrived at the mill, and with the assistance of Mr. Holton, succeeded in getting back with a raft without accident. Stopping near the mouth of Buck creek, he found the skeletons of two deers, their horns so interlocked that it was impossible to seperate them, he supposed they had been fighting and had become so entangled that seperation was impossible and had so died. From this incident Mr. Ulm gave the creek the name of Buck creek, the name it still bears. There was a logging and quilting party on the farm that Geo. Johnson now owns, where 80 persons besides children partook of dinner and supper. Geo. Barney and wife and Henry Fales and wife, of Spencerville, assisted in the ceremonies. Dancing was kept up till the wee small hours and on this memorable occasion, one-half barrel of good old Rye, found its way down the throats of all those in attendance. How would G. Barney and H. H. Fales appear assisting at such an entertainment at the pesent day. Mr. Ulm was married in June, 1836, to Elvira Lockwood, whose parents at that time resided on the farm now owned by J. W. Dills. In his own words he says, I had to go to Fort Wayne and all the way afoot after the license. In a wedding tour they took a walk of two or three miles to a prayer meeting at S. Widney's. Mr. Ulm, since his removal this county, has cleared 306 acres of land.

TOWN TALK.

The Star sells a fine unlaundried, all-linen bosom and cuff shirt for 75c that sells all over the town for $1.00.

Other clothing men keep pacing up and down in front of the Star Clothing House, and wonder "how" the thing is done.

"They can't sell at such and such a price. It's mere talk," etc. Still our people get convinced on visiting the Star.

Brother clothiers engage men to buy up our cheap suits for them; still they say we are not offering bargains'

We again assert that we sell not sell our goods to merchants; our customers shall derive all the advantages of low prices.

Our sales in two days were $2,300.00.

All our citizens who study economy, quality and style, should inspect the stock of Sam, Pete & Max's.

An extra force of salesmen in attendance at the Star Clothing House.

As we have stores in all the principal cities in the west, we have faculties for buying that small dealers do not possess.

8 oz. Duck Overall for 40c at the Star Clothing House. They are selling at 75c elsewhere.

A German friend of ours who has the misfortune to be in the same business as we are in, stood in front of the Star Clothing House, threw up both hands, and exclaimed, "Mine Gott, vat a crowd of beoples!"

Secretary McCrary read to the President a telegram received by him from the Governor of Oregon relating that Indians were committing hostilities on the eastern borders of that State; that the settlers are unprovided with arms and ammunition for the purpose of their protection, and asking the Government to furnish them with supplies. The request will be granted.

Maj. Reno has addressed a letter to Chairman Banning, of the House Military Committee, saying that he is glad that the Custer massacre is to be a subject of investigation, as it will enable him to meet and repel the charges that have been made against him in connection with this affair.

Miss Emily Platt, niece of President Hayes, and Gen. Russell Hastings, of the United States army, were married at the White House last week. On the same day Hon. Joseph Pulitzer, of St. Louis, was united in marriage to Miss Kate Davis, one of the reigning belles of Washington, and a relative of Jefferson Davis.

Congress having refused to appropriate the money expended by the commission sent to Louisiana in the spring of 1877 to arbitrate between the Packard and Nicholls Governments, ex-Gov. Brown, of Tennessee, one of the Commissioners, sent to the Treasury Department the other day a draft for $827, that being his share of the bill. Secretary Sherman immediately returned the draft, with an expression of his belief that at the next session of Congress the appropriation will be made, and the assurance that if this belief is not verified the President will pay the whole amount himself.

POLITICAL.

The Potter Investigating Committee called on Secretary Evarts for all the correspondence in his department relating to the commission sent to Louisiana last year for the purpose of settling the disturbance between the Nicholls and Packard Governments. The Secretary of State replied that, after consulting with the President, he is instructed to say that, while he (the President) thought it quite compatible with the public interest that the desired correspondence should be submitted to Congress, he did not believe the committee, under the resolution from which its authority is derived, had any business whatever with the Louisiana Commission or the papers connected with it. Consequently the papers will be sent to the House of Representatives, but not to the committee.

The President has caused it to be known that his views upon the subject of the assessment of Government officials for political purposes correspond with those recently made public by Schurz. The President maintains that no assessments can be made or collected, that all contributions for political purposes will be entirely voluntary, and that the tenure of no official will be in any degree weakened from a failure to pay an assessment.

The House Committee on Naval Affairs concluded the investigation of the late administration of the Navy Department just before the adjournment, and, by a vote of the Democrats, adopted resolutions reciting that "the acts and conduct of Secretary Robeson, and the late chiefs of the bureaus of steam engineering, constructions and repairs, and provisions and clothing, in the sale and disposition of public property, in their method of making contracts, and in involving the Government in indebtedness over the appropriations made by Congress for the support of the navy, deserve the severest censure and condemnation, and that in addition said parties as well as all others aiding and abetting should be punished to the extent of the law."....The Democrats of Maine, at their State Convention in Portland, last week, nominated Alonzo Garcelon for Governor, and adopted a platform condemning the issue of untaxable Government bonds, favoring the substitution of greenbacks for national-bank notes, and approving the Potter investigation.

The Republican State Convention of Iowa was held at Des Moines on June 19. Ex-Senator Wright presided, and ex-Congressman James F. Wilson was Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions. J. A. T. Hull was nominated for Secretary of State, B. R. Sherman for Auditor, George W. Bemis for Treasurer, J. K. Powers for Register of the Land Office, J. F. McJunkin for Attorney General, J. H. Rothrock for Supreme Judge, John S. Runnels for Supreme Court Reporter, E. E. Holmes for Clerk of the Supreme Court. The platform declares that:

> By the combined working of the National and State Governments under their respective constitutions the rights of every citizen should be secured at home and protected abroad, and the common welfare promoted. Any failure on the part of either the National or State Governments to use every possible constitutional power to afford ample protection to their citizens, both at home and abroad, is a criminal neglect of their highest obligation.
>
> That it is not only the right but the duty of every good citizen, at the party caucuses, in the party conventions, and at the polls, to use his best efforts to secure the nomination and election of good men to places of official trust, and we disapprove of all interference with the perfect freedom of action of any citizen in the exercise of said right and in the discharge of said duty.

The Democrats of Vermont have nominated State officers as follows: W. H. H. Bingham for Governor, Jerome W. Pierce for Lieutenant Governor, and George E. Royce for Treasurer.

The Missouri Greenbackers held their State Convention at Sedalia last week. A. L. Gilstrop was nominated for Judge of the Supreme Court, Gireso Hayden for Railroad Commissioner, and J. M. Greenwood for Superintendent of Public Instruction. The platform demands the repeal of the Specie Resumption act and the issue of absolute money in greenbacks equal to gold and silver, denounces the present system of convict labor, opposes the introduction of Chinese labor, and pronounces against strikes and all violent measures for the relief of labor. ....The Workingmen's party developed astonishing strength at the recent election in California for members of the Constitutional Convention. A San Francisco dispatch says the complexion of the convention as regards county delegates will be as follows: Non-Partisan, 52; Workingmen, 48; Republican, 10; Democrats, 8. Full returns may vary the above to the extent of half a dozen. The city of San Francisco was carried by the Workingmen by a large majority.

GENERAL.

At last accounts from the Rio Grande, the Lerdist party on the border had been defeated and scattered by the Diaz troops. Escobedo still remained on the Mexican side, with a small force, but the other revolutionists were getting into Texas as fast as possible.

Advices from the Texas-Mexico border report that the crossing of American soldiers into Mexico had created the wildest excitement among the Mexicans, and that a force was being organized at Piedras Negras for the purpose of driving back Gen. Mackenzie's little army.

Mr. Stoughton, American Minister to Russia, has written a letter repudiating all complicity with the proceedings which form the subject of the investigation of the Potter committee.

An expedition for the recovery of the relics of Sir John Franklin sailed from New York last week on the schooner Eothen, which has been chartered to carry the exploring party to Repulse bay, where they will remain until spring, and then cross the country on sledges to King William's Land.

The Captain Howgate expedition to the North pole has been refused the $50,000 asked of Congress to aid in its equipment. Private sources will now have to be relied on for the assistance necessary to carry out the plans.

The scull race at Pittsburgh, Pa., last week, for the championship of the United States and a purse of $2,000, between Evan Morris, of Pittsburgh, and James Hanlan, of Canada, resulted in a victory for the Canadian by four lengths. Time for the five miles, thirty-seven minutes. An immense crowd witnessed the contest.

FOREIGN.

It has been decided that the strictest secrecy will be maintained in regard to the proceedings of the Berlin congress, but a succinct account of the principal transactions will be forwarded regularly by telegraph to the various Governments represented. A Berlin dispatch says it has been agreed between England and Russia that the boundaries of Bulgaria shall not be extended westward into districts most of whose inhabitants are Greeks. In Southern Bulgaria, known as Roumelia under the Turkish administration, some vestiges of sovereignty will be left the Sultan, but only to be exercised under European supervision.

The cable brings the information that the cotton-operatives at Burnley, England, have resumed work, and those of Blackburn have unanimously resolved to resume, at the reduction of 10 per cent. against which they had struck. This indicates the end of the strikes throughout the entire Lancashire district....A cable dispatch from Sierra Leone announces the arrival there of the bark Azor, which sailed from Charleston, April 21, with 250 negro emigrants for Liberia. There was much suffering on the voyage. The water having become short, the ship-fever broke out, and twenty-three emigrants died.

The physicians in attendance on the Emperor William publish a formal declaration that his progress has been satisfactory almost beyond expectation; but the patient, besides transitory pain, suffers much from helplessness, being unable to use his arms. Complete recovery can only be effected in a long time, after possibly many obstacles and much pain.

During an interview in Berlin, the other day, between Prince Bismarck and the Russian Prime Minister Gortschakoff, the large Danish dog of Bismarck made a ferocious attack on the Russian statesman, who was rescued after considerable trouble.

Concerning the European Congress, a Berlin telegram says "the powers continue to act in groups, but not necessarily in a hostile sense. Austria and England from one point of view, and Turkey from another, oppose Russia's claims. Germany, France and Italy adopt a mediatory attitude. There can be little doubt of a thorough understanding between England and Austria, or of the likelihood of its continuance during the entire deliberations. The congress has decided to admit Greece, with consultation voice, in questions affecting Greek interests."

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

Friday, June 14.—Senate.—The Committee on Privileges and Elections reported adversely on the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the constitution forbidding the disfranchisement of persons on account of sex. Mr. Hoar submitted a minority report....The bill to create a sinking fund to pay the indebtedness due the Government by the Kansas Pacific railroad, was passed....Mr. McDonald (by request) introduced a bill to provide an additional fund for the repayment to the United States of moneys advanced in aid of the Union Pacific Railroad Company....The House bill to increase the pensions of certain pensioned soldiers and sailors who have lost both hands, both feet, or sight of both eyes in the service of the country, from $50 to $72 a month, was passed.... Mr. Oglesby, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back the memorial of William McGarrahan, praying the passage of a law to authorize the [illegible] to him by the United States for certain lands in California, with the recommendation that the prayer of the petitioner be denied, and that the memorial be indefinitely postponed. So ordered.

House.—Mr. Burchard (Republican), of Illinois, introduced a resolution declaring that any attempt to interfere with the title of President Hayes "would be revolutionary and disapproved by the House," and moved to suspend the rules and adopt it. Agreed to—yeas, 215; nays, 21. Subsequently the Judiciary Committee reported a resolution to the same effect, though worded somewhat differently. This was also adopted by a vote of 234 to 14—the following being the negative vote: Blackburn, Bliss, Boone, Cooke, Cox of New York, Hamilton, Henry, Kimmell, Mayham, Pridemore, Robertson of Louisiana, Smith of Georgia, Springer, Warner. ....The House passed a large number of private bills.

Saturday, June 15.—Senate.—Mr. Morgan submitted a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the constitution allowing the President of the United States to approve any part of appropriation bills, and to disapprove any portion of such bills as he may think proper. Referred.... Mr. Wadleigh, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections made a report upon the charges that the election of Senator Grover was procured by fraud and bribery. The report says that the evidence did not sustain any of such charges. The committee was discharged from further consideration of the subject....The bill appropriating $20,000 to defray the expenses of the House select committee on alleged frauds in the Presidential election, and $20,000 to defray the expenses of the investigation ordered by the Senate, was passed, with an amendment placing $10,000 at the disposal of the Attorney General to prosecute any person for crime discovered in connection with the inquiry....The Committee on Finance was discharged from the further consideration of a large number of petitions in regard to the repeal of the Specie-Resumption act, remonetization of silver, together with numerous bills in regard to the payment of customs duties in legal-tender notes, and the "Goloid"-Coin bill, nearly all of the subjects having been covered by bills passed....Conference reports on the Army and River and Harbor bills were agreed to, and the bills passed....The amendment of the House to the bill of the Senate increasing the pension of Gen. Shields, of Missouri, to $100 a month, was concurred in, and the bill passed.

House.—The House did nothing beyond discuss the bill to amend the Internal Revenue laws and listen to conference reports on appropriation bills. Some of the Republicans filibustered to prevent the passage of the Internal Revenue bill, the proposed reduction of the tobacco tax constituting the objectionable feature....Both houses agreed to postpone the final adjournment to Tuesday, June 18.

Monday, June 17.—Senate.—After a brief discussion, but without amendment, the House bill to organize the Life-Saving Service was passed. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a number of new stations on the sea and lake coasts, and provides for the appointment of a General Superintendent by the President, and of a District Superintendent for the Gulf coast by the Secretary of the Treasury, etc....A resolution was adopted authorizing the Committee on Education and Labor to inquire into the industrial condition of the country; the extent, nature, and causes of the depression of business and the enforced idleness of labor, and what remedies, if any, can be provided by national legislation, and report by bill or otherwise....The Senate had a long debate on the amendment to the Sundry Civil bill, appropriating $6,000 to defray the expenses of the commission sent by the President to New Orleans to arbitrate between Nicholls and Packard. The amendment was tabled by a vote of 32 to 22.

House.—A resolution was adopted authorizing a select committee to inquire into the depressed condition of labor throughout the country, and recommend remedies therefor....The bill to amend the Internal Revenue laws was passed, after a long debate. Its principal provision is to reduce the tobacco tax to 16 cents per pound... Mr. Harris, from the Committee on Elections, reported that Robertson, of Louisiana, and Elam, of Louisiana (the sitting members in the contested-election cases) are entitled to their seats, and that in the Alabama contested-election case of Haralson and Shelley additional testimony may be taken. The reports were all agreed to. Mr. Harris also reported a resolution to pay the ten contestants and contestees $1,000 each, and the two others $500 each in part for their expenses of the contest. Agreed to....The contested case from South Carolina—Richardson vs. Rainey—was postponed till next session....The House, after a long and animated debate, lasting till midnight, defeated the bill appropriating $5,500,000 to pay the award of the Halifax Fisheries Commission. The scene attending the defeat of this measure was one of the most violent in the history of the session. It was the intention of the managers of the bill to prevent debate. Mr. Butler discovered this and became very demonstrative in his efforts to defy the authority of the House. He asked unanimous consent to speak, which was refused, violent objection being made from all parts of the hall. Mr. Butler insisted upon speaking, but his voice was drowned in the tumult. The shouts from the Republican side were deafening, and quite drowned Mr. Butler's voice. Turning around and facing the Republican side of the House, he defied them to stop him, and shook his head in a belligerent way. The Sergeant-at-Arms was finally sent to Mr. Butler, and remained standing by him with orders to seat him until the tumult ended. ....Mr. Butler offered a resolution, which was adopted without a dissenting voice, requesting the Senate to instruct Hon. Stanley Matthews, a member of that body, to appear and testify before the House Committee on Electoral Frauds. There was little debate on the resolution, and as little appearance of interest in it.

Tuesday, June 18.—Senate.—The Senate was engaged nearly all day on the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill. The amendments appropriating $5,500,000 to pay the award of the Halifax Commission, and modifying the contract with James B. Eads for the improvement of the South pass of the Mississippi river, were adopted....Mr. Paddock called up the House bill for the relief of settlers on public lands. Passed. In explanation of the bill Mr. Paddock said it merely extended the provisions of the act of March 3, 1877, so as to allow settlers who had their crops injured by grasshoppers to leave their homesteads temporarily for the purpose of obtaining sustenance.

House—The House concurred in the Senate concurrent resolution declaring that the treaty with China, allowing unrestricted immigration to this country, should be modified, and calling the attention of the President to the subject....The Senate substitute for the House bill repealing the Resumption law was non-concurred in, for want of the necessary two-thirds majority—140 to 105—so that the bill fails....The bill directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay Southern mail contractors for services rendered prior to the war was finally agreed to, with amendments providing that the claimants shall give a bond for the return of the money to the United States in case it shall be discovered that the claims were paid by the Confederate States....The Senate bill to modify the Eads jetty contract was passed....Mr. Townshend, of Illinois, moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill to repeal that section of the Resumption act which authorizes the sale of United States bonds for purposes of resumption, and to provide that United States notes shall be receivable for duties on imports. Rejected—yeas, 1:6; nays, 119—not the necessary two-thirds in the affirmative.... Mr. Pound moved to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill extending for ten years the time to complete the Northern Pacific railroad. Defeated—yeas, 89; nays, 137....It was found necessary to prolong the session another day, and both houses agreed to a resolution extending the time for adjournment to Wednesday, 19th, at 6 p. m.

Wednesday, June 19.—Senate.—The President pro tem. announced as the committee on the part of the Senate to consider the subject of reorganizing the army, Messrs. Burnside, Plumb, and Butler. The President pro tem. also appointed Messrs. Oglesby, Saunders, and McCreery the committee on the part of the Senate to consider the subject to transferring the Indian Bureau from the Interior of the War Department....There was considerable debate in executive session concerning the nominations of Reuben E. Fenton, William S. Groesbeck, and Francis A. Walker as Commissioners to represent the United States in the coming international conference on the silver question. Finally the nomination of Groesbeck and Walker was confirmed and Fenton rejected. The President then sent in the name of Judge Charles B. Lawrence, of Illinois, as the third Commissioner, but, before action upon it could be taken, Mr. Conkling, who had been absent during these proceedings, came in, and, making an earnest appeal in behalf of Mr. Fenton, secured a reconsideration of the vote by which he was rejected. He was then confirmed by two majority.

House.—Mr. Ewing moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill to retire national-bank notes and substitute treasury notes for them. Rejected—yeas, 109; nays, 114. The result was greeted with applause on the Republican side....A bill was passed under a suspension of the rules, providing that on and after the 1st of October, 1878, legal-tender notes of the United States shall be receivable at par in payment of customs duties....Mr. Conger moved to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment forever prohibiting the payment of any claim for property taken, used, injured or destroyed by United States troops during the war of the Rebellion unless the owner was loyal to the Government and gave neither aid nor encouragement to the enemy. Agreed to—yeas, 144; nays, 61.... A number of other bills and resolutions were passed under a suspension of the rules....The Speaker announced the appointment of the following commissions: On the reorganization of the army, Banning, Dibrell, Bragg, Strait and White of Pennsylvania; on the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department, Scales, Boone, Hooker, [illegible] and Stewart; on the latter question, Hewitt of New York, Riddle, Dickey, Tucker, Thompson, Rice and Boyd....The Sundry Civil Appropriation bill occupied the attention of the House, and necessitated a postponement of the session to Thursday morning at 5 o'clock, at which hour both houses adjourned till the regular date of assembling in December....The Post-Route bill, containing the Brazilian steamship subsidy, the restoration of the franking privilege, regulation of postage on mail matter, and regulation of railway service, failed between the two houses.

THE PRESIDENTIAL TITLE.

Report of the House Judiciary Committee.

The report which Mr. Hartridge submitted to the lower house of Congress in behalf of the majority of the Judiciary Committee, declaring that the President's title is unassailable—and which was adopted by a vote of 234 to 14—is as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred House bill No. —, and the resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Maryland, directing judicial proceedings to give effect to the electoral vote of that State in the last election of President and Vice President of the United States, report back said bill and resolutions, with a recommendation that the bill do not pass. Your committee are of the opinion that Congress has no power under the constitution to confer upon the Supreme Court of the United States the original jurisdiction sought for it by this bill. The only clause of the constitution which could be plausibly invoked to enable Congress to provide the legal machinery for the litigation proposed is that which gives the Supreme Court original jurisdiction in the "cases" or "controversies" between a State and the citizens of another State. The committee are of opinion that this expression "cases" and "controversies" was not intended, by the framers of the constitution, to embrace an original proceeding by a State in the Supreme Court of the United States to oust any incumbent from a political office filled by the declaration and decision of the two houses of Congress, clothed with the constitutional power to count the electoral votes, and decided as a final tribunal upon the election of President and Vice President.

The Forty-fourth Congress selected a commission to count the votes for President and Vice President, reserving to itself the right to ratify or reject such count in the way prescribed in the act creating such commission. By the joint action of the two houses it ratified the count made by the commission, and thus made it the expression of its own judgment. All the departments of the Federal Government, all the State governments in their relations to Federal authority, foreign nations, the people of the United States, all the material interests and industries of the country have acquiesced in, and acted in accordance with, the pronounced finding of the Congress. In the opinion of this committee the present Congress has no power to undo the work of its predecessor in counting the electoral vote, or to confer upon any judicial tribunal the right to pass upon, and perhaps set aside, the action of that predecessor in reference to a purely political question, the decision of which is confided by the constitution in Congress.

But, apart from these fundamental objections to the bill under consideration, there are features and provisions in it which are entirely impracticable. Your committee can find no warrant of authority to summon the Chief Justices of the Supreme Courts of the several States to sit at Washington as a jury to try any case, however grave and weighty may be its nature. The right to summon must carry with it the power to enforce obedience to the mandate, and the committee can see no means by which the judicial officers of a State can be compelled to assume the functions of jurors in the Supreme Court of the United States.

There are other objections to the practical working of the bill under consideration, to which we do not think it necessary to refer.

It may be true that the State of Maryland has been, in the late election for President and Vice President, deprived of her just and full right in declaring who were legally chosen, by reason of frauds perpetrated by Returning Boards in some of the States. It may also be true that these fraudulent acts were countenanced or encouraged or participated in by some who now enjoy high offices as the fruit of such frauds. It is due to the present generation of the people of this country and their posterity, and to the principles on which our Government is founded, that all evidence tending to establish the fact of such fraudulent practices should be calmly, carefully and vigorously examined. But your committee are of opinion that the consequence of such examination, if it discloses guilt upon the part of any in high official position, should not be an effort to set aside the judgment of a former Congress as to the election of a President and Vice President, but should be confined to the punishment by legal and constitutional means of the offenders, and to the preservation and perpetuation of the evidences of their guilt, so that the American people may be protected from a recurrence of the crime.

Three Republican members of the committee, Mr. Frye, Mr. Conger, and Mr. Lapham, add the following:

> We agree to the foregoing report, so far as it states reasons for the resolution adopted by the committee, but dissent from the concluding portion, as not pertinent to the inquiry before us, and as giving an implied sanction to the propriety of the pending investigation, ordered by the majority of the House of Representatives, to which we were and are opposed.

Death of a Distinguished Journalist.

It is with inexpressible regret that the death is announced of John A. MacGahan, correspondent of the Daily News at Constantinople. The News publishes an appropriate eulogistic sketch of Mr. MacGahan's career as a newspaper correspondent in Europe and Central Asia for the New York Herald, describing his gallant work during the siege of Paris, his ride to Khiva, his campaign with Don Carlos in Spain, and his voyage on the yacht Pandora to the Arctic seas. He has acted as a Daily News correspondent throughout the recent campaign in Turkey, adding many successes to his former achievements. The News speaks in the highest terms of his great work in behalf of suffering humanity in describing to the world the Bulgarian atrocities, when he brought the whole circumstances of those awful scenes home to the English public mind, as probably few distant events have been. Mr. MacGahan was born in St. Louis, Mo., in 1846, and began the study of law in Brussels in 1868. His mother and brother reside at Toledo, Ohio.—London Cor. New York Herald.

THE ELECTORAL COUNT.

Important Statement from Senator Hill, of Georgia—The Secret Pledges of Forty-two Ex-Confederates—The Wormley Hotel Conference.

[Washington Cor. New York Times.]

Senator Ben Hill, of Georgia, has made some highly interesting statements respecting the most important events that transpired during the session of the Electoral Commission, and which throw new light upon the history of that critical period. The conversation originated through an allusion to the resolution introduced in the Senate by Senator Spencer, one of the avowed objects of which is to investigate into and expose the proceedings of what is known as the "Wormley Hotel Conference." A passing reference to this political gathering is perhaps necessary in order to maintain the continuity of this narrative. As the story goes, a few Republicans, friends of Mr. Hayes, who were cognizant of his purposes, met by appointment an equal number of Southern Democrats at Wormley's Hotel in this city. It was during the height of the excitement pending the last days of the Presidential count, when a dead-lock seemed inevitable and all sorts of alarming rumors were in circulation. The Democrats who participated in the conference claimed, as alleged, to have it in their power to prevent the completion of the electoral count, and were willing to withdraw all opposition to the completion if the friends of Mr. Hayes would guarantee that, when he became President, the Federal troops would be withdrawn from Louisiana and South Carolina, and that such other measures would be adopted as would secure the dissolution of the Packard and Chamberlain Governments and the establishment of those of Nicholls and Wade Hampton. The Republicans, in consideration of a completion of the count being permitted, agreed to the terms proposed by the Democrats. Both parties to the negotiation exchanged pledges satisfactory to each other, and in pursuance of this arrangement the count was completed, Mr. Hayes was inaugurated, and the changes in the State Governments of Louisiana and South Carolina effected.

Up to this time the power of the Democrats who took part in the Wormley Conference to have prevented the completion of the electoral count has been undisputed, and the credit for defeating the filibustering movement in the House has been generally attributed to them. Senator Hill, however, emphatically and unequivocally denies that the agreement entered into at the Wormley Hotel Conference had any bearing upon the peaceable solution of the Presidential problem. He states that the Democrats who participated in the conference did so without a shadow of authority from anybody, and without consultation with their party colleagues. It was purely the gratuitous, irresponsible act of a few men, who had controlled no votes in the House except their own, and who did not have it in their power to fulfill the agreement it is alleged they made. Senator Hill authorizes the statement that, in his opinion, the Democrats who participated in the Wormley Conference could have no other object in view than a desire to obtain notoriety. So far from having influenced the action of the House, Senator Hill, to use almost his own words, said to the Times correspondent: "I am now about to reveal to you the dim outlines of what will some day form one of the most patriotic pages in American history, and after I conclude my brief narrative you will know just how much influence the so-called Wormley Conference had in effecting the result in the electoral count. When the decision of the Electoral Commission in the Florida case became known, I became satisfied that the disputed States would be decided in favor of Hayes, and that the issue which would presently confront us would be the legal inauguration of Mr. Hayes as President, or another revolution. I consulted with a few ex-Confederates, all members of the House of Representatives, and the situation was thoroughly and earnestly discussed. Not to enter into unnecessary details, we, who had just emerged from a ruinous and disastrous war and had experienced its devastating effects—we ex-rebels determined to prevent a second civil war, and spare the country from all the terrible horrors that would attend it. Accordingly forty-two ex-Confederates solemnly pledged themselves to each other upon their sacred honor to oppose all attempts to frustrate the counting of the votes for President and Vice President. We held no caucus, nor no meeting. I called upon each gentleman personally and obtained his signature to a paper that I presented to him. We conducted the movement with the greatest caution, for we did not desire our plans should be even suspected. You may judge how well the secret has been kept when it has remained inviolate to this day. Having disclosed these facts, you can now determine what degree of importance to attach to the influence exercised by the Democratic members of the Wormley Conference upon the result of the electoral count. The forty-two ex-Confederate Congressmen had pledged themselves to abide by the decision of the Electoral Commission several weeks before the Wormley Bonference took place, so that, despite the sensational rumors that filled the air toward the close of the count, there never was the remotest possibility of trouble. We held the balance of power, and did not propose to permit another war if our votes could prevent it."

Death of a Noted Mormon.

Porter Rockwell, a Mormon Danite, who died suddenly at Salt Lake a short time ago, was notorious during the Mormon troubles in Illinois and Missouri, where he took active part in many of the bloody deeds that then characterized the Saints there. It was he who shot Gov. Boggs, of Missouri, in the mouth. He was one of the most daring and desperate of the many religious fanatics Mormonism has produced, and was the leader of the now defunct organization of "Destroying angels," or Danites, and, it is believed, has committed many murders and robberies, though few have been proven against him, the church always interfering more or less in his behalf. He was a warm friend of Joe Smith, and also, until late years, of Brigham Young. Last year he was indicted for the murder, in 1857, of the Aiken party of emigrants, passing through the Territory for California at the time of the Mormon troubles with the Federal Government. His trial was recently set for the next term of court, he being released on $10,000 bail. Of late years he has spent his time raising horses and drinking whisky, sometimes being drunk and carousing for weeks together. He made no confession, and, having always kept his own counsel, comparatively little will ever be known of the crimes of which he is believed guilty.

SITTING BULL.

His New Programme.

An interview between a Chicago Tribune correspondent at Bismarck and Father Genin, the Sioux missionary, and printed in a recent issue of that journal, announces some events of importance concerning the Indian question in the far North. Father Genin has been a missionary among the Sioux since 1867, and a personal friend of Sitting Bull's for ten years, and his statements may be regarded as authentic. They are not the repetitions of rumors, but the facts as derived from Sitting Bull himself.

The substance of these statements is to the effect that Sitting Bull and his warriors, and numerous other Indians over whom he has control, are discontented with their present situation in the British dominions; first, because they are not well treated, and, second, because of the scarcity of buffalo and other game upon which they subsist. It was on this account that they raided down into the Milk river country last winter, at which time they came about down to Fort Peck. Sitting Bull looks forward to the time when he must move south of the British line or starve. He expects to have trouble with the British forces, and to overpower them, and then is determined to go south to the buffalo country and stay there until our own forces meet him and demand a surrender or fight. In anticipation of this change, he has called a council of all the Indians on the Canadian side, composed of Sioux, Piegans, Assiniboines, Crees, Big Bears, and Chippewas, numbering 6,469 lodges, or about 28,000 warriors, of whom 7,000 are hostiles, to meet on the Little Saskatchewan river about 100 miles from its mouth. Their immediate object is to demand food, and if it is not forthcoming they will attack Maj. Walsh and his mounted police, and, after having overcome them, will then move to the south, where they must of necessity encounter our own forces sooner or later. In his interviews with Father Genin, Sitting Bull stated his wants very explicitly. He desired to return to his own country, and would not fight unless he were compelled. He cared nothing for the mineral wealth of the country, but would be willing to stay north of the Missouri and roam about the Milk river country, which includes a long, narrow strip adjacent to the British frontier in Northern Dakota and Montana, and is full of buffalo and other game. He was also willing to return in person to the United States and hold a conference with the proper authorities at Chicago or Washington if guarantees were given him that he would not be hanged or placed in any personal danger.

Where the Barber Was Ahead.

He thought to head off the voluble barber. Sitting down in a chair, he said: "I want a shave, a shampoo, a bath, a bottle of hair tonic, one of Florida water, a private cup and brush, and a stick of cosmetic." The tonsorial artist was staggered for an instant, but quickly recovering, he suggested that he was the agent for "the patent flexible steel-wire hair brush, warranted to keep in any climate, only one dollar and six bits." The shaver was catching his breath for a fresh start, but the customer slid from the chair and escaped.—Gold Hill News.

RELIEF TO LABOR.

Settling Our Lands With the Laborer the Best Substitute for a Standing Army—Speech of Gen. B. F. Butler in Congress.

I point to the innumerable bills introduced for the appropriation of public moneys for private corporations, steamship companies, railroad grants and guaranties, deepening harbors, improving the navigation of rivers, protection of private lands from overflow of rivers, relief granted to the sufferers from the overflow of rivers, as was done a few years ago in the South; payment of private war claims, generally to one section of the country; moneys, credits and land grants for educational purposes to private corporations; public moneys distributed in charities to the inhabitants of the District of Columbia and foreign nations in distress; maintenance of light-houses, coast-surveys, storm-signals, life-saving stations, fast-mail routes, postal commissions, commissions and appropriations for explorations of all parts of the continent from the Amazon to the North pole; transits of Venus and Mercury, solar parallaxes, bug and grass-hopper commissions, departments for the diffusion of useful knowledge concerning the cultivation of wheat in the West, cotton and sugar in the South, hemp in Kentucky, acclimation of tea-culture, silk-culture, commission upon generation of decayed seeds; commissions to find claims against Mexico; courts of claims to decide disputes as between the Government and individuals; authorizations to the executive departments to adjust every possible claim except the claim of the laboring classes, and that indefatigable body of workers, the Southern Claims Commission, who have discovered enough loyalists who have claims against the Government in the South to have squelched the rebellion, if they had only been there and set down on it when it was going on.

All these precedents for governmental action are in favor of property in its several forms, but where is the legislation for labor? Indeed, the expenditures and gratuities of the Government in this behalf are greater than the entire amount of taxable property of the country as returned by the census in 1870. Let us examine a few of them:

By the acts of July, 1862, (12 Stats., 492), and July 2, 1864, (13 Stats., 59), Congress authorized the issue of guaranteed bonds bearing interest at 6 per cent. currency, payable semi-annually, to the several railroad companies, to the amount of	$ 64,623,000
Upon which, since their issue, Congress has paid, as interest on such bonds	36,212,000
Amounting in all to	$100,835,000
These bonds run for thirty years. The United States will have to pay at least the additional interest on them amounting to	62,048,000
Making the total cash grant to the Pacific railroads	$162,883,000

As these corporations issued bonds on their own account to the amount of $186,000,000 bearing a high rate of interest and as the repayment by the corporations has only been made to the United States by transportation service (about $9,000,000 up to date), no man can doubt that the bonds and interest paid and payable were in fact a free grant by the United States of $162,000,000 to these roads.

In addition to this vast sum in cash, which never will be repaid to the treasury unless it be paid from the sales of the land granted also to the corporations, which the companies hold for sale at $5 per acre, Congress has granted to the several railroad companies since 1862 an empire of 285,000,000 of acres of public lands, which, at $1.25 an acre, the Government price, would be equal to $356,250,000, for which the companies will realize, at $5 per acre, the lowest selling price of the railroads, $1,425,000,000. To this add the amount of the bonded debt and interest, as above stated, $162,883,000, which will make $1,589,883,000, being an amount nearly equal to the entire bonded debt of the Government now outstanding, the result of the war, the lands thus going to aid railroads more than treble in amount the free homesteads ever settled, and making in this class of grants alone a money value equal to one-ninth of the amount of the entire return of taxable property in the United States.

How much capital received of these vast sums and how much labor got for their respective shares, and how much those who had neither capital or labor to give got from these vast grants of land and money, can never be accurately known. But one thing is certain, that the industrial classes never got $1 that they did not work and pay for by their labor. No dividends, no subsidies, no Credit Mobiliers ever came to labor.

Let us take another view of the expenditures of the Government, which I extract from official documents.

Since March 4, 1789, there were paid out of the national treasury for the following purposes, namely:

For war	$ 4,202,972,000
For navy	966,790,000
For Indians	171,377,000
For pensions	428,205,000
For miscellaneous	1,341,688,000
For ordinary expenses, Congress, Executive and Judiciary	7,111,000,500
Making the total cost of the Government from its foundation until now	$14,222,000,000
To this, if we add premiums and interest on the public debt	1,867,000,000
We have the total paid out	$16,089,000,000

being but a little more than the actual value of the subsidies granted to one class of private enterprises, or at the average rate from the foundation of the Government of $180,783,000 annually.—Finance Report of 1877.

Again, the average amount paid for the last five years, ending June 30, 1877:

Army	$ 40,962,000
Navy	21,975,000
Indians	6,914,000
Pensions (incident to the Rebellion)	29,815,000
Miscellaneous (principally war claims)	72,913,000
Congress, Executive and Judiciary	171,000,000
Interest on public debt (incident to Rebellion)	102,666,000
	$444,545,000
To this add premiums paid for the purchase of the bonded debt in 1873 and 1874, $6,500,000, being for the five years, each	1,300,000
Making the average yearly expenses of the Government for the last five years	$445,845,000

Point out in these items, as we have observed in regard to the land grants, bonds and subsidies, any substantial appropriation for the direct benefit of the laborer if you can. Of course it is admitted that the industrial classes reap benefits from these large expenditures, but it must always be borne in mind, I repeat again and again, that every dollar they receive they pay for by their labor after it has been percolated through the absorbing channels of contractors, sub-contractors, dealers and employers. It may be in well-organized society the laborer should always be taken to be but the indirect and smaller beneficiary of the outlay of public money, but the intelligent laborers are beginning to inquire as to the correctness of that organization, as they see that other classes of society receive relatively larger benefits, and that while they grow poorer the non-producing classes grow richer.

One will search in vain in the annals of Congress for the successful advocacy of any notable appropriations in behalf of the laboring or for the elevation of the condition of the industrial classes by the direct appropriation of public money. We hear in tariff and anti-tariff debates of the protection of American labor, but the inspiring cause is generally the rival interest of traders, importers, dealers, and manufacturers in the different sections of the country. So far as legislation is concerned, there are but two great classes of people, the industrial or producing classes, and the property owners and non-producers. The latter direct legislation and govern the country, honestly in the main it may be, but always with their own direct interests controlling public enterprises and inspiring what they are pleased to call reform. Hence the only passing allusions to labor in Congressional debates, except as a sort of side-issue or dealing with it as a cog-wheel in the machinery of trade and for the frequent appeals to the duty of Congress toward commerce and the public creditors, and hosts of interests they are building up from the profits derived from labor.

There is little time or interest expended upon the condition of labor. Of the millions and billions of treasure that have been expended since the foundation of the Government for its war debts and actual Government expenses, or were appropriated in the interests or for the development of trade, commerce, and manufacture, the lion's share went to the non-producing classes, the owners of property. True it is that the Government is mainly employed for the protection of property. As we have observed, the laborer has nothing to be protected. The artisan and mechanic has almost ceased to own property save his experience and skill and physical strength, to expend them for whatever wages he can obtain. And, so far as the United States is concerned, this property of the laborer, or his contracts, or his life are all beyond the protecting power of the national courts. Laborers may be denied payment for labor, and if the amounts are not large enough to give the Federal courts jurisdiction—$2,000 or $5,000 in the Supreme Court—the laborer has no redress there.

The laborer may be deprived of his political franchise by violence and fraud, by combination of the property-owners; and the constitution bristles all over with technical objections against the power of the United States to punish the wrong-doers. Thousands of them may be slaughtered in cold blood, as they have been recently in one portion of the country, and we find that the courts cannot punish, and that it is unconstitutional to use the army to defend. But let a few rioters impede for an hour the course of commerce or destroy or threaten the property of commercial corporations, and the treasury opens wide its doors, the army and navy and the whole military power of the nation is called forth under the constitution to put down the riot, arrest the criminals, and protect the property.

No just or patriotic man will say that commerce or property should not be fostered and protected; and the riot should be suppressed at once at all hazards; and I merely call attention to the fostering and protective, legislative, judicial and executive care for trade and commerce, wealth and property, and to the absence of such fostering care for the laborer, the fulcrum of commerce, the producer and creator of all property and wealth, to point the contrast. The laborer supports the capitalist and the "better classes," as they are called, the whole fabric of the Government, with the sweat of his brow and the toil of his hands, and, either voluntarily or involuntarily, maintains the honor of the flag and the integrity of the nation on the field against treason at home and invasion from abroad.

The laborer is the producer of wealth; capital is the receiver and distributer, and there should be no contest but an equitable reciprocity between them. Neither should get more in fair proportion than the other. As the veins and arteries take up and circulate the blood in the nourishment of the human body, so capital ought to circulate wealth by means of the veins and arteries of trade through the body politic for the nourishment of every part thereof. When the circulation of our blood stagnates, or any organ or member of our body absorbs more than its share, disease ensues, and, if a remedy is not applied, death follows.

Is there no stagnation now? Is there no disease in the body politic, and does wealth equally and properly share in just proportion and nourish all the members of the body of the nation, and circulate equally and steadily through every vein and artery, or is it stagnant and corrupt around the heart and the head, leaving the arms and feet cold as in death and the whole body ready to perish? Woe to us if fever sets in and the paralyzed arm becomes uncontrolled by the will and strikes home, scattering confusion, riot, and death!

I speak these words in all soberness and sorrow, because I feel it my duty so to do. I call attention to the wrong and the necessity of remedy. I call upon Congress here and now to apply that remedy at once. We have spent more than a week over a political question which for its utmost can have no significance in affecting the business of the country, being only whether A or B shall distribute the Federal offices. Would that that week could have been devoted to steady, careful examination of the dangers which surround us and an endeavor to apply a remedy.

Mark my words, for I desire to be held responsible for them; there is great danger if we allow ourselves to go home and give no relief to the present condition of the country. When the day of reckoning comes, as come it must, how mean and pitiful will our economies in appropriations appear.

I know that these views and the consideration of this subject is not a pleasant one. I neither ask for, hope or expect applause for presenting them to this House. If I desired that I would make a speech, if I could, showing how the value of a United States bond in the hand of a common banker could be raised 10 per cent. Or how it were possible that a favorite claim of some section of the country could be saddled on the treasury. Or how the favorite interests of some portions of the country could be subserved by a law adapted to its special interests. Or, if I desired to "bring down the House' in a storm of applause, I would utter some biting sarcasm upon the intellect, or some attack upon the character, of some member of this House.

For myself, let it not be said I have given no plan or detail by which a remedy may be administered. Under the rules of the House I have neither time nor opportunity. I have had to beg time for this almost inopportune speech on this bill, for it will be said: "What has this to do with the Army bill?" I saw no other opportunity in which I could call the attention of the House and the country to this great and, to me, seeming impending danger, and it has this to do with the Army bill:

It is claimed that we must have a large standing army to repress the possible outbreak of the laboring men, to put them down with the bullet and bayonet, the machine-gun and cannon, if they quit work and strike, and bad men should band together and take advantage of their necessities to inaugurate violence and wrong. Remove the cause, and then you will not need an army. The only suggested need of the army will cease except on the Western frontier.

Instead of supporting 400 men at the expense of nearly $1,000,000 a year on the frontier as a regiment, support 400 families with strong, stalwart workingmen at their heads in place of that regiment, and give them arms and they will protect themselves from your Josephs, your Sitting Bulls, or your Indians wherever they may be found. Settle them together in communities of 400 families each, and they will be your army—not of consumers, but an army of producers of large numbers, each settlement stronger than a regiment.

Exercise the power that the constitution has given you and make them United States militi for your frontiers, and, unlike soldiers, when they do not fight they will produce, and not eat the production of others. Send out a selected head of a family willing to work, with his wife and children, and give him forty acres of land and only what your soldiers cost you in transportation, clothing, forage, pay and quarters, and you will have a producer at home to defend himself as our fathers did in New England, as our fathers did in New York, without the aid of any regular army.

Expend the $40,000,000 a year which your army annually costs you in putting settlers on the lands of the frontier with their families who in years will not only be a self-supporting but a self-recruiting army, which shall add to and not decrease your wealth. Then it will be time to talk about disbanding your regular army, cutting it down to a few sergeants to keep the guns and carriages in the several forts painted, and only educate your officers and let them turn their efforts to civil life until by the possible contingency of a foreign war they may be called into action at the head or volunteer soldiers on whom you must at last depend.

Depend in the several States upon a well-regulated United States militia, which the constitution presupposes; and do not let my ear be pained again by hearing it said that militia will not fight, or will sympathise with a mob of rioters. When that hour comes, your regular soldiers cannot be depended upon any more than militia; and the whole history of the armies of the world tells you that the regulars fraternize with the people when the cause of the mob becomes the cause of the people, and the action of the mob is revolution against their oppressors who take away their liberties and their rights.

PETER COOPER'S VIEWS.

He Doesn't Believe in Either Hayes or Tilden, but in the Greenback Cause.

[From the New York Star.]

A reporter interviewed Peter Cooper at his residence, No. 9 Lexington avenue. Mr. Cooper believes that the deposition of Hayes might endanger the peace of the country, but he does not believe that Tilden has the ghost of a chance of being chosen at the next Presidential election. He thinks that the country has so far advanced since the perpetration of the "great fraud" that no man who does not profess faith in a national currency, the abolition of national banks, and some scheme that will keep those who are willing to work employed at fair wages, could possibly be elected by a fair vote of the people. He thinks that enormous frauds were committed by the Republican party, and that the title of Hayes is tainted; but he also thinks that a large proportion of the colored vote cast for Tilden was obtained by bribery and intimidation. He therefore concludes that neither Hayes nor Tilden, but an honest representative of the people, who believes in greenbacks and the rights of labor, is entitled to sit in the executive chair.

Grant, in Mr. Cooper's opinion, might have had a chance of making a successful run in 1880, but he sold out to the national bankers, and thereby ruined his prospects, losing the confidence of the great masses, who are now, and will then, be in an overwhelming majority.

Mr. Cooper is confident that the members of the National party in this city have settled their differences, and laid aside their petty bickerings, and are now working harmoniously for the cause. The party is to hold a convention tomorrow at Washington, their principal object being to petition Congress for the repeal of the Resumption act. Mr. Cooper does not seem to hope for any immediate success from the petition, but appears to have implicit faith in its moral influence on the people at large. He believes that the cause of which he has for many years been the faithful apostle, and in the interest of which he has circulated over 2,000,000 of pamphlets, at a cost of over $20,000, will eventually triumph. When the people find out the way they have been swindled by the national banks, he is convinced they will no longer submit to the imposition, and their present quietude can only be accounted for by their ignorance. He hopes, however, that the revolution which is sure to come may be of a bloodless and peaceable character.

Sherman's Syndicate.

No one has yet taken the trouble to show what John Sherman's Syndicate has made by the purchase of the $50,000,000 4½ per cent. thirty-years bonds. It must be recollected that the 4-per-cent. bonds, called the popular loan, were being taken at the rate of over $5,000,000 per month, which would, by the 1st of January, 1879, have amounted to over $50,000,000. On the 1st of April John Sherman went to New York and arranged with his partners in the Syndicate to take $50,000,000 worth of bonds at 4½ per cent., paying them 1 per cent. for making the trade.

Fifty million dollars' worth of thirty-year bonds at 4 per cent. would, at simple interest, cost $60,000. But bankers and bondholders always calculate on compound interest, and the compound interest on $50,000,000 for thirty years at 4 per cent. is $162,169,900. The simple interest on $50,000,000 at 4½ per cent. for thirty years is $66,750,000, and the compound interest for the same time at the same rate is $189,133,500. This shows that the trade that John Sherman made with his partners in the Syndicate cost the already overburdened taxpayers $6,750,000 in gold in interest, and allows Sherman and his partners to make on the money thus wrung from the sweat and blood of the people, $26,963,900. That there was no necessity for this Syndicate trade is proved by the fact that the 4 per cent. bonds were taken at the rate of over $5,000,000 per month, which proves conclusively that if the 4½ per cent. bonds had been issued in small denominations and placed at the various Government depositories they would readily have been taken by the people to a larger amount than disposed of to Sherman's Syndicate, and that without costing the Government 1 per cent. for premium, whilst the Syndicate is paid a large amount. What are the profits made by the premiums on these bonds, which the Syndicate is making, cannot be so readily arrived at, but that shown above can easily be calculated by any one having a knowledge of how to compute simple and compound interest. Not even Potter's investigating committee could find what John Sherman's interest in that steal amounts to, for it is a steal, and everyone who knows Sherman believes that he does not do that kind of work without having his divy in the spoils.—Washington Cor. Chicago Times.

Dangerous Paper Hangings.

The Boston Traveller says: "Poisonous wall paper is becoming so common, and it is so difficult to distinguish it from the harmless article, that it seems to be the part of prudence not to paper rooms. Dealers are not to blame for this state of things, but the manufacturers are, and they have no more right to spread arsenic on the walls of dwellings than milkmen have to place it in the milk they sell—the milkmen would never think of doing anything of the kind. Arsenic is well known to be a cumulative poison, and men can no more breathe it with safety than they can swallow it with safety, and it is inhaled by every one who makes use of rooms papered with arsenic-laden paper. Health is first destroyed, and then life is lost, by inhaling the air of rooms that are poisoned in the papering. Women and children, as being the more domestic, are the greater sufferers, and nursing mothers and their babes are peculiarly open to the workings of the reeking poison that comes from beautiful walls."

THE LOUISIANA CONSPIRACY.

Paymaster Smith's Examination.

After the examination of Darrall, Paymaster Smith was called to the witness chair. The chief point of his testimony concerned the President's apparent prejudice against Anderson, the Louisiana Supervisor. At Anderson's request Smith called on the President to get his indorsement or approval of the appointment of Anderson to a better office than Smith had offered him. Anderson wanted something worth $9,000 a year, and thought he would get it if he could see Mr. Hayes. The latter, with strong appearance of disgust, refused to be interviewed by Anderson, and gave Smith to understand that he did not think the Supervisor had a good claim for executive favor, but did not object to giving him a minor appointment. The effort of Smith to show Mr. Hayes' contempt for the Anderson sort of people was not particularly creditable to Hayes. It merely showed that, having pocketed the proceeds of Anderson's dishonesty, the President wanted to get rid of him as quickly and cheaply as possible. He despised the swindler as men are apt to do under such circumstances, while cheerfully accepting the profits of the swindle. Gen. Butler asked Smith if he had been in consultation with anybody at the White House in relation to his testimony. The other Republicans on the committee objected to the question, and Smith refused to answer unless expressly required to do so by the committee. He might as well have answered in the affirmative, for nothing would have been easier than a denial, if he could have safely made it. The administration people seem to be making a practice of capturing and "cramming" witnesses summoned by the committee—a practice that, if persisted in, may demand action on the part of the House. Secretary Sherman's lawyer is said to have tried this plan with Mrs. Jenks, who is supposed to know something about the Sherman letter, of which so much has been said, and the visite of Darrall to Mr. Hayes, while his examination was unfinished, are disagreeably suggestive.

John Sherman Attempts a Diversion.

Having appeared before the Committee of Investigation, and, in effect, confessed that he wrote the Anderson letter, Mr. John Sherman finds that he has not helped his case, and deems it advisable to make some further attempt. Here is what he now proposes, as it is stated in the New York Times:

WASHINGTON, June 7.

The Potter Investigating Committee was in secret session to-day. A communication was received from Secretary Sherman, reciting that he is charged in the preamble to the resolution authorizing the investigation with complicity in election frauds in Louisiana, and requesting that immediate inquiry be made into this charge. The Secretary furnished the committee with the names of about fifty witnesses, who, he says, will prove that outrages and intimidation were perpetrated upon white and black Republican voters in Louisiana to such an extent as to deter them from exercising their rights at the polls, and requested that these witnesses be called.

This written communication is almost as decidedly a confession as was the oral testimony which Mr. Sherman gave on Saturday week. He is charged with being accessory to the preparation of fraudulent documents concerning the election in Louisiana, and with conspiring to change the true returns of that election so as to give the electoral votes of the State to Rutherford B. Hayes when they belonged to Samuel J. Tilden. These are the things which this committee is appointed to investigate, and Mr. Sherman's invitation to inquire into something entirely different says, about as plainly as words can say, that the proper inquiry of the committee is one that he wishes to evade—is one dangerous to him and to the administration of which he makes a part.

This new move of Mr. Sherman's won't avail to draw away attention from the facts already established against him through evidence of his own. These facts are that when two Supervisors of Registration in Louisiana, having charge of the election in two parishes in which a Republican majority was absolutely indispensable to the counting in of the Hayes electors, were on the point of publishing the truth when the election in their parishes had not only resulted largely in favor of the Democrats, but had been orderly and peaceful, furnishing to the Returning Board no ground for throwing out votes or altering returns—when these Supervisors were on the point of revealing the nature of the protests which had been made in their names, then Mr. Sherman, having given them oral promises on which they would not rest, wrote to them the following letter:

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 20, 1876.

GENTLEMEN: Your note of even date has been received. Neither Mr. Hayes, myself, the gentlemen who accompany me, or the country at large can ever forget the obligations under which you will have placed us, should you stand firm in the position you have taken. From a long and intimate acquaintance with Gov. Hayes, I am justified in assuming responsibility for promises made, and will guarantee that you shall be provided for as soon after the 4th of March as may be practicable, and in such manner as will enable you both to leave Louisiana, should you deem it necessary. Very truly yours,

JOHN SHERMAN.

Mr. D. A. Weber and James E. Anderson.

This letter, with his own refusal positively to disclaim its authorship, makes out the case against him; and when he attempts to leave these points and go into other spheres, such, for instance, as contending that in fifty cases in Louisiana Republican voters were kept away from the polls, his proposition is wholly extraneous to the subject. What Sherman has to deal with is his own letter. Let him confine himself to that.—New York Sun.

What Will Be Done With Darrall?

It is understood that before Darrall went upon the witness stand a bargain was effected with him on behalf of certain persons in high station whom his testimony, true or false, was likely to blacken. That the bargain either was known to the President or was to be made known to him by Darrall, is apparent:

In answer to a question by Mr. Blackburn, the witness said that yesterday he waited in the committee room until after 1 o'clock, when, desiring to see the President before leaving the city, he went to the Senate and informed Mr. Kellogg that he was going to the White House, and if the committee desired his attendance a telegram would find him there. Upon reaching the White House the Sergeant-at-Arms overtook him, and he returned forthwith. He had business with the President, and hearing he was going away desired to see him before he left.

What "business" could this scoundrel have with the President of the United States? To find a substantial difference between him and Anderson in his favor is very difficult. Darrall was a candidate for the New Orleans Collectorship. He learned from Anderson that the latter was possessed of Sherman's letter, of letters from Matthews, and of documents by which representatives and partisans of the administration could be seriously annoyed. He swears that he knew Anderson was a monstrous liar, a perjurer, a forger, and a blackmailer; yet he proceeded to do all he could to procure Anderson an appointment, and to use Anderson and his masked battery of blackmail as the means of securing the New Orleans Collectorship for himself. He called on the President shortly after his inauguration, and recommended to him Anderson's appointment, giving as his reasons Anderson's active part in Louisiana politics, and his intelligence! It appears to have been after this interview with Darrall that Mr. Hayes wrote the reference of Anderson's successful application for a Consulship to the Secretary of State. Darrall explicitly swears that he sought Anderson's assistance for himself with Stanley Matthews after he knew that Matthews had been threatened in a blackmailing manner by Anderson, toward whom, he says, Matthews remained well disposed in spite of Anderson's threats and insults. Ben Butler compelled Darrall to confess, notwithstanding his persistent attempt at evasion, that he engaged in this blackmail co-partnership even before he was out of his seat in Congress.

Mr. Butler (interrupting)—Pardon me, you were about to become a candidate for a high office under the Government. Here was a drunken, miserable fellow down in Louisiana, or had been there—a man who you had learned had got a corrupt agreement to have the Naval Officership—you, a member of Congress who had not yet been unseated, and you about to make an application—don't you know whether that rascal came and made an offer of services to you or you went to him? A. Well, sir, Anderson and myself had had a conversation in regard to the Collectorship before I became a candidate. In regard to Packard——"

Q. Leave him out. A. About myself I can't swear whether the suggestion came from him or me, or from some friend of mine.

Q. I mean the suggestion that the loafer should take part of it. That's what I want. A. I remember writing Anderson about that matter.

Q. Didn't you write him to come over and help you? A. I wrote him a number of letters.

Q. (sharply,) Did you write to him, before he said anything to you, to come and help you? A. I think I did.

Q. Don't you believe you did? A. That's my best recollection. Unless I saw the letter I could not tell.

Q. What induced you to go to Philadelphia for this miserable man to aid you in your candidature? A. I stated that Anderson had suggested the matter to me a number of times, and it was so understood. He held papers or documents that the powers that were would be willing and glad to listen to.

Still later, he made this admission:

Q. If these documents had not been published you would have been willing to have owed your election to the efforts of a perjurer and blackmailer with false documents as Collector at one of the principal offices? A. You have stated him to be such.

Q. You yourself stated it now. A. Not of my own personal knowledge.

Q. You knew the man to be corrupt. You believed his affidavit to be false. You knew his acquaintances would say he was a drunkard, and you knew that using these documents for this purpose was simply blackmailing. A. Certainly.

Q. Then haven't you stated all that I have? A. Substantially.

Q. Then we don't substantially differ, and you were sorry you failed? A. Naturally.

The spirit of this fellow's testimony, from beginning to end, shows that he has been coached by parties interested, and his fruitless determination not to tell anything which he could contrive to conceal is one of the most discouraging features of these disclosures. The presumption of a bargain is irresistible; and Darrall's cool call at the White House, because he did not like to leave Washington without saying adieu to Mr. Hayes, will awaken a solicitude to watch the future progress of Mr. Darrall's relations with the administration and the high personage, whom, in his sadder moments, he characterized as the "psalm-singing hypocrite."

THE FLORIDA THEFT.

Resume of the Testimony Taken by the Florida Sub-Committee.

Following is a brief and complete summary of the testimony taken in Florida by the Potter sub-committee:

The witnesses examined were ex-Secretary of State McLin, ex-member of the Returning Board; the three officers of Baker county who made a false canvass; Edward Clark, of Leon county, one of the canvassing board, who counted in seventy-four fraudulent votes of Leon county; Cox, Clerk of Baker county, and Booth, one of the inspectors in precinct No. 13, Leon county. These witnesses were all Republicans, and principal actors in the frauds that culminated in declaring the State of Florida for Mr. Hayes.

McLin, the most important witness, testified that the statement heretofore made by him and published was true, and then proceeded to narrate in detail the facts that constituted the frauds by which the State was taken from Mr. Tilden, and the record made to show that the State was carried by Hayes. McLin's testimony shows conclusively that he, at the time he aided in declaring the result of the canvass of the Returning Board, was aware of the frauds committed in Baker county, and also of ballot-box stuffing in Leon county, and that the Baker county fraud was the result of a conspiracy originated and carried out by the Collector of Customs at Fernandina, Gov. Stearns, and others, whose interest it was to steal the State from the Democrats. McLin testified that Stearns saw all of the returns of the different parts of the State, and said to witness that the fraudulent return from Baker county was read and used at the first opening and reading of returns, at the commencement of the labors of the board; that Stearns also told him that by the use of the fraudulent Baker county return the State went for Hayes. In the case of ballot-box stuffing in Leon county, McLin swore that he knew of the printing of a diminutive ballot on election day, for the purpose of stuffing ballot-boxes. McLin also testifies that Noyes was the leader of the visiting statesmen, and that it was distinctly represented to him (the witness) that Noyes represented Mr. Hayes, and that it was promised through Mr. Noyes that he (the witness) would be rewarded if the State was counted for Hayes. In confirmation of this statement McLin said Noyes called upon him just upon the eve of his leaving Tallahassee, thanking him for his labor on the Returning Board; that afterward he wrote to Mr. Noyes, and received a reply from him stating that he was so well pleased with McLin's letter that he had indorsed it and sent it to Mr. Hayes; that shortly afterward witness received a telegram, sent by order of Hayes, tendering him the appointment of Associate Justice of New Mexico. McLin testified that soon afterward he responded to the telegram by saying he would accept the position, and his appointment came. McLin confesses to having received the fraudulent Baker county returns in an irregular and illegal way, by receiving it at the hands of Gov. Stearns instead of by mail, as required by law. McLin further testified that Hayes acted as attorney before the Returning Board in defense of the Alachua county frauds, known as Archer Precinct No. 2, where the precinct return was forged by adding 219 names to it. He was also present at the time of the opening and reading of the returns of the State before the Returning Board, at the commencement of its proceedings, when the true return from Baker county, which would make Mr. Tilden's majority ninety-five in the State, was suppressed, and the fraudulent return from that county counted, which gave the State to Hayes by forty-three majority. The testimony also developed the fact that on Baker county three witnesses—Driggers, Allen and Green—formed a canvassing board of their own, made a canvass of the vote of that county by throwing out two precincts without law or reason, and, as sworn to by themselves, for the purpose of giving the county to the Republicans, and, as it afterward turned out, the State to Mr. Hayes. They testify, in substance, that Green, was appointed a Justice of the Peace for the express purpose of getting a canvass that should rid the Democrats of their majority in that county. All three of these witnesses give detailed corroborative statements of the manner in which the wrong was consummated.

The President's Title—Gen. Butler's Argument.

Gen. Butler, as an individual member of the Judiciary Committee, submitted at great length to the House of Representatives, just before adjournment, his reasons for dissenting from the resolution and report of the majority in regard to the inviolability of the President's title. He thinks it remarkable that, in the face of the sixth section of the act establishing the Electoral Commission, the committee should have come to the conclusion that the proceedings of a committee or of Congress subsequent thereto constitute an immovable finality, when the law itself declares the contrary, and the contrary was emphatically assured by the House of Representatives. Instead of constituting a finality these proceedings were on their face and in express terms merely a temporary expediency or device to avoid the contingency of a lapsed election for which the constitution had made no provision. Congress, he says, by express words of the law declared that its object and effect were provisional only. The President entered upon his office with the express notice that his tenure was questionable in character, of doubtful validity, not made absolute by the interposition of an extra-constitutional commission, but to be examined and adjudicated upon by the courts.

He agrees with the committee that Congress has no power, under the constitution, to confer upon the Supreme Court of the United States the original jurisdiction sought for it in the Blair-Kimmel bill, but he says: "The question at issue is whether the actual President of the United States has a just and legal title to the office he holds. A contestation upon that question, if it were possible to be had before a court, would make a 'case,' which may well enough be defined to be a controversy between contending parties under the forms of law before a court."

A Lake of Fire.

Mrs. Brassey, an English woman who accompanied her husband in a recent yacht voyage round the world, thus describes the crater of the great Sandwich island volcano Kilauea: "We were standing on the extreme edge of a precipice, overhanging a lake of molten fire, 100 feet below us, and nearly a mile across. Dashing against the cliffs on the opposite side, with the noise like the roar of a stormy ocean, waves of blood-red, fiery, liquid lava hurled their billows upon an iron-bound headland, and then rushed up the face of the cliffs to toss their gory spray high in the air. The restless, heaving lake boiled and bubbled, never remaining the same for two minutes together. * * * There was an island on one side of the lake, which the fiery waves seemed to attack unceasingly with relentless fury, as if bent on hurling it from its base. On the other side was a large cavern, into which the burning mass rushed with a loud roar, breaking down in its impetuous, headlong career the gigantic stalactites that overhung the mouth of the cave, and flinging up the liquid material for the formation of new ones. It was all terribly grand, magnificently sublime; but no words could adequately describe such a scene."

No Bones in the Ocean.

Mr. Jeffrey has established the fact that bones disappear in the ocean. By dredging, it is common to bring up teeth, but rarely ever a bone of any kind; these, however compact, dissolve if exposed to the action of the water but a little time. On the contrary, teeth—which are not bones any more than whales are fish—resist the destroying action of sea-water indefinitely. It is, therefore, a powerful solvent. Still, the popular opinion is that it is a brine. If such were the case, the bottom of the sea would, long ago, have been shallowed by immense accumulations of carcasses and products of the vegetable kingdom constantly floating into them. Dentine, the peculiar material of which teeth are formed, and the enamel covering them, offer extraordinary resistance to these chemical agencies which resolve other animal remains into nothingness. Mounds in the West, tumuli in Europe and Asia, which are believed to antedate sacred history for thousands of years, yield up perfectly sound teeth, on which time appears to have made no impression whatever.

ONE of the plagues of Egypt has visited several districts in County Derry, Ireland. A fly, hitherto unknown, but almost the size of a house-fly, has appeared in such vast numbers as to fill the air like a mist. They molest the animal kingdom alone, swarming about horses, cattle and men, and inflicting a venomous sting which produces inflammation, sometimes closing the eyes of horses and driving cattle wildly home from the field.

IN the Italian Chamber of Deputies, recently, Signor Baccariti, the Minister of Public Works, brought in a bill for the construction of new railways at a total cost of about $166,000,000. The expenditure for national lines is wholly to be borne by the State; and, as regards the local, provincial, and interprovincial lines, the Government will contribute in various proportions.

PARIS LETTER.

THE EXPOSITION AS COMPARED WITH OTHER SIGHTS IN PARIS. WHEREIN THIS EXPOSITION EXCELLS THAT AT PHILADELPHIA. A REMARKABLE FINE ART DISPLAY. PAINTINGS BY DORE, JEROME AND MESSONIER. A PICTURE FOR WHICH $60,000 WERE PAID, AND OTHER PAINTINGS BY THE SAME ARTIST. HOW MESSONIER PAINTS A BATTLE. CAVALRY BEFORE THE CHARGE. PORTRAITS OF HORSES, ETC., ETC.

(From our regular correspondent.)

No. 29 RUE CAUMARTIN, June, 11, '78.

The world's fair in the Champs de Mars is, in the opinion of the American visitor, not the most interesting display in this city of monuments, art salons, and museums. "Have you been to the Exposition?" is a question frequently asked at table, and the reply is often to this effect: "No, I came here to see Paris and not to examine the advertising displays of European, Asiatic, and African, and American shopkeepers." I have mentioned the four grand divisions in the order of their importance, as they appear in the Champs de Mars. Many insist that they can see quite as fine displays in the windows that line the boulevards. Except for those who are interested in the study of a particular class, or special subject, and who desire to study it exhaustively and to compare it with similar exhibits of other countries, the Exposition is not of paramount interest. Taken by itself it is, no doubt, a magnificent display, the best ever made of the best achievments of human invention, skill, and industry, as well as of the most unique and generous specimens of nature's products. Could we but eliminate the rubbish of trafficing claptrap, the remainder would well repay years of study, and be a liberal education in itself. But, when compared with this wonderful city, every street, every church, every monument of which is eloquent with history—the Exposition is not the unique attraction that it was at Philadelphia. A question frequently asked is how does this Exposition compare with the Centennial, and it is very generally conceded that in richness, taste, and variety of display, this is much the finer; but this opinion is usually qualified by the remark, that, all things considered, the Philadelphia Exposition was the more wonderful of the two. It is in art and decoration display that the French excell all other people, and the profusion of excellent works in marble, on canvas, and in brass, is what chiefly distinguishes this Exposition from ours. We had a very superb display no doubt in Memorial Hall, but Memorial Hall with its annex would not contain one-fourth of the Fine Arts exhibit here. The distingished American sculptor and art critic, Mr. Story, said yesterday, that he had spent ten days in the Art Department alone, but that time had not sufficed him to penetrate beyond the borders. The visitor to the French Art department will see paintings by Dore, Bonnat, Cabinal, and Jerome. He will see as many as a dozen by Messonier whose canvas, when not larger than a school boys small slate, sell readily for $5,000. The reader will remember that A. T. Stewart gave $60,000 (or was it $75,000?) for his "Cavalry charge at Frieldland," painted soon after the capture of Paris by the Prussians, and painted, it was said, in revengeful bitterness, to remind all who should see it that there was a time when the resistless sweep of French conquest humiliated Prussia. Messonier's forte is cavalry men. I have seen but two pictures by him in which there was no horses, and one of those was a portrait of the younger Dumas. His pictures do not, at first, attract attention. They appear commonplace amid the many highly colored and theatric paintings that surround them. Perhaps the gazers interest will be first stimulated by seeing the name of the artist, but look more carefully at that long line of cavalry, drawn up as if in parade. They are not in line with the regularity of West Point cadets, horses will not stand that way, but the fear of curb and spur keeps them in tolerable order. They are not the conventional horses we have seen in common pictures, made up of carved lines, every one like the other, nor are they the horses of Hebrew poetry with necks thunder clothed, pawing the valley in their wrath, smelling the battle from afar. They are horses that would much prefer twelve ears of corn to any such business. Each horse is an individual brute in whose face, and eyes, and ears and muscles, the admirer of the animal will read distinguished characteristics. But there is something more here than excellent portraits of horses. Many of those animals are veterans. They have been riened and spurred through battles; they have memory, and know that the infantry moving in font of them, and the artillery forming on the hills, and a certain energy of preparation that they have caught from their riders, are sights, and sounds, and signs, that forebode something more than a review. This half intelligent fear and restlessness of the brute, in sympathy with a heroic seriousness varied in the physiognomy of every rider in the climax of the quiet. It is no parade, a battle is raging, and these brave men, "uncorpsed and demi-natured with brave beasts" are in that moment of suspense that precedes the charge. The battle cannot be seen, but a few rods in front of the line an old Marshal is sitting on his quiet horse, (a common artist would have painted the horse standing on his hind feet or in some other rediculous attitude) quietly pointing out to commanders of batallions the parts and points they are to take in the charge, while on a distant hill, surrounded by his staff, may be discerned an almost microscopic Napoleon. This may be Austerlitz, or Waterloo, or any other of the hundred fields where he held his cavalry in reserve to pile confusion on defeat. No picture representing the shock of battle with rearing horses and reeking sabre could be half so effective as this quiet powerful painting by Messonier. To be able to produce so many horses, each a distinct portrait, and yet to sustain in each an expression of vague apprehension, arising to unfaltering seriousness in the face of the rider, is a splendid triumph of genius, or patience, or something. C. A. S.

Turkish Love of Water.

A Turk, writes a traveler, thinks he can do nothing so grateful to God and man as the setting up of a fountain by the roadside or in the streets of the city where the wayfarer and their animals may appease their thirst and bless the name of him who provided for their wants. Often in my travels I have halted beneath the shade of a widespreading plane tree to slack my thirst at the limpid waters of a marble fountain, and to repose from the noonday heat. There is always some edifying distich from the Koran, that "Water is the gift of God, and blessed is he who distributes it," or that "Water is the source of health and life," etc. There is a practical piety in these monuments of charity, that speaks well for the benevolent disposition of the Mussulman.

The Turks are great consumers of water, and they are good judges of its quality and nice in what they use. The favorite water that is sold at a para a glass in the streets is from Asia; either from Tchamlidja on the mountain about Scutari, or from Karakoulak, some ten miles up the Bosphorus, several miles inward from Belcos. This is brought to the landing in barrels, on horses' backs, put in barges, and in this way carried to Constantinople before daylight. Notwithstanding the length of the journey, it is as clear as crystal. The venders cry it as "Bowz guibi"—as good as ice. A pacha will drain two goblets at a swallow. As water is said to have fattening properties, the large draughts they take of it may be the cause, in part, of the obesity to which both sexes of the Turks are subject.

How Indians Hunt Buffalo.

The commandant of a post generally gives the Indians under his control permission to go on a buffalo hunt about twice a year. A party of from two to three hundred are allowed to go out at once, and may be out for from thirty to ninety days, being during that time accompanied by two or three soldiers from the garrison. The party is divided and the herd is surrounded, the circuit being almost a half mile in diameter. When about half way around the signal is given to charge, and the bucks commence to ply their arrows. The excited buffaloes run backwark and forward, until probably one-fifth of them are killed, when the hunt is temporarily over, at least.

The squaws have, in the meantime, come along and picked up their husbands' clothing, and follow after to complete the work of the chase. The buck, having shot his buffalo, rushes forward to pass the animal over so that he will not fall on the side which the arrow has pierced and break it. He cuts the arrow out of its place, puts it pack in its quiver, and then marks the buffalo with his peculiar brand, which may be a cut in the nostril, in the ear, thigh or some other part of the body. Here again, then, the squaw gets her onerous share of the work in. She distinguishes the animal her buck has slain, skins it, cut the meat away from the bones in the most convenient and hurried manner, and packs it to where the bucks have already made a permanent camp, in the vicinity of the nearest water.

Fish.

Great reduction in Pickerel—they never, in the history of the country, sold so low. Just received five hundred half barrels, which we offer at $1 75, the usual price is $4. Kits 50c, at the Fort Wayne Fruit House. 4t.

"Don't I Told You So"

One night recently a jolly old German farmer rode to Chestnut Hill from Whitemarsh after a physician for his wife who was very sick. He dismounted from his horse in front of a saloon just as the boys inside had begun to make merry over their first keg of beer. He approached and looked cautiously around the scene. The foaming glasses were held high above the heads of the revelers as one of the number pronounced a toast appropriate to the occasion.

The silent watcher licked his lips and wished his errand had been one not requiring so much dispatch. He was turning reluctantly away when the crowd saw him.

"Hallo!' they shouted, 'there's Fritz Bring him in.'

He was laid hold upon and hauled up to the bar, all the time protesting.

"Poys, I vas in a quick hurry. Old vooman sick like the tuyval. I vas come mit der doctor, sooner as lightnin'.'

"Well, you can take some beer while your here, and kill two birds with one stone,' was the reply.

"Yaas, I kill von chicken with a couple of stones, und der ole vooman die mitout ders toctor. I ton't forgot myself of it, eh?'

"Oh, she won't die. You don't get beer often, and you've got the old woman all the time. Fill 'em up again.'

"Yaas, I got her all der time, but exposing she go dade, I ton't got her anymore somedimes. It's better to go mit der doctor, seldom right avay.

But he didn't go. As one glass after another was forced upon him by the reckless crowd, the object of his errand was floating further and further from his vision, until it was carried out of his mind altogether, and his voice, untinged with anxiety, joined in the drinking songs, and arose above all others.

Thus he was found by his son late that night. The boy grasped him by the sleeve and said:

"Fader, come home."

Fritz returned, and at the sight of his boy a great fear arose in his mind, swept away the fumes of his beer, and brought him to the sense of the situation. In an awe-struck tone he said:

"Yawcub, how you vas come here? Vas somedings der matter?'

"Yaw,' replied the boy.

"Vell, spoke up apout it. Vas der ole vooman—vas your mudder—vas she dade? I can shtand dem best. Don't keep your fader in expense, poy. Spid it out! Vas ve a couples of orphanses, Yawcub?'

"Nine,' answered the boy. "You vas anuder. A leedle baby coom mit der house.'

Fritz was overcome for a moment, but finally stammered out:

"Vos dot so? I expose it vas not so soon already. Vell, vell, in der middle of life we don't know what's to turn up next! Fill up the glasses.'

The boy ventured to ask the old man why he had not sent the doctor.

"Vy did she vant a toctor? Petter she tole me so. I get him pooty quick. Never mind; I safe more as ten tollar toctor bill on dat baby. Dat vas a goot child. Fill up der glasses. Whooray for dat leedle buck baby! Ve von't go home till yesterday!'

Fritz got home at last, and was in Chestnut Hill again in a couple of days for some medicine. The boys couldn't get him back again, though he said to them:

"You bet I 'tend to my pecuness now. —Kenesaw Gazette.

Afraid to Bid.

At an auction sale of miscellaneous goods on Michigan Avenue, says a Chicago paper, the auctioneer put up a wolf robe, and invited bids. An old man inspected it closely, seemed to think there was a bargain in it, and yet he hesitated to bid.

"Don't you want it,' asked the auctioneer.

"Yes, kinder,' was the reply.

"Then why don't you bid and take it?'

"Well, I've bought heaps o' things in dry goods and so on,' slowly rejoined the old man, "and I never yet took home anything that the old woman thought was worth the price. If I got that 'ere robe for over fifteen cents, she'd grab it up, pull at one end, chew on a corner, and call out, 'Cheated agin—more'n half cotton!' That's the reason I dasn't bid!'

The Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, the able Democratic member of Congress, is the way the republican papers now put it since Stephens would not vote on the Potter resolution for investigation. They used to speak of him as the old shriveled up democratic traitor vice-president of the defunct southern confederacy! A fellow feeling makes us wondrous kind.—Herald.

"Take Off Your Coat, Gibbs."

Judge—Where did you find this colored man, officer?

Officer—I found him last night hanging around a clothing store. They have had a good deal of clothing stolen lately and I brought this man on suspicion.

Judge—What is your name, prisoner?

Prisoner—Napoleon Bonaparte Gibbs.

Judge—What is your occupation?

Gibbs—I'se traveling agent fo' de new patent whitewash brush, sah.

Judge—Take off your coat Gibbs.

Gibbs—I hope you 'scuse me, sah. Ise been troubled lately with the 'fluency in de head, de zootic, sah. I'se very bad.

Judge—Take off your coat, Gibbs. (Gibbs takes off his coat slowly.)

Judge—Ah! Another coat under that; nothing like being wrapped up well, as they say, in Alaska when they go skating. Take off your coat, Gibbs.

Gibbs—I isn't well, I isn't, sah. De doctor say, Napoleon, you wear plenty clothes. De 'fluency, sah. (Takes off his coat.)

Judge—Ah! What have we here? A swallow-tail? Take off your coat, Gibbs.

Gibbs—Dis yere won't do, Judge. I'se got a stuffiness in de borax. I's very bad (Takes off his coat.)

Judge—Ah! A double breasted frock Take off your coat, Gibbs.

Gibbs—Dar's gwine to be a funeral here, dar is, sah; I feels de stuffness rising in de borax. (Takes off his coat.)

Judge—What's this? A shooting jacket, by the soul of Nimrod! Take off your coat, Gibbs.

Gibbs—I'se gwine for a herpes—I'se getting cold. Dis yere is murder in de fustest degree. (Takes off his coat.)

Judge—A linen duster. I think I've got you down to hard pan, Gibbs. I shall commit you without bail. Take him down gently, officer, for he is a lily—a lily of the valley. He toils not, neither does he spin; yet Solomon, in all his glory, was not clothed like him. —Graphic.

What Voices Indicate.

There are light, quick, surface voices that involuntarily seem to utter the slang, "I won't do to tie to." The man's words may assure you of his strength of purpose and reliability, yet this tone contradicts his speech.

Then there are low, deep, strong voices, where the words seem ground out, as if the man owed humanity a grudge, and ment to pay it some day. That man's opponents may well tremble and his friends may trust his strength of purpose and ability to act.

There is the coarse, boisterous, dictatorial tone, invaribly adopted by vulgar persons, who have not sufficient cultivation to understand their own insignificance.

There is the incredulous tone, that is full of a covert sneer, or a secret "You can't-dupe-me-sir" intonation.

Then there is the whining, beseeching voice, that says "sycophant" as plainly as if it uttured the word. It cajoles and flatters you; its words say "I love you—I admire you; you are everything that you should be."

Then there is the tender, musical, compassionate voice, that sometimes goes with sharp features (as they indicate merely intensity of feeling) and sometimes with blunt features, but always with genuine benevolence.

If you are full of effection and pretence, your voice proclaims it.

It you are full of honesty, strength and purpose, your voice proclaims it.

If you are cold and calm and firm and consistant, or fickle and foolish and deceptious, your voice will be equally truth telling.

You cannot change your voice from a natural to an unnatural tone without it being known that you are doing so.

An Undeniable Truth.

You deserve to suffer, and if you lead a miserable, unsatisfactory life in this beautiful world, it is entirely your own fault and there is only one excuse for you—your unreasonable prejudice and skepticism, which has killed thousands. Personal knowledge and common sense reasoning will soon show you that Green's August Flower will cure you of liver complaint, or dyspepsia, with all its miserable effects, such as sick headeche, palpitation of the heart, sour stomach, habitual costiveness, dizziness of the head, nervous prostration, low spirits, &c. Its sales now reach every town on the Western Continent and not a Druggist but will tell you of its wonderful cures. You can buy a sample bottle for 10 cents, at F. E. Davenport.

Presidential Aspirations.

Senator Edmunds says, writes a Washington correspondent, there are so many Presidential candidates on the Committee on Judiciary, that business is very much behind. He says that on the day when the committee meets, Conkling will come in first and find a slim attendance. He will sit a little while, impatiently, and say:

"Well I don't suppose there will be a quorum this morning, and I have other matters to attend to. If Davis and Thurman would drop their Presidential aspirations and attend to committee business we could do something."

And he will go out. Then Thurman will come in and ask:

"Where's Conkling?"

When told that he had been in and left to look after other matters, he will say:

"Where's Davis?"

"Davis hain't come."

"Well,' Thurman will say, "Conkling and Davis have got the Presidency on the brain, and of course we can't expect anything of them. Call me when you get a quorum."

And he will go out. Then Davis will come in and say:

"Well, Conkling and Thurman are absent again. Those two men are so busy working up their Presidential campaigns that they neglect their Senatorial duties.

And so it goes, every week, Edmunds says.

An old soldier, relating his experience at a temperance meeting in Iowa, said that at one time he got possession of two kegs of whiskey, took them to camp, put a faucet in one of them, and passed the whisky around among the boys until they all got pretty full About the time the keg was empty, he said, for a moment his conscience told him he was doing wrong. He picked up an ax and knocked the head of the other keg in, and—(here he was interrupted by the deacons' startling cry of "Amen! Thank God! Glory be to God.' After the house became quiet, he continued: "I knocked in the head of that keg, gave the boys a tin cup, and told them to help themselves." It was a case of premature enthusiasm, and the wicked scoffers in the audience had their turn to shout.

NOTICE

TO CONSUMERS

—OF—

LORILLARD Tobacco

The great celebrity of our tin tag tobacco has caused many immitations thereof to be placed on the market, we therefore caution all chewers against purchasing such immitations.

All dealers buying or selling other plug tobacco bearing a hard or metalic label, render themselves liable to the penalty of the law, and all persons violating our trade marks are punishable by fine and imprisonment. See act of congress, Aug. 14, 1876.

The genuine Lorillard Tin Tag Tobacco can be distinguished by a Tin Tag on each lump with the word Lorillard stamped thereon.

Over 7,083 tons tobacco sold in 1877, and nearly 3,000 persons employed in factories.

Taxes paid Gov'm't in 1877 about 3, 00,000, and during past 12 years, over 20 000 000.

These goods sold by all jobbers at manufactrers rates.

WEEKLY NEWS-REVIEW.

THE EAST.

Ex-Gov. Swann, of Maryland, and Mrs. John R. Thompson, widow of United States Senator Thompson, of New Jersey, were married in Princeton, N. J., last week. Mrs. Swann is a sister of Sam Ward, of Washington, and sister-in-law to Speaker Randall, who gave away the bride.

Moses A. Wheelock, who has been widely known for more than twenty years as President of the New York Stock Exchange, committed suicide, the other day, by shooting himself in the head.

S. Angier Chace, defaulting Treasurer of the Fall River (Mass.) Mills, pleaded guilty and was sentenced to twelve years in the State prison and two days' solitary confinement.

In December, 1863, the steamer Chesapeake left New York for Portland, Me., with seventeen passengers and a cargo of merchandise, consisting of cotton and sugar. While en route the passengers, who proved to be Confederates in disguise, took possession of the vessel in the name of the Confederate States, shooting the second engineer and throwing his body overboard, putting the Captain in irons, and seriously wounding the first engineer, whom they compelled to assume command of the vessel, with orders to make for Halifax. All the parties concerned in the affair scattered and made good their escape. Henry A. Parr, the leader of the expedition, who has been living in Canada ever since, made a journey down to Boston the other day and, being arrested on a charge of murder, is now in jail awaiting his trial.

A shocking tragedy was enacted in Philadelphia the other day. George W. Stiles, a wharf-builder, shot his wife, cut the throat of his little daughter, and then attempted to commit suicide by cutting his own throat. The child is dead, and the mother in a dangerous condition. The murderous fiend is recovering.... A match game of billiards for the championship of the United States, three-ball caroms, was played in New York last week between William Sexton, cf that city, and George Slosson, of Chicago. The former won by a score of 600 to 328 for Slosson.

THE WEST.

About 200 tramps boarded a freight train on the Wabash road, at Jacksonville, Ill., on June 21, saying they intended to ride, as they had had all the walking they wanted. Every possible device was employed to get them off the train, but to no purpose. The tramps were determined to stay. The railroad employes were entirely too few to cope with this mob. The consequence was that the tramps stayed on the train until it reached Quincy, when they got off and scattered throughout the city, a number of them being arrested during the night by the police. The region about Quincy is reported to be swarming with tramps, and the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy and the Wabash tracks are reported by passengers to be lined with them for miles.

A Silver City dispatch of June 26 says the assault made by Bernard upon the Indians at Curry creek turns out to be a success. It was a surprise to the savages, about forty of whom were killed. The soldiers were very cool in the charge. The hostile force present was estimated at 700. The Indians retreated to their stronghold in the Stein mountains. It is estimated that the whole force of savage warriors numbers 2,100, and there is every prospect of a protracted campaign. The Stein mountain country is well adapted for defensive operations.

A dispatch from Portland, Oregon, says "it is the belief of old residents in Eastern Oregon that all the Indians in that section are disaffected, and that they will be ready on slight provocation to take up arms against the whites. Even the Warm Spring Indians, who have heretofore been strong friends of the Government, refuse to join their forces against the Bannocks, and it is thought that a large party of them will join the hostiles. It begins to look as if the Indians intend to do their worst this summer."

THE SOUTH.

From accounts received by way of Galveston it appears that Gen. Mackenzie carried matters with a high hand in his recent expedition into Mexico at the head of a column of United States troops. He was confronted by a Mexican detachment of inferior numbers, about forty-five miles from the border, commanded by Col. Valdes, the latter under orders to repel the invasion; but he was informed that he must get his Mexicans out of the way within a certain time or they would be fired upon. The Mexicans not being strong enough to resist, avoided a collision, and the invaders had things all their own way. The expedition is reported to have been fruitless so far as making of captures was concerned.

WASHINGTON.

The Stanley Matthews Senate Committee held its first meeting in Washington on the 21st of June. James E. Anderson was the first witness summoned, but he positively refused to answer any question. He told the committee that if Senator Matthews would go before the Potter Committee and testify, he (Anderson) would answer any questions the Matthews Committee might ask him, but otherwise he would remain dumb as an oyster. In the absence of the Senate, there being no power to punish a contumacious witness, the committee adjourned subject to the call of the Chairman.

The coinage of standard silver dollars since the passage of the Remonetization act has amounted to about $6,500,000—an average of a little more than $2,000,000 per month.... The President has appointed ex-Gov. Michael Hahn Superintendent of the Mint at New Orleans.

Ex-Marshal Pitkin, of Louisiana, in his examination before the Potter Committee, narrated a statement, made to him by George Swasey, of a conference of the members of the Packard Legislature and members of the MacVeagh Commission, immediately preceding the withdrawal of the troops from New Orleans and the recognition of the Nicholls Government. Pitkin gave a detailed story of this caucus, which he had received from a member of the Packard Legislature. At that conference, after a good deal of discussion, MacVeagh said: "If you want to fight, you can do it; but, on next Tuesday, the troops will be withdrawn, and, as the courts are in the hands of the Democrats, you will all be hung up to the lamp-posts." Gen. Butler to witness—I desire to ask you if you had any conversations with either Mr. Hawley or Mr. Harlan before they returned to Washington, after the recognition of the Nicholls Government? A.—Yes, sir; I had. Q.—What was said about providing for those who had lent the administration their services? A.—They said that when they arrived in Washington they would see Mr. Hayes, and arrange to have all the leading Republicans who had borne the brunt of the work in Louisiana taken care of.... William E. Chandler was examined, and testified that he went to Florida at the instance of members of the Republican National Committee. Did not call upon Gov. Hayes or meet him at any time during the trip to Florida and back. Q.—Are you aware of any promises, general or specific, that were made to any members of the Returning Board, before or after the count, that in case the State went for Hayes they should be taken care of? I have no recollection of such promises. Q.—Did not you make such promises? A.—Not to my recollection.

POLITICAL.

Mrs. Capt. Jenks, of New Orleans, was before the Potter committee on Saturday, June 22, to testify in regard to the Sherman letter. Her story in regard to the letter was this: Anderson was pressing Weber to obtain certain guarantees from Sherman, and Weber united with Anderson in writing a joint note to Sherman, a copy of which Anderson produced. This note, she declares, was handed to her sealed to deliver, and that, upon carrying it to a parlor in the St. Charles Hotel, where the visiting statesmen had their sessions, she opened it and became aware of its contents. She never delivered it according to its directions, but upon reaching the parlor she dictated a reply to it at a side desk, inclosed it in an envelope after it was completed, directed it to Weber and Anderson, and carried it back and delivered it to Weber. She refused to state who wrote the letter at her dictation, but said that, after it was written, she picked it from the table, inclosed it, and delivered it to Weber. She declared that Sherman knew nothing of the existence of this letter.

A Portland (Ore.) dispatch says the full election returns for Oregon are as follows: Congress—Whitaker, Dem., 16,554; Hines, Rep., 15,364; Campbell, Ind., 930. Governor—Beckman, Rep., 16,009; Thayer, Dem., 16,063; Wilkins, Ind., 1,353. Secretary of State—Earhart, Rep., 16,146; Reams, Dem., 15,852; Cates, Ind., 1,2[illegible]. Treasurer—Hirsch, Rep., 16,655; Brown, Dem., 15,493; Sutherlin, Ind., 726. State Printer—Carter, Rep., 16,160; Noltner, Dem., 15,689; Craig, Ind., 1,298. Superintendent of Public Instruction—Powell, Rep., 15,951; Stiles, Dem., 15,918; Parker, Ind., 1,108.

An Associated Press telegram from Washington says "it can be stated on authority that the President's civil-service order will be enforced without modification. This order prohibits persons holding Federal positions from taking part in caucuses, primary meetings or conventions, while they will be permitted to support any candidate they choose, and assist in any way that will not interfere with the proper discharge of their official duties. Voluntary contributions to campaign funds are not considered by the President to be a violation of this order."

On Wednesday, June 26, the Illinois Republicans held their State Convention at Springfield, Charles E. Lippincott being President of the meeting. The nominations were as follows: State Treasurer, J. C. Smith; Superintendent of Public Instruction, J. A. Slade. Supreme Court Clerks—For the Northern Grand Division, E. T. Dutton; Central Grand Division, M. B. Converse; Southern Grand Division, Aden Knopf. Appellate Court Clerks—First District, Eli Smith; Second District, J. B. Coombs; Third District, W. N. Duncan; Fourth District, B. L. Ulen. The platform is very brief, merely indorsing the course of the party in the past, and pledging continued confidence in the National Republican party. The financial plank is as follows: We are opposed to any further contraction of the greenback currency, and are in favor of such currency as can be maintained at par with, and convertible into, coin at the will of the holder. We are in favor of such currency being received for import duties, and we deprecate the defeat of the recent bill for that purpose by the Democratic House of Representatives.... The Ohio Democrats met at Columbus in State Convention on the 26th of June, and adopted a platform which sustains the title of President Hayes, while supporting the Potter investigation; demands the repeal of the Resumption act, the substitution of greenbacks for national-bank notes, and no increase of the bonded debt; strict construction and home-rule supremacy of civil over military power; separation of church and state; equality of all citizens before the law; liberty of all individual action unvexed by sumptuary laws; absolute acquiescence in the lawfully-expressed will of the majority; opposition to all subsidies; preservation of the public lands for the use of actual settlers; and the maintenance and protection of the common-school system. Durbin Ward was chosen permanent Chairman. The following ticket was nominated: For Secretary of State, David R. Page; for Supreme Judge, A. F. Hume; member of the Board of Public Works, Rush Field.

GENERAL.

Six murderers were executed in the United States on the 21st of June, viz.: George Sherry and Jeremiah Connolly, at Chicago, for the murder of Hugh McConville, on the 19th of January last; Charles Burns, at Paris, Ill., for the murder of Elijah Bardwell, in October, 1877; Perry Bosher, at Chillicothe, Ohio, for the murder of old Mr. and Mrs. McVey, last winter; Edwin H. Costley, at Frederick, Md., for the murder of his cousin, Solomon Costley, in April last, and Jacob Lenels at Little Rock, Ark.

Senator Bruce, of Mississippi, was recently married in Cleveland, Ohio, and will travel in Europe with his bride.... Ex-Gov. Brown, before leaving Washington, responded to the letter of Secretary Sherman returning the drafts forwarded to the department in payment of his (Brown's) share of the Louisiana Commission expenses, again inclosing the draft, saying he feels constrained to do so from a sense of duty to himself and the parties liable for the amount expended.

Gen. Ord, in an interview with a Chicago Times reporter the other day, furnished some interesting information concerning the situation on the Mexican border. The General says no effort is made by the Mexican authorities to prevent raids into Texas. The raiders cross the Rio Grande and return with their plunder openly. In some instances they build rafts for the transfer of stolen property, without the slightest attempt at concealment, in the presence of the Mexican troops. Gen. Ord thinks that unless energetic measures are taken by Federal authority, the great commonwealth of Texas will be compelled to provide for the defense of her own citizens, and he thinks it will be bad for the Mexicans when Texas undertakes that task.

The American members of the silver congress have been summoned to Washington to receive their instructions. It is understood that the congress will meet in Paris on the 25th of July.

FOREIGN.

In Prussia the agitation continues about the measures the Government favors for repression of Socialism, and the newspapers are continually reporting the arrests and the interruption of meetings.

Schouvaloff is greatly blamed at St. Petersburg among the people for conceding the Anglo-Austrian combination in the Berlin congress the arrangement by which Turkey is to be permitted to garrison the Balkan passes. A counter condition is said to have been demanded by Russia, which involves the establishment of autonomy in Roumelia and the entire withdrawal of Turkish troops from the interior.... Isabella, the ex-Queen of Spain, gave a dinner to the Shah in Paris, at which M. Paul de Cassagnac was presented to his Persian Majesty.... William Vaughan, who murdered an old lady under circumstances of the most revolting character, was hanged recently at St. John's, N. B.

Cable dispatches fully confirm the reports as to the settlement of the Bulgarian question in the congress, by Russia's agreement to the separation of Roumelia from Bulgaria, the Balkans being the dividing line. The London Times considers this settlement nothing less than an abandonment of the policy which Russia has persisted in for 100 years.

A Berlin correspondent hears from trustworthy sources that a military compromise between Russia and Turkey is imminent. The Russians will concentrate around Adrianople. The Turks will evacuate Shumla and retire to Varna and there embark for Roumelia.

A dispatch from Berlin reports that the congress has decided that the Russians shall withdraw from Roumelia in six and from Bulgaria in nine months. After their withdrawal mixed European troops will temporarily occupy the province. Russia has ordered Montenegro and Servia to arrange a compromise with Austria relative to their claims.

A Berlin dispatch says the Englishman, Bishop, charged with bribing officials to obtain the plans of the fortresses in Germany, has been convicted and sentenced to two years and a half imprisonment.... The young Queen of Spain, Mercedes, is dead. She was greatly beloved, and will be deeply mourned.... Earthworks are being constructed at the northern outlets of the Carpathian passes, and the mountain roads are being made practicable for artillery on both sides of the frontier.

The practical results thus far accomplished by the European congress are three in number: (1) The Turks will be confined to Roumelia, which is left substantially as before, with the Balkans instead of the Danube as their exterior line of defense. The Turkish fortresses on the Danube and in Bulgaria are to be dismantled, but they will be allowed to fortify and garrison the Balkan passes. The exact limits of the new principality of Bulgaria are to be determined by a European commission. (2) Bosnia and Herzegovina are to be immediately occupied by Austrian troops, Servia and Montenegro to find their compensation on the south, so as not to interfere with Austria. (3) The Roumanian cause is abandoned by all the powers, and she will have to submit to the Russian demand, which involves the retrocession of Bessarabia in exchange for the Dobrudscha.

A Romance of a Poor Young Girl.

Cincinnati has a pretty romance of a poor young girl. The heroine was an intelligent but unpretending girl, who was forced by circumstances to work for a living. She sewed in a store at a salary so meager, and with work so laborious, that she gladly accepted a position as waiter-girl in a popular boarding house. She had previously been offered a position as governess, but preferred the other. The only advantage the boarding house afforded over the store was that of family sympathy. Among the boarders was one probably as poor as herself. He was advertising solicitor for a city paper, with a very moderate income. Believing themselves poor, but yet able to keep the wolf from their door, an attachment sprung up, which developed into an engagement. The course of love did not run smoothly. There were doubts of faithfulness, and consequent quarrels, until, a few days ago, the young lady learned that she had fallen heir to an estate in Germany worth $100,000. Her heart was true to him. They were married right away.

Roman Newspapers.

The newspapers of Rome are more numerous than we thought when alluding to them in a former letter. There are over twenty daily papers now published here, representing every shade of opinion, and have perfect freedom. Twenty years ago there was but one paper, published three times a week, which contained nothing but official bulletins and church notices. At an early hour in the morning the Roman citizen can be seen everywhere sitting at his door reading his paper, and the newsboys are shouting, only as an Italian boy can shout, the inducements to purchase. I notice a pictorial paper with a cartoon representing Bismarck sitting in a chair rocking a cradle with either hand, with squalling babies in them, one representing England and the other Russia.—Cor. Baltimore American.

The Coffee We Drink.

During the twenty years ending June 30, 1876, the United States imported over 2,200,000 tons of coffee, less than 100,000 tons of which were re-exported. During the year ending June 30, 1877, we imported 320,000,000 pounds of coffee, three-fourths of which came from Brazil. For the twenty years mentioned our consumption of coffee averaged 200,000,000 pounds a year. During the last five years of the period it was 300,000,000 pounds. Latterly the relative amount brought from Brazil has declined, owing to the greater increase in the amount imported from other countries. Last year our coffee account with Brazil exceeded the sum of our exports thither by more than $28,000,000.

THE LOUISIANA COMMISSION.

Ex-Gov. Brown Offers to Pay His Part of the Expenses.

The following correspondence explains itself:

Washington, June [illegible]

To the Hon. John Sherman, Secretary of the Treasury:

Sir—At a late hour to-day my attention was called to the discussion yesterday in the Senate of the proposition to pay the expenses of the Commissioners sent to Louisiana by the President in the spring of 1877. When I accepted a place on that commission I believed, as I now do, that the President had undoubted authority to constitute it, as well as to order the payment of its expenses, which was done by an officer detailed from your department charged with that duty. Since, however, the Senate, by a majority vote tabling the proposition referred to, has questioned the legality of these disbursements, I cannot consent that either yourself or the banker who furnished the funds should be chargeable with such portion of the amount as was expended on my account. I therefore inclose a sight draft on New York for $827.68, which embraces the two items of traveling expenses for myself and one-fifth of the general amount. If you will have the interest account made up, I will most cheerfully remit that also, as well as any additional amount that may appear proper for me to account for. I am, sir, most respectfully, your obedient servant, John C. Brown.

Treasury Department, June 20.

To the Hon. John C. Brown:

Dear Sir—Your letter of the 18th inst., inclosing check, payable to my order, for $827.68, being one-fifth part of the money expended for the expenses of the commission sent to Louisiana by the President in the spring of 1877, is received. I am desired by the President to return this draft to you uncollected, as he is of opinion that Congress will yet make provision for this expenditure, and, at all events, that you ought not to pay any part of it. As you know, the President was called upon in April, 1877, in the exercise of a high constitutional duty, and in an emergency when two rival State Governments were arrayed against each other in open, armed hostility, threatening at any moment the public peace, to send to Louisiana a commission of five distinguished citizens, of whom you were one, under written instructions not only to aid him by reliable information, but to prevent, by their presence and influence actual collision and civil war. This duty you and the other members of the commission voluntarily assumed and faithfully performed. In the absence of an appropriation of public money available for the expenses of the commission the then Assistant Secretary of the Treasury invited from the First National Bank of New York a loan of the sum needed, and it was cheerfully granted, and the money was expended under your direction. It was not doubted but that Congress would, as in innumerable similar cases of the exercise of legal power by an executive officer, reimburse the money thus expended for an object unforeseen when Congress was in session. In this case I have assurances from Senators that the money would probably have been appropriated but that the amendment proposed was at so late a period in the session as to delay and endanger the passage of one of the leading appropriation bills. I cannot doubt that Congress at its next session, when this subject will be again presented, will make the necessary appropriation; but, if it does not, the President will feel it his duty to contribute from his own means this important expenditure for the public service without permitting you to reimburse any portion of it. Very respectfully, John Sherman, Secretary.

Fierce Fight With a Bear.

Several young men of this town went out hunting on horseback, and when near William Nelson's farm they suddenly came upon two large bears. They fired upon them and succeeded in killing one, but the other ran for the timber and passed out of sight, notwithstanding that one of the boys, Johnny Northover, put four charges of buckshot into him at short range. As the bear seemed likely to escape, Adam Benson said he would ride around the thicket, which was a short distance, and head him off. He accordingly started off alone and reached the other side of the wood before the bear. He dismounted and tied his horse to a tree, and had waited but a few moments when the infuriated beast broke from the timber and rushed for him. He fired two shots, but the bear was upon him. The beast rose upon his hind legs as Adam struck at him with his rifle, and knocked the weapon from his hands. Then with a stroke of his paw he felled Adam to the earth, knocking him between two logs, and commenced to bite and claw him. Adam held the beast from his throat by grasping him by the shaggy hair on each side of his head. He is a powerful young man, but he felt his strength beginning to fail, and he knew that his only hope was in the knife that he carried in his belt. He let go of the bear with his right hand and reached for the knife, but found it was gone. Thrusting the empty sheath into the bear's mouth, he gave himself up for lost. The bear was mangling the muscle of his arm in a terrible manner and would soon have killed him had not Jack Barnes' dog Rover come upon them. The dog attacked the bear fiercely and compelled him to leave Adam, who managed to crawl upon his horse and ride back to where the rest of the party had stopped to skin the other bear. When he reached them he was too weak to tell them what had happened. His friends carried him home, and on the way he managed to tell them that he was not anxious to box with a bear soon again. The hunters went to look for the bear, but found that it had escaped. As Benson's injuries are all flesh wounds it is thought he will soon recover, but he may lose the use of one arm.—Tacoma (W. T.) Herald.

NATURE'S WONDERLAND.

How Old Curiosities in the National Park Are Suffering from the Depredations of Tourists and Ruthless Hunting Parties.

Gen. Brisbin, of the Second United States Cavalry, commanding at Fort Ellis, Montana, has addressed a letter to Gen. Alfred Terry, complaining of the vandalism practiced by tourists and hunters in the National Park on the Yellowstone. The military authorities have, during the past two or three years, repeatedly called the attention of the Government to the destruction of the curious things which abound in that region, but no effort has been made to put a stop to these depredations.

Gen. Brisbin says that every year a great deal of damage is done, and, unless some measures are speedily taken to put a stop to the destruction, the park will not long be worth preserving. Nowhere on the earth are such wonders, and such quantities of game, to be found, and it will be a great shame if the national authorities permit them to be destroyed.
